Army Helped.

A woman in Sunderland, Eng., with five sons in the army, lay dying. Her one desire was to see her boys again, and through the offices of a Salvation Army officer four of the sons serving in England reached home within 24 hours, their expenses being paid by the authorities. The fifth son, however was at the front, and there seemed little chance of the old woman's wish being fulfilled, but the Salvationist wired to the War Office, and back came the reply over Lord Kitchener's signature saying that if the son could be found he would be sent home. Afterward came a telegram saying the man was on his way home, and eventually he lanled in time to see his mother. The authorities paid his expenses and gave him seven days' furlough.—Albany Argus.

State Constabulary.

A bill designed to provide a state constabulary for New York similar to that in Pennsylvania is being prepared for early introduction in the legislature, Governor Whitman said yesterday. Tentative drafts of a bill which follow in general a plan suggested by Seth Low of New York, are under consideration. The Governor intimated that he thought such a measure would have a good chance of passage. The Low plan would provide mounted peace officers to patrol the entire state, except cities of the first class. A reserve for emergency also would be provided.—Utica Dispatch.

Penrose Election Cost $1,000,000.

Washington, Jan. 8.—Charges that $1,000,000 was spent by the republicans of Pennsylvania to elect Boies Penrose to the Senate and that Mr. Penrose violated the Corrupt Practices act of Congress were made by Representative A. Mitchell Palmer, Democratic candidate for the Senate, who appeared today before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections. Local and State Republicans committee have already admitted spending a total of $750,000, Mr. Palmer asserted. He said Mr. Penrose, in a filed statement, gave his expense account as less than $10,000, the limit fixed by the act of Congress. Instead, a hundred times that amount was spent and should have been accounted for by Mr. Penrose, in the opinion of Mr. Palmer.

New Army Aeroplane Record.

Washington, D. C. Jan. 8.—Making a new American record for passenger carrying aeroplanes was reported to the War Department yesterday by the army aviator school at San Diego, Cal. The message announced that Lieutenant Carburry, with Lieutenant Christie as a passenger, flew to an altitude of 11,690 feet in one of the new tractor military machines.

SEEKING OPPORTUNITY

A Chicago man, leader in the commercial life of that city, is quoted as saying: "Among the men I hire, nine out of ten are better workers at 45 years of age than are the men of 25 or 30." This man firmly believes that the man of 45 or thereabouts is at the prime of life, physically and mentally. He also holds that men of mature years are more reliable and less apt to become restless after a year or two in a position and to seek new fields. The average young man, h says, is seeking a "soft snap," and is not the sort of employe who will stick by his employer through thick and thin until his services become highly valuable and, in many cases, indispensable. We often hear young men complain of their inability to get settled. That is largely because they do not settle, do not seek to adjust themselves to their work and make the most of their opportunity. Opportunity seldom knocks at our doors. We must knock at the door of opportunity and be prepared to push the door a little if necessary.

The Vatican's Work for Peace

Diplomatists the world over now have their eyes upon Rome. The one hope they see for a movement toward peace that has any chance of success at this time or in the near future rests with the Pope. Great Britain's action in sending Sir Henry Howard as special envoy to the Vatican is construed as deeply significant, for reasons that are set forth in a special cable despatch from Rome published in today's Herald.

The Vatican's desire for a peace that will be a real peace has been made clear. In Catholic Austria-Hungary and in the Catholic countries of the German Empire the influence of the Church is unquestionably great and the time may not be far distant when this influence can be exerted with telling effect. Driven out of Servia, her armies defeated time and again by the onrushing Russians now overflowing the plains of Hungary, it is possible that Austria-Hungary may soon be a willing listener to suggestions of peace, especially from the Vatican. In this way, and probably only in this way, may be averted the dismemberment that otherwise is in store for Austria-Hungary as penalty for joining Germany in its mad struggle for world domination.—New York Herald.

May Save Trouble

Colonel Goethals announces that while he can guarantee to keep the Panama Canal open for merchant ships of ordinary size, despite the continued and progressives slides at Gold Hill, he can not guarantee to keep the channel open sufficiently to permit the safe passage of dreadnought battleships for some time.

No doubt the canal diggers could, if called upon, open a speedy passage for all of Uncle Sam's warships, if a big force were employed and the work done regardless of cost.

The constriction of the passage from the slides may save the United States trouble before the war is over. Uncle Sam now has a valid excuse for telling all the warring powers to keep their big war fleets out of his canal. As the warning is general, no one can complain against any infringment of neutrality.—Binghamton Rep.-Herald.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS.

It is a fine thing to be an American citizen, if you are a man, and know that wherever you go the flag of your country will follow and protect you. But with a woman it is not so.

The Constitution of the United States expressly forbids a state to pass a law which would "abridge the privileges of citizens." Women are citizens, yet Congress in 1907 passed a law taking away a woman's citizenship, if she married a foreigner.

The other day a bill was introduced into the House of Representatives which provided that such a woman could resume her citizenship in this country at the end of her marriage with a non-citizen. It was pointed out that an American woman by her marriage with an unnaturalized resident loses her right to vote in the twelve woman suffrage states; that, if her husband dies, she travels at her own risk. America will not own her and surely the flag of the country her husband deserted will be slow to enfold her in its protection.

The bill was lost and again it was shown how hopeless is the plea for justice when made by disfranchised persons to officials holding their office by virtue of votes cast.

Dr. Lyman Abbott has long been a shining light in anti-suffrage circles. He has opposed giving the vote to women because he believed it unnecessary. He has maintained that women could form the minds of their children and thus impress their convictions on the world.

The appearance of Lawrence Abbott, his son, on the platform of the 5th av. suffrage shop of the Women's Political Union proves that his theory is wrong. If he, learned and pious gentleman that he is, has failed to form the mind of his own son in accord with what he believes the highest good of the race, and failed so utterly that his son publicly repudiates his father's teachings, how can he expect the average woman to form the mind of her son so that he will warily avoid all the pitfalls that politics permits in his path?

"The good women of this city may talk and talk," said the Rev. Percy Stickney Grant, rector of the Church of the Ascension, at the 1st av. shop, "they can't get women probation officers or anything else without the vote.

"Go to the night court and see a woman prisoner, a young girl, arrested by a man, brought in by a man, tried by a man—and say, if you can, that there is no need of women probation officers. And yet women probation officers are being taken away. Their number was reduced but a short time ago."

"No people can thrive, if side by side and working with them are ten million people who are disfranchised from all voice in the government," said former Attorney General Wickersham at a recent dinner of the Southern Society.

He was not making a woman suffrage speech and is, in fact, opposed to woman suffrage. The obvious conclusion drawn by Alice Duer Miller in New York Tribune is that he does not think women are people.

SUNDAY AIMS SHOTS AT CLERGY

Attempts to Rouse Philadelphia; Hurls Verbal Bombs at Crowded Meetings

Philadelphia, Jan. 7.—"Billy" Sunday scored two more home runs today in his spectacular game against Philadelphia's smug, self-satisfied church folk, and he did some tremendous "stick work" with his bat against the devil and all Beelzebub's works.

He addressed afternoon and evening crowds that taxed the tabernacle's capacity, despite a cold rain and sleet, that had made walking treacherous early in the day. Like his audiences of yesterday those of today were composed almost exclusively of substantial Philadelphians of the regular church-gong sort, while nearly one hundred clergymen occupied the section on the rostrum set aside for the ministry at the afternoon service.

Into the ranks of churchgoers and their spiritual shepherds alike Mr. Sunday poured the hot shot of his eloquence, lashing their lethargy at times as with whips of scorpions. He has become very hoarse, as a result, he announced, of posing out of doors for the newspaper photographers. But his voice seemed to carry over his vast audience like a bugle. His rapid fire, stacco delivery, however, is more suggestive of a machine gun in action than of any musical instrument.

Those clergymen and churches that have not co-operated in the revival campaign "got theirs" when the evangelist sped his steam roller at the afternoon services and linked a plea for a new Pentecost with some intimate and cutting criticisms of religious apathy and church factionalism in this city.

In the midst of his sermon, which was a sore trial to his voice because of his bad cold, Mr. Sunday turned furiously to the clergymen's section. "You didn't stick by Torrey and Alexander when they were here," he cried, "or God would have shaken this old town as a dog shakes a rat. I have a right to demand that ministers stand by me. Stick to the work and the Word of God or get out of the ministry.

"Oh, yes, I know you're here. But many of you are listening through your prejudice rather than your hearts." Here are some of Sunday's Sundaygrams:

"We need one accord in the churches more than high priced opera singers stuck up in the choir loft to sing chromatic scales like a squirrel climbs a tree."

"There is too much playing hide-and-seek and tag with the Devil in the churches. If the church of Jesus Christ withdrew her patronage from the theatres of this country, they'd go out of business."

"The preacher who murders the King's English four times to every sentence and has the Holy Ghost will get the revival."

"Lots of you women have not religion enough to go home and take that pack of cards, take that beer out of your cellar and dump it in the sewer, or take that dish you won at the card party and bust it."

"If there is a woman I pity it is the society woman, who lives for a few empty headed, beer soaked grasswidowers and jilted jays with cracked reputations."

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR

Are you acquainted with the family of birds known as Martins? There are some that came to this latitude every summer. In Syracuse at the canal offices, known as the "weight-lock" a bird house was erected for some and the number increased so from year to year that additional stories were required and the building on top of the post assumed quite an apartment house effect.

Here is a martin story. These birds selected a barn in southern Pennsylvania in which to build their home. Their nests droop and are entered by what you would call a door.

But before they set up housekeeping a sparrow moved in and the poor martins could not get him out. So what did they do but plaster a fresh coat of mud all over the doorway and made the sparrow a prisoner. Yes, they did it so quickly that he didn't have a chance to realize that his stubborness was going to make him serious trouble.

It did just as stubbornness makes trouble for boys and girls—and older folks too.

Today we print the third of the series of stories about some prominent American. If you wish to guess I want you to look up the coupon printed Monday and write your guess upon it. Another will be printed next Monday.

OUTRAN THE JACK-RABBIT.

When the Union forces were routed in the first battle of Bull Run, there were many civilians present, who had gone out from Washington to witness the battle. Among the number were several congressmen. One of these was a tall, long-legged fellow, who wore a long-tailed coat and a high plug hat. When the retreat began, this congressman was in the lead of the entire crowd fleeing toward Washington. He outran all the rest, and was the first man to arrive in the city. No person ever made such good use of long legs as this congressman. His immense stride carried him yards at every bound. He went over ditches and gullies at a single leap, and cleared a six-foot fence with a foot to spare. As he went over the fence his plug hat blew off, but he did not pause. With his long coat-tails flying in the wind, he continued straight ahead for Washington.

Many of those behind him were scared almost to death, but the flying congressman was such a comical figure that they had to laugh in spite of their terror.

"I never knew but one fellow who could run like that, and he was a young man out in Illinois. He had been sparking a girl, much against the wishes of her father. In fact, the old man took such a dislike to him that he threatened to shoot him if he ever caught him around his premises again.

"One evening the young man learn-that the girl's father had gone to the city, and he ventured out to the house. He was sitting in the parlor, with his arm around Betsy's waist, when he suddenly spied the old man coming around the corner of the house with a shotgun. Leaping through a window into the garden, he started down a path at the top of his speed. He was a long-legged fellow, and could run like greased lightning. Just then a jack-rabbit jumped up in the path in front of him. In about two leaps he overtook the rabbit. Giving it a kick that sent it high in the air, he exclaimed: 'Git out of the road, gosh dern you, and let somebody run that knows how.'

"I reckon, that the long-legged congressman, when he saw the rebel muskets, must have felt a good deal like that young fellow did when he saw the old man's shot-gun."

MOTION FOR NON-SUIT DENIED.

Spirited Argument in The Guiery Case —Settlement Reached in Schultz Case.

A spirited argument took place in Supreme Court this morning when the case of Edward J. Guiery of Phoenix vs. the Salmon River Power Co. an action to recover for injuries, was called. Attorney Michell of Gannon, Spencer & Michell, a Syracuse firm, representing the power Co. made a motion for a non-suit, which was hotly contested by Attorney O. M. Reilly, representing the plaintiff. After listening to both sides Justice Crouch denied the motion and the case was continued.

Guiery, it is claimed, was working for the powder company, installing cross arms on telegraph poles. He claims that he was called upon to dip a cross arm in a tank of some chemical fluid used for the preservation of wood, that an explosion occurred and he was badly burned.

Yesterday afternoon Justice Crouch signed an order permitting the settlement of the case of Richard F. Schultz, by his guardian, Albert Schultz, against the D. M. Rosser Engineering Co. for $3,000 and $200 costs, also for disbursements of his attorney.

Stole Portions of Car Seats.

Someone with a taste for red plush upholstery broke into a Lackawanna passenger coach lying in Utica st, Oswego, sometime Tuesday night. Entrance was gained by breaking a window and a door was also smashed. There was very little of value to be stolen in a car of this kind but the thief or thieves ripped the red plush upholstery off several of the seats and got away with it.

Dry in Eastern End.

Pulaski Jan. 8.—As a result of the water famine among the farming community in the eastern end of Oswego county, many farmers are forced to draw water for the stock a considerable distance, a large number of wells and streams having gone dry some time ago. Conditions will improve, it is believed, as a result of the mild weather of yesterday.

FULTONIANS

Birthday Biographies. Jan. 8, 1915.

There are many men who dislike publicity, yet whose deeds no matter how quietly performed, are so conscientious, so thorough and efficient that they must be esteemed, by the people they serve.

Such a one is Daniel C. Case, who was born in Hannibal, Jan. 8, 1855, a Fultonian by education and residence and a Fultonian who has seen almost continuous public service. For years he was some village officer or other, clerk to president (1888-89) of Oswego Falls—now the western half of the city. At present he is serving the whole city on the board of education.

Mr. Case after studying at Fulton Academy and Cazenovia took up teaching until he made the purchase of the farm just at the city's western limits (adjoining Lake Neahtawanta) in 1877. He married, Elizabeth Cole, daughter of John Cole, a Granby farmer in 1875. The couple have three children living Mr. Case's father was Ransford Case, for years a blacksmith then a farmer. The father, like the son, was always an efficient man of affairs, justice of the peace and postmaster.

CHARITY.

We have the Red Cross, the White Cross and the Blue Cross, and now Anne Morgan is introducing the Black Cross. She says: "It is my firm belief that to lessen the burden of warring nations is a mistaken philanthropy, which only prolongs the devastating conflict, and the period of destitution. This may sound cruel, or perhaps illogical to you; but wait a moment."

I waited several moments, and finished what this worthy woman had to say; and then the words of Lincoln sounded —"With charity for all"; then the beautiful lines of Pope —"In faith and hope the world will disagree, but all mankind's concern is charity."

The Black Cross believes that "charity begins at home." To my mind, charity bears no relation to latitude or to longitude. Charity is the wireless we get when humans are in distress. Charity, real Christian charity, does not begin at any one point, nor does it end in any one place. It is a wonderful work, Miss Morgan, that you are doing; but when you say, "To me this great sympathetic outpouring for the sufferers abroad is quite akin to robbing Peter to pay Paul," you are failing in the true interpretation of the word "charity."

Charity is a central fire station. We need the hook and ladder here, but God only knows they need the big equipment over there.

Last month I said, "Sometimes it takes the burning embers of universal hell to bring men back to common sense."

It will take more than the charity of Europe to help those poor humans that are being sacrificed, starved, in the name of the Cross.—Silent Partner.

The Movies.

Motion pictures, or the "moives" as they are popularly called, are a development of the twentieth century. We can all remember when they were unknown; then a considerabel period when they were exhibited in the vaudeville houses, always at the end of the program—the good-night act; then the time, scarcely more than a decade ago, when little theaters began to crop out devoted exclusively to motion pictures, and charging an admission fee of only five or ten cents. At the present time it is almost safe to say that there isn't a town of over 5,000 inhabitants in the country without its motion picture theater, and in many sections the films are exhibited at least once a week in towns as small as 1,000. Various calculations have been made to determine the number of people who daily attend the movies in the United States, the figures ranging from an inside estimate of 4,000,000 to an outside figure of 10,000,000. Even the smaller estimate is sufficiently impressive, but probably, in prosperous times at least, the higher is more nearly correct. Ten per cent. of our population, then, are patrons of the motion pictures.—Walter P. Eaton, in the January Atlantic.

Public Service in Olean.

It is somewhat rare to find any business house delivering more goods than its contract calls for, and when a corporation engaged in the supply of a public service does so it would seem as though the public at least ought to show itself appreciative. According to the Olean, N. Y. Times, residents of that city have been noticing that some of the street lamps were brighter than others. The lighting company, however, offered no explanation of the very evident inequality in the lightifig, and it was not until Frederick B. Hofft, the Manager, was questioned by a Times reporter that it was learned that when the changes now under way are complete the brilliancy of the street lights will be increased one-third, or 20 candle power to the light without any increased cost to the city.

The company's contract with the city calls for 60 candle power lamps on ornamental poles and the lamps which have been in use have complied with this requirement. The company is now replacing these lamps as fast as they burn out (the average life of this type is only 800 to 1,000 hours) by one of the new 80 candle power lamps, more brilliant but much whiter than the lamp which it replaces.

Since the contract was made with the city there have been marked improvements in incandescent lamps. The substitution of the nitrogen-filled bulb for the vacuum bulb has given the lights an increased efficiency which consumes no more current than the old-style lamps of lower candle power. Of course, it would have been possible for the company to have substituted the new style lamps of the same candle power as the old. If they had done so they would have fulfilled their contract and effected a material saving from which the company would have benefited. The company, however, by substituting the lights of higher candle power, gives the benefit to the city.—Municipal Ownership.

THE MERCY BAND

THE MERCY BAND.

Mayor Fox is in receipt of an appeal from a committee headed by Norman Hapgood for the formation of a Mercy Band in Fulton. The object of the Mercy Band would be to aid the sufferers of the warring countries.

While our hearts go out to the sufferers let us be guided by common sense rather than by sentiment. In the first place we need to dispense at once a little more mercy within the boundary of our own city. The welfare work of our city is dying out for lack of funds. The raising of the Belgian relief fund in Fulton temporarily took the "wind from the sails" of the city's welfare work. Little children, helpless old folks and unfortunates of all ages do suffer some here as in Belgium.

Were Norman Hapgood to employ the skilled messages of his pen in arousing a sentiment against our country's furnishing ammunition to carry on the bloody warfare there would be far more common sense in the movement than in his present motive.

Perhaps the great heads of our country have decreed that the shipping of guns and ammunition to the warring countries that they may prolong to their finish their big war, is a perfectly legitimate business and but the duty of a prosperous Christian county. However, let us be consistent and not send in the wake of our gunpowder, jellies and warm mittens. If our neighbors across the river get into a gary quarrel let us refrain from dispatching implements for their finish with bon bons following after.

We need a warfare on promiscuous benevolence right here at home. Many of our organizations have charitable departments but the truly needy receive aid so spasmodically as not to benefit, while the "charity sponger" gets aid undeserved.

There should be one head to all charity work in this or any city. The Chamber of Commerce, the Woman's Civic League, Woman's Auxiliary and all other organizations aiding in charity work should be grouped in this particular branch under one head.

The logical head for this department is Ensign Fitzgerald of the Salvation Army. Undoubtedly the Ensign has the greatest working knowledge of charity in Fulton than any other one person. He is on the job constantly. It isn't the occasional basket of groceries left with the needy ones that counts. It's helping "father" to find a job; its prodding the lazy man and the indifferent mother that counts. It's constant toil that spells success in this work. The Ensign is ever busy, ever ready—an intelligent sympathetic worker, who sees beyond the dollar his reward.

A Fulton Band of Mercy headed by Ensign Fitzgerald would be a capital plan.

The Misery That Is New York's

The imagination thrills to the horrors of misery, destitution and starvation in Belgium. It is just as horrible to be homeless and starving in raw, rainy New York, and there is no glow of romance in the lot of the unemployed who haunt the parks and lodging houses, beg the grocer for a day's credit or seek the charity of the bread lines. Figures compiled for the Public Forum of the Church of the Ascension show that there are more than 500,000 unemployed in New York today. In volume of misery, in empty stomachs and breaking hearts the situation cannot be measured. Statistics are wholly inadequate. To say that the Charity Organization Society is under a demand 100 per cent greater than that of 1908, its heaviest year heretofore; that it is caring for 4,300 families, numbering more than 21,000 persons, and could care for twice as many if it had the funds, falls as far short of conveying any idea of the reality as the funds fall short of the need.

That need is increasing daily. Little sayings are being swept away. Women and children are actually starving to death in the richest city of this great land of abundance, and men, their hearts broken by the hopelessness of the struggle are committing suicide. Officials are investigating and committees are debating ways and means of attacking the unemployment problem. That is fine, but what is needed now is money to buy food and shelter and clothing and medical attendance for those who are about to go under.

The Charity Organization Society, with its long and honorable record, is making a special appeal for funds. It is well equipped to administer them, and it and its kindred charitable organizations have been designated by the Mayor's Committee on Unemployment as the chosen agencies for relief work. Nothing but a generous and continuous flow of contributions will meet the need that exists. Great, good-hearted New York should rise to this emergency and give, give, give!—New York Tribune.

COVERT CLOTH.

Suits of This Popular Fabric to Be Worn in the Spring.

SMART WALKING SUIT.

One notes with interest the revival in popularity of covert cloth. It is a fabric that is satisfactory in appearance and wearing qualities. Many spring models shown by manufacturers are carried out in this material. Illustrated here is a street gown of covert with an oddly designed coat. The pointed fronts, high belt which buttons to the coat in the front confines the fullness at the sides. There is a plain, straight collar which rolls up around the throat. The diagonal straps are really patch pockets. The gored skirt has the fashionable flare and is in accordance with fashion's preference for fuller skirts on spring gowns.

This party's nephew—or one of them—related a story in connection with this man's first love, and his subsequent marriage to Miss——. This nephew was a plain, every-day farmer, and thought everything of his uncle, whose greatness he quite thoroughly appreciated.

Said he one day, in telling his story:

"Us child'en, w'en we heerd uncle wuz a-goin' to be married, axed Gran'ma ef uncle never hed hed a gal afore, an' she says, sez she, 'Well, he wuz never a han' nohow to run 'round visitin' much, or go with the gals, neither, but he did fall in love with a gal, who lived out near Srpingfield, an' after she died he'd come home an' ev'ry time he'd talk 'bout her, he cried dreadfully. He never could talk of her nohow 'thout he'd jes' cry an' cry, like a young feller.'

"Onct he tol' Gran'ma they wuz goin' ter he hitched, they havin' promised each other, an' thet is all we ever heered 'bout it. But, so it wuz, that arter he hed got over his mournin', he wuz married ter a woman w'ich hed lived down in Kentuck.

"Uncle hisself tol' us he wuz married the nex' time he come up ter our place, an' w'en we ast him why he didn't bring his wife up to see us, he said: 'She's very busy and can't come.'

"But we knowed better'n that. He wuz too proud to bring her up, 'cause nothin' would suit her, nohow. She wuzn't raised the way we wuz, an' wuz different from us, and we heerd, tu, she wuz as proud as cud be.

"No, an' he never brought none uv the child'en, neither.

"But, then uncle, he wuzn't to blame. We never thought we wuz stuck up."

STATE'S POTATO-GROWERS WILL EXHIBIT AT CORNELL

Ithaca, Jan. 27.—The authorities of the state college of agriculture are sending out a circular letter to all those who are known to be interested in potato growing, asking them to participate in the coming potato show to be held in connection with farmers' week at Ithaca, February 8th to 12th.

The invitation has been extended particularly to the members of the New York state potato association, to those who have exhibited at previous shows, and to other potato growers with whom the college authorities came in direct contact during a recent survey of the industry in the state. All potato growers are cordially invited to exhibit and attend the show.

Selected samples should be sent prepaid, to Ithaca, at any time up to February 5th. Five tubers of each variety constitute a sample, and prospective exhibitors are warned that the potatoes should be well wrapped in paper so that they will not be frozen in transit. Each sample should include name and address of exhibitor and the variety and class in which the sample is entered. The samples will become the property of the agricultural college after the premiums are awarded. No entrance fee is required.

The New York state vegetable grower's association also announces its annual meeting in connection with farmers' week. The sessions of the association will be held from February 9th to 12th, inclusive.

Woman's World

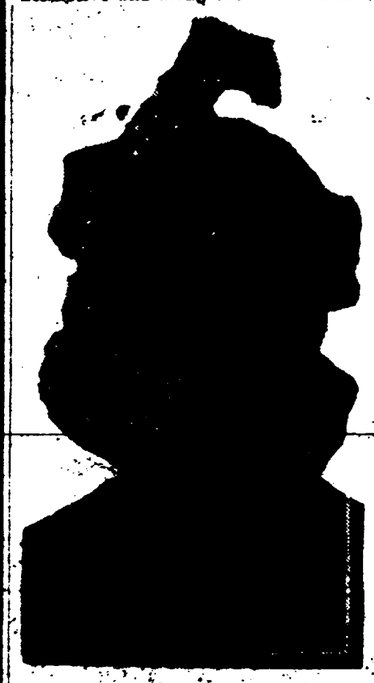
MRS. WILLIAM G. SHARP.



As wife of the American representative in France Mrs. Myron T. Herrick, endeared herself to the French by her kindness to the wounded and the needy. Her husband has been succeeded as ambassador by Mr. William Graves Sharp of Ohio, whose wife, so far as the Parisians are concerned, is an unknown quantity.

However, Mrs. Sharp is well known in Washington, where her husband spent a number of years as a member of congress. She is a charming and cultured woman, a member of many of the leading women's clubs in her home town of Elyria, O., progressive in her ideas and with a decided interest in art and science.

Mrs. Sharp was before her marriage Miss Hallie Clough. She is descended from a brother of Nathan Hale and is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution. As an artist she won praise before she married. Her family has engrossed her time to the exclusion of art since then. She is the mother of five children, all of them of the school age. She has put these into good schools to continue their studies while she is abroad. Her eldest daughter, who is in Oberlin college, has talent as a musician.

Regrets For Afternoon Tea.

If unable to accept an invitation for afternoon tea your visiting card, mailed to arrive on the day of the tea or sent by a messenger or some friend who attends, is all the regrets required for an afternoon tea. If the hostess happens to be a very dear friend who would be expecting you, you could send a personal note explaining why you could not be present, and you could tell her how sorry you were to miss the tea.

COURT ENDS THIS WEEK.

Waters-Cunningham Action on Trial Today.

Oswego, Jan. 27.—The January term of Supreme Court will end the present week. It was feared for a time that the end would come today but a recess it was finally found possible to continue.

The case of Nellie Waters vs. Anna Frazier Cunningham, as executrix of Richard Frazier, deceased, was called for trial this morning. A jury was secured and the case had started when Attorney O. M. Reilly, for the plaintiff, asked that the case be put over as a material witness was ill and could not appear. Justice Crouch said that the case would be tried if possible and said that he would wait until 2 o'clock for the witness.

The Waters-Cunningham case was continued this afternoon and will probably be closed tomorrow. It is not probable that any other cases will be tried at the present term. The action is to recover for alleged breach of contract, the plaintiff claiming that she was promised recompense for caring for Mr. Frazier.

Judge C. N. Bulger represents the defendant in this action.

The case of Elias Van Schoick vs. Augustus Van Auken, an action to recover for the care of Mrs. Van Auken, mother of plaintiff and wife of defendant, was submitted to the jury this morning.

The jury in the Van Auken case this afternoon brought in a verdict of $400 for the plaintiff.

Maywood, N. J.—John Sceskie, of Ord, Neb., came here and met his brother, Martin, whom he had not seen in 46 years. Both are over 70.

FAMILY TROUBLES IN SUPREME COURT.

Son Wants Mother's Husband to Pay Large Sum.

An action to recover $1,461.03, alleged to have been expended in the care and maintenance of Mrs. Rose Van Auken of this city, has been brought by her son, Elias W. Van Schoick, against Augustus Van Auken, husband of the plaintiff's mother. Mr. Van Auken denies that he refused to take care of his wife in her sickness and states that he offered her a home on his farm at Clay, Onondaga county, but she refused to live there. Subsequently, Mr. Van Auken published a notice in the Fulton papers that as his wife had left his bed and board he would not be responsible for any debts contracted by her.

The marriage with Mr. Van Auken's second and the affair has all the familiar aspects of a family difficult. Mrs. Van Auken is crippled and has to use crutches. Mr. Van Schoick is a son by her prior marriage.

The marriage took place in 1910 but Mr. and Mrs. Van Auken have not lived together since 1911. The care and medical services were rendered down to 1914.

R. J. Pendergast of Piper, Rice & Pendergast is attorney for the plaintiff and Ira L. Betts of Phoenix represents the defense.

The suit of Archie Manwarring vs. Wata Peterson of Minetto was submitted to the jury by Judge Bulger on behalf of the defense and by H. M. Stacy for the plaintiff this afternoon. The act on is a dispute as to the leasing of the Peterson Hotel at Minetto.

PETROGRAD SAYS KAISER'S FORCES WERE DECIMATED

Sunday's Fights Favorable to Russians; British Make Gains at Ypres, Resisting Terriffic Artillery Firing

By Francis Lavelle Murray

Petrograd, Feb. 10.—Important successes for the Russian troops in Galicia, Hungary, East Prussia and Northern Poland are claimed in an official report from the general staff issued here today. These may be summarized in this manner:

1. In Galicia the Russians have repulsed twenty-two separate attacks made by the Austro-German forces at Koziowa, about 65 miles southwest fof Lemberg. The Germans suffered heavy losses, their dead littering the slopes of the heights at Koziowa, which they captured but lost again.

2. In Hungary the Russians forced their foes to retreat in the vicinity of Bartfeld and Svidnik. Fighting continues there. In the vicinity of Lupkow Pass in the Carparthians the Russians captured more than 5000 soldiers and eighteen machine guns.

3. In East Prussia, the Russians repulsed German attacks in the region of Lasdehnen, northeast of Inverberg and exterminated almost an entire battalion.

4. In Northern Poland, Russian cavalry concentrated in the region of Rypin has held in check an offensive movement by the Germans.

The general staff's report says that in the fighting west of Warsaw, which will go down in history as the battle of Borjimow, the Germans lost "tens of thousands of men." The lull in that region which followed the Russian victory continues.

Russian aviators have renewed their activity and have dropped bombs on German trenches, trains and soldiers causing heavy losses.

The report of the general staff follows in full:

"The Germans have been gradually concentrating in East Prussia. With their fresh troops they have been making reconnaisances in force and on Sunday they passed to the offensive with large forces in the sections of Gorzele and Johannisburg. The undertook active simultaneous operations on two wings, namely, in the region of Lasdehnen where in repulsing a German attack, we exterminated almost entirely one battalion and along the Rypin railroad where our cavalry has been concentrated in the direction of Sierpec.

"On the left of the Vistula the enemy's forces were inactive yesterday. They seemed to have lost in killed and wounded during the six day attack on our positions at Borjimow, Goumine and Wolaczye-Lowiczka, tens of thousands of men.

"In the Carpathians fighting continues. In the region of Bartfelt and Svidnik the enemy attempted active operations, but, being unable to stand the fierceness of the fight retreated, leving many prisoners. In the region of Lupkow Pass our offensive continues. Durin gthe day we captured 69 officers, 5200 soldiers and eighteen machine guns.

"The Germans, having crossed Tucholka Pass made on Sunday 22 violent attacks gainst the heights in the region of Koziowa, which had been occupied by us. The Germans attacked in mass formation severl ranks deep under our violent cross fire.

The enemy twice seized one of the heights, but was dislodged by our infantry. The losses suffered by the Germans here was excessive and without any precedent in history. The enemy's attack in the region of Wyszkow were also repelled.

"'Later, in order to attack the positions at Koziowa, the Germans began to concentrate again. During the night of Sunday they opened an irresistible offensive and this continued during the next morning. Their foremost ranks suffered heavy losses, but they could not be immediately checked, as the attacks by the succeeding ranks were supported by a very fierce fire from heavy artillery.

"After having succeeded in once capturing an important height in our position they were driven out by a bayonet charge, but their attacks followed without cessation.

"Towards evening the Germans, attacking in great strength captured our highest position and were only dislodged after a desperate fight when they had exhausted all their general attacks, which were accompanied by an unprecedented bayonet fighting. All the mountain slopes were littered with German dead. In front of one of our battalions more than a thousand dead bodies were counted.

"Among the trophies captured near Kamion, at the mouth of the Bzura were three searchlights. On the Rawka, near Skierniewice, our infantry threw eight bombs upon the German trenches and caused great destruction. Our aviators dropped bombs upon German trains near Rawa and Nowy-Dwor and also upon the German troops near Sochaczew."

MONTEREY BOMBARDED

Caddreyta, State of Neuvo Leon, Mex., via Loredo, Tex., Feb. 10.—Carranza troops commanded by Gonzales have attacked Monterey, the largest city in northern Mexico. Gen. Villorea's division assaulted and took several suburbs. The artillery bombardment was terrific and parts of the city are in ruins.

MEXICAN ARCHIVES REMOVED TO AMERICAN SOIL

Laredo, Tex. Feb. 10.—In anticipation of a Villa attack on Neuvo Leredo the customs archives in that town were removed to Laredo, Tex., today by order of Gen. Garranza. Collector Villareal obeyed Carranzas' order and then resigned.

TOM TINKER LYNCHED.

Mayfield, Ky., Feb. 10.—The community is quiet today following the lynching of Tom Tinker, a white man by a mob of fifty persons last night. Tinker, who was arrested for killing Constable Richard Tart, was hanged in the courthouse yard. The county authorities are investigating.

WEATHER FORECAST

American Steamers Aiding German Cruiser

London, Feb. 10.—The German cruiser Karlsruhe is now operating from a base on the northwest coast of Hayti near Mole St. Nicholas and is receiving supplies from American sources, according to information received by the British Ambassador today. Representations may be made to the United States which is said to be informally advised of the situation. Steamers from New York and New Orleans are reported to have been taking coal for the Karlsruhe for several weeks. Inquiries made of the Haitian government by the British minister resulted in gaining the information that the Karlsruhe might be near Mole St. Nicholas, but that nothing definite was known because of disturbed conditions in Hayti. While the Germans claim that the warship has sunk eleven British vessels, it is believed that the number of her victims is larger. The French cable lines between Port au Prince and Cape Haytien and between Mole St. Nicholas and Cape Haytien have been cut according to advices, and this is believed to have been done by the Karlsruhe.

It is known that a year ago the German Government in seeking a naval base in the Carribean Sea, negotiated with Hyti for a base at Mole St. Nicholas, which has one of the finest harbors in the world.

ANOTHER BRITISH LINER STEAMED UNDER THE FLAG

New York, Feb. 10—A second instance of the use of the American flag by British ships in fear of German submarines was brought out when the Cunard liner Orduna arrrived here from Liverpool. The liner left Liverpool on Jan. 31 and hoisted the American flag soon after she left her mooring. The American flag was kept up until the Orduna arrived at Queenstown, when the British flag was run up. News of the use of the American flag on the Orduna was given out by H. J. Strong of New York and Justin Ford of Lynn, Mass., who were passengers on board the vessel. Capt. Taylor of the Orduna would not dicuss anything connected with the war and declined to say whether or not the American flag was run up.

BAVARIAN PRINCE'S POSITION CALLS FOR REINFORCEMENTS

By BERNARD BELANCOURT.

Amsterdam. Feb. 10.—Crown Prince Ruprecht of Bavaria, is leading the Germans in their attempt to cut through the allies' lines at LaBasse, according to advices received from Sluis today. These declare that he has been compelled to cll for heavy reinforcements as a result of the losses suffered by his troops and that soldiers from the Duke of Wuerttenburg's armies and General Buelow have been sent to id him.

Private messages from Brussels assert, however, that the Germans now occupy positions along the railway line from LaBasse to Armentieres and that they regard thesituation as satisfactory.

The Germans are apparently planning another drive to Bethune, troops for that purpose being concentrated at Vendin and Wavrin.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Paris, Feb. 10.—A slight gain for the French troops in Lorainne is claimed in an official statement issued here this afternoon. It says that northeast of Manonne a French detachment drove back a German post.

The statement follows:

"The day of Feb. 9 was marked by some artillery combats which were of very great intensity at some points, particularly on the Aisne and the Champagne. Only one infantry action of slight importance is reported, this was in Lorainne to the northeast of Manonne where one of our detachments drove back the enemy's posts from Remamdois to Lemcery."

Madrid, Feb. 10.—Spain will join with the other neutral countries in disregarding Germany's notification of a war zone about Great Britain. In an officially inspired article El Liberal says today:

"Though the German admiralty has declared a blockade, it is a blockade on paper only, as Germany is quite incapable of maintaining even a cruiser blockade along the British coast line."

London, Feb. 10.—"The Russians estimate that the Germans lost 50,000 men in the battles that ended Sunday," says a dispatch received today from the Petrograd correspondent of the Star,

London, Feb. 10.—W. D. Boyce, the American publisher, who was a passenger on the Lusitania when the American flag was hoisted by Captain Dow of the Cunard Liner, has sent the following dispatch to Secretary of State Bryan at Washington: "I was on board the Lusitania. Every American passenger fully approved of the putting up of our flag. It protected our citizens, mail and merchandise as well as the English."

LONGEST SESSION ON RECORD; NO END APPEARS

Dignity of Upper House Disconcerted by Neglige Appearance of Senators and the Disorderly Surroundings

Washington, Feb. 10.—The U. S. Senate today established a record for long distance sessions and the talking marathon on the ship purchase bill still went on. At 10 o'clock the upper house had been in session without a break for 46 hours. The longest previous session, according to the oldest employes of the Eenate, who searched their memories and records, was 39 hours. When the end would come to the present session no one would predict. Administration leaders declared it might last for a week without interruption.

When the sun sent its rays down through the Senate skylights today, Senator Sherman of Illinois, was holding the floor. He started to speak at 1.25 o'clock and resorted to every device to pass the time, reading from newspapers and, as one of his colleagues put it, "everything he could find."

The Senator had only a small audience throughout his long speech, the excitement at the one attempt of roll call during the night having exhausted the interest of both parties alike. From the beginning of his speech, the members who had gathered first to vote on adjournment, then to meet the threatened Democratic attempt to rush through a vote on the first of the instructions o send he bill back o committee, dwindled steadily.

At one time Senator Lea, of Tennessee, who presided, and Senator Lee of Maryland, dozing at a desk, represented the entire visible strength of the Democrats. Senators Smoot of Utah and Smith of Michigan, constituted the Republican guard.

The Democrats changed their watchers from time to time, giving those who had served several hours a chance to retire to the committee rooms in which cots have been installed. Senators were stepping on their colleagues in half a dozen of committee rooms.

At 8 o'clock the Democratic guard consisted of Senator Shafroth, of Colorado, who appeared more interested in his newspaper. Senator Martine of New Jersey, strolled in and out. Pages were dispatched to order breakfast for various senators waiting in the cloakroom.

Trays of dishes from the restaurant were strewn about the cloakroom and pillows and window hangings which had been used to ease the slumbers of statesmen were displayed without reserve on the big red sofas in the corners of the Senate chambers. These were cleared away as the hour approached for the arrival of the expected senators.

Senator Dupont, of Delaware, civil war veteran and millinaire, arrived soon after dawn to support the Republican forces.

At 8.20 Senator McLean of Connecticut appeared, accompanied by Mrs. McLean, who took a seat in the front row of the gallery. At that hour the only spectators in the galleries, which were crowded up to midnight, were two men and a boy, ll half asleep. Members of the cabinet including Secretaries Bryan, Lane, Daniels and Garrison, Postmaster General Burleson and Secretary Tumulty and their wives were among the interested spectators during the night.

The 39 hour record for long sessions was mde by Senate in 1893 during the filibuster against the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman silver act.

Senator Sherman surrendered the floor at 9.10 o'clock, after making a speech of seven hours and forty-five minutes. He closed with a warning against "launching the ship of State on the unchartered sea of Socialism with its hidden dangers and its destination unknown."

Senator Townsend of Michigan, who arrived just a few minutes before Sherman finished, followed. He appeared fresh and vigorous and began in an even voice to explain the reasons for the Republican filibuster.

Senator Gallinger, the minority leader, arrived shortly after 9 o'clock. He settled himself in his chair for a long day's watch in behalf of the filibuster.

RUSSIA WILL DICTATE FINAL TERMS OF PEACE

By Francis Lavelle Murray

Petrograd, Feb. 10.—Russia will dictate the terms of peace at the termination of the war. This was the declaration made by President Rodzianko of the Duma in an address with which he opened today's session. The Duma settled down to business at this morning's session, the meeting of last night having been given up to speeches by Premier Goremykin and Foreign Minister Sazonoff.

The members of the Duma cheered wildly when President Rodzianko predicted complete victory for Russia and her allies.

"This war must end victorious for us," he said. "For we shall fight until our enemies accept terms of peace."

Interrupted by cheers, he waited until they subsided and then added:

"We shall dictate these terms."

At the conclusion of the President's address the Duma took up various measures relating to the prosecution of the conflict.

The vulgar boil, the learned roast an egg.—Pope.

There is no better time than the present for proving the truth of the statement that there are more than a hundred ways of cooking an egg, although one may not care to make use of all of them. Still, when Lent arrives, with its restrictions, it is well to know of more ways of serving the breakfast standby than merely boiling poaching or frying it.

Of omelets there is no end. One may have them plain or puffy, sweet or savory, or as one may wish. A Spanish omelet is hearty enough for dinner, and is a pleasant change from meat or fish. Cheese omelets are delicious for luncheon, and there are many other varieties of this useful dish which will soon become popular with your household if you will try them.

Suppose you decide upon a Spanish omelet for dinner tomorrow evening. It will require six eggs, a green pepper, a teaspoonful of chopped onion and parsley and half a can of tomatoes, in addition to seasoning of butter. Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter in a frying pan and stir into it a tablespoonful of chopped green pepper, a teaspoonful of minced onion, a teaspoonful of chopped parsley and the tomatoes. Cook for ten minutes then turn in the eggs which you have previously beaten light, with two tablespoons of cream and pepper and salt to taste. Cook the omelet, fold over and slip to a hot dish. Pour a nicely made tomato sauce around it and serve.

Eggs au Gratin are nice for luncheon and are easy to prepare. Make a white sauce, adding a tablespoonful of grated cheese to it, and season with paprika and salt. Half fill little individual dishes or ramekins with the sauce, break an egg into each, cover with more sauce, sprinkle thickly with bread crumbs and more grated cheese set in oven till egg is well set and crumbs are brown and serve.

Beauregard Eggs—Boil five eggs hard peel and separate the white and yolks. Chop the whites coarsely and stir into half a pint of white sauce. Pour over hot buttered toast, and press the yolks of the eggs through a vegetable press over the top. Season to taste and serve with a garnish of parsley.

For a change try curried eggs. Fry an onion in a tablespoonful of butter, when brown take out the onion and stir in a tablespoonful of flour and a little more than a teaspoonful of curry powder. When well blended add a cupful of tomato juice. Then add six hard boiled eggs, sliced. Serve on toast.

Baked eggs are very good for breakfast. Grease small dishes with butter and put into each a tablespoonful of milk; then break an egg into it. SSeason with salt, pepper and a bit of butter and set in a hot oven till set. SServe in the baking dishes.

LUNCHEON

Liver Patties
Potato Cakes Spiced Prunes
Gingerbread Tea

DINNER

Cream of Watercress Soup
Spanish Omelet
Potatoes au Gratin Fried Cucumbers
Butter-Scotch Pie
Coffee

Whole Wheat Muffins—Beat one egg light and add to it a teaspoonful of butter or lard melted, a teaspoonful of sugar, half a cup of milk and a cup of milk and a cupful of whole wheat flour into which you have stirred a saltspoon of salt and a heaping teaspoon of baking powder. Bake in greased gem pans.

—Liver Patties—Chop the liver for dinner very fine, mix with it any gravy that may remain, and season highly with pepper and salt. If no gravy is left make a sauce of a tablespoonful of butter and one of flour browned together, with a half pint of boiling water added and cooked till smooth, season to taste and add the chopped liver. Squeeze the juice of half a lemon in the mixture and bake in individual patties with a sprinkle of bread crumbs over the top of each.

Potato Cakes—Moisten the mashed potatoes left from dinner with a little hot milk and a teaspoon of melted butter. Mix well and add half a cup of flour in which a teaspoon of baking powder has been mixed. Also a little salt. Roll out and cut into round cakes and bake as you would any biscuit. These cakes fall quickly, so should be eaten as soon as taken from the oven.

Spiced Prunes—Soak the prunes till tender and remove the pits, then simmer slowly in the juice from pickled peaches or pears. Or you may make the liquid fresh by cooking half a cup of vinegar with half a cup of water and half a cup of sugar with a piece of cinnamon and two cloves till as thick as that for spiced peaches or pears.

Cream of Watercress Soup—Bruise the cress after washing it clean and shake over the fire with very little water, till it is tender enough to be pressed through a sieve. Then add a pint of milk, half a pint of water, tablespoon of butter and season to taste. Thicken slightly with cornstarch and serve with toasted crackers.

Butter Scotch Pie—One cup of brown sugar melted with a piece of butter the size of a small egg. Cook together till slightly brown and add a cup of sweet milk and a tablespoon of flour rubbed smooth in a little milk, and the yolk of one egg. Cook together till smooth and flavor with vanilla. Bake in an open crust and cover with a meringue made of the egg white.

RALPH MILLER HELD FOR JURY

Says at Saturday's Hearing He Isn't Guilty of Robbing Store at Sterling

The Palladium says: For several months it is claimed that the general store of Johnson Edwards was frequently and systematically entered by some person or persons, who stole goods and merchandise. There were fifteen or sixteen of these thefts, it is claimed, and Mr. Edwards in December last reported the matter to the authorities, as well as to the Rev. Mr. Stubbs, pastor of the village church, and John Kevills. The two latter agreed to keep watch and for several nights they were in the store heavily armed. One night their vigil was rewarded. Kevills was behind the stove and the minister was behind the cracker boxes, where both could have an unobstructed view of the entrance; when the store door opened and the form of a young man was seen in the entrance. The latter took an electric flashlight from his pocket, the watchers agree, and turned it about the store. It pointed directly at Kevills, who was behind the stove, and when the young man looked at it, Kevills says, he recognized him as Ralph Miller, about twenty-four years old, son of Henry Miller, a rich and prominent resident of Sterling. The Rev. Mr. Stubbs was not in a position to see the features of the young man and he couldn't idenify him and so swore, but Kevills swore he recognized him and the young man has been held in $1,000 bail by Justice Farnham to await the action of the Grand Jury. D. P. Morehouse, Sr., appeared for Miller.

"The case is a remarkable one and the town has taken sides, the people being about evenly divided. At the hearing Saturday, which was held in the ballroom of the Cayuga House, about 300 were present, men, women, boys and babies, until the place couldn't hold another person. When the evidence was in favor of Miller his friends would applaud and cheer and the others would hiss and show disapproval in other ways. The same conditions were true when the evidence apparently sustained the charges against young Miller.

"The latter denies his guilt and says that there isn't a single reason on earth why he should have stolen a single article taken from Edward's stre. None of the articles taken were traced to Miller, it was said."

THE EBELING CATALOG

The Times is in receipt of the 1915 F. H. Ebeling seed, bulb and farm supply catalg from the Syracuse seed house of that name.

Upon the first page of the catalog cover is an excellent color reproduction of a cluster of asters and single dahlias. Between the covers of the booklet are found illustrations, descriptions and prices of the seeds, bulbs, plants, farming and gardening implements for which the house of Ebeling has become famous, not only in Oswego but in adjoining counties.

It might be well for the 1915 gardner to drop a postal card request for at least one of the Ebeling catologs. The address is 217 Warren st., Syracuse.

"SANITO"
COOKING UTENSILS
are a necessity for housekeepers who wish to excel in domestic science. They are the only American-made cooking ware which absolutely reproduces the high priced, imported German utensils, so universally used abroad. SANITO utensils have an acid proof lining which cannot crack or scale off and retains nothing to taint or discolor the food. When cooked in SANITO the food cooks evenly, retains all its juices and flavors and never scorches or burns. SANITO is a nonconductor of heat and after being heated to the cooking point—212 degrees—it requires but a very small gas flame to complete the cooking process. With proper care SANITO will last a life time.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE CAMPAIGN

"BURY THE HATCHET—EVERYBODY'S DOING IT"

Every day it is becoming more and more apparent that additional factories are needed in this city to give it that business impetus which the city is capable of sustaining. A big, fortunately-located city like Fulton should be humming with industrial enterprises. The elements are here to warrant it. But we must have faith.

There is just now a more noticeable local optimism about the business ftuure of the city than has been apparent before for a long perriod. If our optimism stops with a mere lip acknowledgment of the fact of our opportunity, that opportunity will wither before it becomes of any value. Opportunities don't tarry. They are as fleeting as the wind. Promptitude of seizure and vigorous energy in binding are both needed if opportunity is to be caught and made of practical service.

Everybody is saying Fulton has the greatest opportunity that has ever crossed her path. Nor is this conviction local alone. The same conviction seems to be nation-wide in its sweep. Big men in all parts of the country seem to realize that fortune is standing right in our pathway. The outsider is watching to see what we will do. He is curious to see whether we will measure up to the opportunity He knows full well that we have got to show brain-work, enterprise, breadth of mind, indefatigable energy and an abiding faith in our own particular destiny. He knows that, while fortune holds out her hand, we have got to run to fortune; fortune will not run to us.

Immense riches are attainable in Fulton if our own people will go after them. All lines of business within the next ten years should develop such prosperous proportions that good profits to the capitalists and abundant wages to the laborer should be the rule. All the natural elements or economics are at this moment working in our favor. Man and nature both seem to be playing into our hands. The whole question now is: "Will we be equal to our opportunity?"

Business and professional men and women alive to their opportunity will become members of the Chamber of Commerce which will be organized from the Commercial Club to help Fulton avail itself of the opportunities of the future.—A. C. B.

Plans for Big Noon Luncheon this Wednesday, Hotel Clark the scene of the first gathering to hear Lucius E. Wilson.

Lucius E. Wilson, field director of the American City Bureau, will arrive in Fulton tomorrow. On Wednesday the movement for a greater Fulton Chamber of Commerce will be officially launched at an open meeting and luncheon at the Hotel Clark. The large number of acceptances of President Penfield's personal invitation indicates that the dining room of the Clark will be filled to capacity. Luncheons will be held daily, except Saturday and Sunday, until after the close of the campaign.

At each luncheon Mr. Wilson or one of his co-workers will address the assembled business and professional men and women, and the progress of the work will be reported and new plans for action discussed.

J. H. Braddock, field secretary of the Bureau, has been in Fulton for the past ten days, and already has everything in readiness for the arrival of Mr. Wilson. The offices in the Telephone Building formerly occupied by the First National Bank have been turned into general offiecs for the Chamber of Commerce, and tabulators are at work indexing a complete list of names, including those few business and professional men who are not active members of the Chamber at the present time.

In the meantime Mr. Braddock is meeting the men of Fulton who are or should be leaders in the campaign work. "I find an optimistic attitude everywhere," he announced today. "I find that everyone has confidence in Fulton. I also find that practically everyone believes that organized cooperation is a necessity. It is lacking at the present time; but it is lacking because there has never been a concerted effort to bring it about. This is what Mr. Wilson will do. He is a man of real ability; I might say, a man of rare ability. He will show the leaders of Fulton what co-operation will really do. He will make them want to prorve it to themselves."

In speaking of the present organization, Mr. Braddock said:

"The Chamber of Commercre is handicapped in two ways: first by lack of funds, second by lack of proper support. The second impediment has been the natural outgrowth of the first. The present campaign will remedy both. There is no question but what we shall succeed here as we do elsewhere. Every man who is not a member of the chamber, but who should be, will be made a member of the organization if it lies within human power. Every present member who is not a live, aggressive worker for the Chamber rand for Fulton, will me made a worker and a credit to the organization.

The heart of the subject is brought out in the words of Almon Bristol, for years one of the business men of Fulton and now secretary of the Chamber of Commerce.

"No business," said Mr. Bristol, in discussing this subject, "can succeed without a plan. Yet in years gone by, Chamber of Commerce have blundered along from one exigency to another, or fallen into a state of innocuous desuetude.

"Chambers of Commerce are no longer hit-or-miss organizations. The experience of the last ten years has made many things clear.

"For instance, committee service in the old days in many cities meant the appointment of a group of men to a task that might, or might not, interest them. The personnel of the committee was generally a compound of honorary members who wouldn't work under any conditions. Think of really working together, with a corporal's guard of indifferent ones and a single fanatic who was innocent of all balanced relationship with the organization as a whole. Such committees could arrive nowhere.

"Beginning with the Greater Des Moines Committee and followed to some extent by the Fulton Chamber of Commerce, there has been developed a systematic method of committee organization and control that inexorably brings results.

"The first requisite is a plan.

"The plan is stated in brief paragraphs.

"Each paragraph is a concrete task.

"Each task is analyzed carefully and a special committee of interested men put to work upon the first step. Behind them is the intelligent support of the office force and the officers of the entire Chamber. Regular supervision over the step-by-step progrss of the committee converts spasmodic effort into regular advance.

"It is the spirit that quickeneth," said the great leader of Men. The statement is essentially true today. The community that has a spirit of enterprise, optimism and vision, outdistances its competitors. The right sort of public spirit can be developed just as surely as corruption, graft and inefficiency can be restrained. The Chamber of Commerce is the organization agency to foster the change.

"Although men are usually more impressed by the list of tangible achievements than by efforts to produce public spirit, yet the spirit of a city is the fundamental thing that inexorably determines its commercial as well as its civic future. In the words of King Solomon, where there is no vision, the people perish.

"The Chamber of Commerce is the one organization in a city that can study and act upon large economic-social questions; that can rob municipal issues of mere partisan bias and that can guide public opinion towards sane and persistent progress.

"The close-fisted citizen who is afraid to invest a dollar in boosting his home city, should remember that shrouds have no pockets."

TURKS THREATEN MASSACRE IF ATHENS AIDS ALLIES

Predicts Armed Neutrality In Greece

The Berlin Vossische Zeitung prints a Vienna despatch which says that the opinion prevails in the Austrian capital that the Greek governemnt will decide upon military measures which will result in armed neutrality. The open swerving of the Greeks from neutrality is improbable, according to the despatch.

Allied Mine Sweeper Sunk Off Smyrna

Bombardment of forts on the Smyrna coast by an allied fleet on Saturday was without result, according to an official Turkish communication issued today, which says:

"Two enemy warships bombarded forts on the Smyrna coast for three hours yesterday withuot result.

"At eight o'clock in the morning one French and three British war ships, accompanied by five large mine sweepers, again bombarded Smyrna forts for an hour and a half. Seven shells fired by our batteries struck the war ship which had been first to open fire. One mine sweeper was sunk.

"Our casualties yesterday and today were four killed and seven wounded.

"The enemy's fleet undertook no serious action against the Dardanelles either yesterday or today."

Refugee From Constantinople Declares City Is in State of Panic; People in Dread of Moslem Uprising

The London Times' Sofia correspondent telegraphs:

"A friend who has arrived from Constantinople describes the city as panic stricken owing to the attack of the allied fleet on the fortress line of the Dardanelles.

"The presence of thousands of refugees from the Peninsula of Gallipoli increases the prevailing alarm.

"It is feared the appearance of the fleet in the neighborhood of the city may prove to be a signal for a general massacre of Christians, and large numbers of persons have taken flight in case of an outbrak or disturbances.

"It is anticipated that the instigation of a sacred war may prove that the first victims of Moslem fanaticism may be German officers, who are far from popular with the masses."

Open threats that massacres of Greeks would take place throughout Turkey if the Athens government should move against theOttoman Power are reported here from the capital of Greece. These threats have been made freely by Salih Mey, Turkish Envoy to Greece Coupled with these threats are warnings, conveyed to the diplomatic corps at Athens by Count Mirbach, the German Minister, that a demonstration against Turkey will be followed by immediate declarations of war on Greece by Germany and Austria.

That Greece is at the parting of the ways, with her King exerting his influence to maintain the neutrality of his country in opposition to Mr. Eleutherios Venizelos, the retiring Premier, and the man to whom Greece owes her revival, is the opinion in Europe.

Mr. Venizelos on Saturday announced the resignation of himself and his Cabinet, as King Constantine did not approve the policy of the government. Today in the Chamber of Deputies Mr. Venizelos clearly indicated that the difference between him and the monarch was over the question of peace and war. He said he had advised the King to select as a new Premier, Mr. Zaimis, governor of the National Bank, who, he said, "will follow a policy of neutrality which I hope will not endanger our newly acquired territory."

GERMANY WILL BUILD NAVY TO GRIP ENGLAND AFTER WAR IS OVER

Kaiser's Fleet Will Never Attack British War Ships Again In Equal Fight

Amsterdam, Mar. 8.—Before long there will be a general shuffle of positions in the higher command of the German army. Admiral von Tirpitz and his master are not satisfied with the doings of Admiral von Ingenohl, commander in chief of the battel fleet. They ascribe to his lack of foresight the loss of many German ships.

"What is left for Germany at sea?" That was the question discussed recently at a naval war council in Berlin in which Germany's best admirals had been summoned. No communication was made to the press regarding the outcome of the council, but I understand from a trustworthy source that Admiral von Ingenohl's policy of seeking battle was sternly condemned by the Admiral's opponents.

It may be taken for granted that the German fleet will never again attack England's ships in anything like an equal fight, but will remain hidden until peace is declared and then Germany, with what is left of it, will endeavor to build the largest fleet that ever existed and hope then to challenge England's fleet within fifteen or twenty years and beat it.

3D CLASS PASSAGE DROPPED

New York, Mar. 8.—Passenger agents of the French line have been instructed to refuse third-class passage for Italy to Italian citizens, it was said last night by representatives of the line.

No more in this class will be carried by the French line ships in either direction until overland transportation conditions between France and Italy are normal again, they said.

The action has been taken at the instance of the Italian Immigration Commission, military necessities interfering with ordinary traffic movements, making it impossible to guarante through passage.

MIDNIGHT FIRE AT EDISON'S JERSEY PLANT

West Orange, N.J., Mar. 8.—Fire started a few minutes after midnight this morning in the Edison plant, which was recently burned, and in a short time one of the buildings was ablaze.

The flames spread rapidly and it was feared that another disastrous fire would result.

12,000 TURKS ON GULF BATTLE WITH BRITISH

Serious fighting has occurred along the Persian Gulf between a British force and Turks supported by hostile tribesmen. The British detachment, which is composed largely of Indian troops, has occupied the head of the gulf for some time, and last week, after a period of comparative quiet, located two Ottoman columns. Before the engagement that ensued had ended hand to hand fighting was resorted to. The casualties on both sides were numerous, according to a statement issued last night by the Marquis of Crewe, Secretary of State for India. This report says:

"For some time it had been known that about two or three regiments of Turkish troops, together with Turkish Beni Fam tribesmen from Amara (on the Tigris river), with contingents of Persian Beni Lamu Tureef and other disaffected tribesmen hostile to the Sheif of Mohammerah, had been collecting west of Ahwaz (in Khuzistan). The Ahwaz garrison was despatched on a reconnaissance in force to ascertain their number and disposition.

"Several hand to hand encounters took place in which the attackers were held successfully at bay while our party made good its retirement. From reports received and supported by the absence of all further activity, it appears the enemy lost no less than two hundred to three hundred killed, including brothers of the Sheik of the Beni Tureefs, besides from five hundred to six hundred wounded. Our casualties were: British officers killed, 6; wounded, 3; British rank and file killed, 1; wounded, 5; Indian officers killed, 1; wounded, 4; Indian rank and file killed, 55; wounded, 115.

"On the same date a cavalry reconneissance was made in the direction of Nakala, about twenty-five miles northwest of Basra (on the Persian Gulf). The reconnoitrers on returning to camp were followed by a body of some 1,500 hostile horsemen. This enemy force was skilfully drawn on to a concealed position occupied by infantry with machine guns and field artillery. The enemy fled back to Nakala after having suffered heavily. Our losses in this reconnaissance were: British officers killed, 4; wounded, 2; Indian officers killed, 2; rank and file killed, 4."

"This afternoon (Sunday) six hostile war ships bombarded our batteries in the Dardanelles. The batteries rreplied successfully."

"There is no important change in the general situation."

"According to latest advices received here," a Reuter despatch from Sofia says, "the Sultan and the government are still in Constantinople. The government is prepared to cross to Asia Minor at any moment, but the Sultan is in favor of remaining in the capital.

"ItI is understood it has decided to intrust the defence of Constantinople exclusively to the Germans under command of General Liman von Sanders, the instructor of the Turkish army, while Bedri Bey, the Prefect of Police, will be invested with the general control of thec ity, with powers equivalent to those of a viceroy.

RAIDERS EVADED THREE SQUADRONS

By FREDERICK WERNER

Berlin, Dec. 17. (By Wireless.)—Official information issued to the press here today asserts that British warships were damaged and sunk in the naval engagements that followed the German bombardment of English coast towns. All the German ships escaped, admitted, it is asserted.

The great feat of the German squadron is being celebrated throughout Germany. Flags are flying from houses and public buildings. The news is regarded as the most daring exploit of the war.

The admiralty staff gave out the following dispatch from the German North Seaquet:

"German warships approached the east coast of England and bombarded the fortified town of Scarborough. The operation was wholly successful. A heavy fire was opened in which damage was inflicted. Albeit, that opposition was possible that some warships sank, but we cannot affirm this positively. The engagement was fought in a fog that concealed the attack.

"Although three squadrons of the British navy tried to trap our ships they succeeded in escaping."

Reports received here from English sources state that more than 100 persons were killed and eighty wounded at Hartlepool. They also admit considerable damage was done there, as well as at Scarborough.

The English contention that these towns are unfortified is flatly denied here. It is asserted that the British official statement that forts replied to the German warship refutes any claim that the places were unfortified.

The bombardment of English coast towns possibly heralds greater "deeds of arms" says the Boarse Zeitung, but this is the only newspaper comment that the German fleet has embarked on a course of general assault.

The Berliner Tageblatt says: "Once more our naval forces, having the danger of mines in the North sea, have shelled English fortified places. The success is a notable one and the Fatherland is to be congratulated for its brave naval forces."

"This is not merely a daring cruiser raid or mere throwing of bombs," the Neuesten Nachrichten, "but a regular bombardment of fortified places. It is a further proof of the gallantry of our navy."

The Leipzigerzeitung expresses satisfaction because the attack comes so soon after the battle on the Falkland Islands.

Amsterdam, Dec. 17.—It is announced that 55 persons were killed and 80 wounded in the bombardment of Hartlepool.

OPINIONS

Rural Schools.

The situation which gives the city children better opportunity for education than the rural children should be remedied. The country schools are open from six to eight weeks less than the city schools, as Thomas E. Finegan, assistant commissioner of educcatsion pointed out to Oneida county's Board of Supervisors. Teachers in the districts schools do not need to be as well trained as those in the city schools, and they are not. Neither are they paid as well. Moreover, the equipment of the schools is inferior.

The remedy is consolidation wherever the distances permit it. By combining all of the districts of a town into one school district with one school board, with one tax rate and with fewer schools in each district, the town obtains a concentration of funds and energies with results in more efficient rural schools. And it costs less.—Utica Observer.

A Question of Taste.

There are many indications that, out of deference to the grief of Europe and in sympathy for her desperate need, the social life of this peaceful country will for the present be shorn of its customary extravagance. That is as it should be. Although there are plenty of rich Americans as able as ever to splurge splendidly and to dazzle us with their reckless extravagance, no one wants to see it; no one feels that any real enjoyment would follow in its wake. There is a heaviness in the air we breathe that does not lend itself to gayety. There is a corresponding heaviness of spirit, deepened by each day's measure of suffering and death. And there is the natural good taste of a people, still simple and kind at heart, that restrains brutal vulgarity in times of supreme struggle and disaster.

Our kindness has been abundantly manifested by the money given to the Red Cross Society and to the Belgian relief fund; by the shiploads of food and clothing and hospital supplies that have been sent over the sea; but there is a deeper feeling expressed in the soberness of living that marks the sincerity of our concern. Exceptions are not lacking to prove what we have always known—that there are callous men and women in the United States, as there are callous men and women all over the world, and that wealth gives to this callousness a singularly offensive swagger. But we do not judge society as we judge rope—by its rotten strands. We regard the nation as a whole, and we see on every side a gravity of disposition that becomes the lookers-on at a tragedy too great for measurement.

It is the law of contrast that impels us to moderation, to an avoidance of extravagance in the face of direful want. There is always poverty standing at the gate of wealth; but never before in the history of the world has a civilized nation, a nation prosperous and at peace, been reduced to sudden beggary, its industries destroyed, its homes despoiled, its land laid desolute. And the bitterness of that destitution, which we are striving to alleviate, holds back our hands from waste. It is not so much that we cannot still spend, as that spending has lost its savor. The prodigality that we were wont to regard with indifference, or to commend as stimulating trade, now jars upon our sense of fitness. We have a standard of taste, and we adhere to it.—Youth's Companion.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE W... ...OPERAT...

At last Wednesday night's meeti... board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce, R. L. McCu... VanWagenen Corporation, advanced an idea of winning the co... of the farmers in the vicinity of Fulton. It is Mr. McCully's idea t... holding out special inducements to farmers surrounding this city, the work of "Community Building" may be furthered.

This idea has worked successfully in certain of the Western States, particularly at Trenton, Mo., where a trade organization captivated the farmers within a radius of ten miles of the town. This work was accomplished by each member of the trade organization making himself a committee of one to call upon the people in the surrounding country and enlist their interest and sympathy in working for Trenton. The movement became known as the "Trenton Idea" and has been copied in the hustling West, but not in the conservative East.

In less than six months after the "Trenton Idea" became a fact, the city's trade body had enrolled almost every farmer in the four townships surrounding the corporate limits. Thus the farmers were made to feel themselves a part and parcel of the city establishment. In Trenton public markets were instituted where the farmers could trade unmolested; a cold storage plant was built; and, because of the increased prosperity of the town, the tax rate has been lowered to a point far below existing rates in other towns in the neighborhood.

Mr. McCully's idea, it is hoped, may take concrete form. If it does and the city realizes a public market and cold storage plant there should ensue a new era of prosperity for Fulton.

GET THE RIGHT MEN.

We have received numerous letters from different parts of the country asking us relative to the success of the commission form of government. We have answered these inquiries, stating that the commission form has been most highly successful in our particular city, but have added that our success has not been due entirely to this more modern government in itself, that we have been most fortunate in securing the right men for the right place. A city should be well governed under the old council form of government if the men who are elected are conscientious in their oath of office. However, we feel the commission form is the better, as it centers responsibility, there being a specific department for each commissioner, and he is personally held accountable for his department.—"Journal" of Commercial Club of Belle Fourche, S. D.

TO LEND A HAND.

The meanest man, and the farmer's greatest enemy, is his so-called friend who fattens on the keeping alive of the farmer's prejudice, hate and distrust. The farmer has too long been considered in a class apart. The successful farmer is already a business man and he should unite with all other business men to look after the problems of his community. The line between town and country must be wiped out.—The "County Agent."

WITH THE SUFFRAGIS...

You have what a policeman when he is on duty at a dance ... how he stands stolid and unblinking against the wall or varies the monotony by pacing solemnly back and forth.

Irma Erwin is the policewoman of Fargo, North Dakota, and when she is on duty at a dance hall this is what she does: She dances with the girls. Why? This is what she told Mrs. LaFollette, who called on her at police headquarters: "I dance with the girls partly to become better acquainted with them, and partly to establish a certain standard of formality and dignity for the dancers. My dancing with them proves that I am not just a crank who doesn't know enough to have a good time, but that I want everyone to have a good time in the right way."

Under the management of men the poor old women on Blackwell's Island, if unable to work, have passed their time in unrelieved misery with idle hands. After more than a century during which the department of corrections becomes the worst in the city, Mayor Mitchell puts a woman on the job, and in the process of humanizing the prisons, the old ladies on the island find themselves knitting with all the solid satisfaction old ladies the world over have pursued this time-killing occupation.

It is not to blame the men that these instances are noted but to illustrate the sort of service women bring to politics. They can be counted on to carry the principles of home-making into the management of any assemblage of people, prison or dance hall, that has to be supervised by government.

Alice Stone Blackwell in the Woman's Journal calls attention to the fact that the State of Washington has the smallest death rate in the United States, and she takes the occasion to remind her readers that it is the only State with a woman on the State board of health; that it has many women food inspectors, and incidentally, she adds, "It is also a State where women vote."

The passing of Robert Burdette, humorist and ardent suffragist, arouses the suffragists to reassert their claim to all professional humorists: Mark Twain, Mr. Dooley, John Kendrick Bangs are noted instances. A sense of humor helps pierce the fallacy that voting is inherently a male prerogative.

Forst Man—Say, when women d'ye think they'll go to war?

Second Man—I don't know about that, but I think I can guess where war will go."

H. C. Feroe of Tivoli, N. Y., writes: "I healed several bad cuts and a scraped hock on a valuable horse by using Hunford's Balsam of Myrrh twice a day."

Open Letter to the Development Committee

Honorable Sirs:

The several letters turned over to you by me, the undersigned, relative to one Roy B. Smith, a community builder or industrial promotor, has been done in no sense to influence the committee's action, but by the request of the interested parties. All such letters in my possession were received in answer to a request for information along the lines indicated while engaged with the former Fulton Development association.

While I do not now wish to influence the committee's action in the selection of any particular man, I am virtually interested and concerned to this exent, that the best man for the job shall be selected and that the campaign shall prove a success. I am frank to admit that I am opposed to the plan submitted, that of disbursing one-third of the entire amount collected for the first year's subscription to the man who conducts the campaign.

I confidently believe that $5,000 or more will be subscribed and paid in for expenditure the first year; and to give away $1,666.66 of the amount to an outsider for directing the campaign is a sum too great and the handing over of such a sum would leave a brown taste in the mouth and create a community censure of the committee for making such a bargain, little short of scandal; and who knows but that the committee would be tarred and feathered.

On the other hand, if only $2,000 were raised and one-third of same paid to the orgahizer, i. e., $666.66 only, $1,333.33 would be left available for operations, which would not begin to liquidate the single items of the secretary's salary for a year which item is deemed in every respect at the most necessary item in the proposed budget. We must raise at least $5,000 to make the undertaking a success; then after paying the promoter a reasonable salary, taking care of the proposed secretary's salary for a year, pay the cost of advertising, stationary, postage and other necessary incidentals, we will then have a scant $2,000 available for the many purposes of a genuine industrial development along broad, aggressive lines.

A suggestion has been made that ... employed to promote the ... ing shall not be employed for two months only, but that said contract shall run during a period of three years, the promoter giving general supervision for a period of at least two months each year for the three years. This plan looks to me not only like a waste of money, but would, in effect, nullify the free hand of the man who shall come to take up the work as general secretary.

The man employed as secretary after the Booster campaign is over must be the right man for the place, for on the selection of two men, the promoter, and later the secretary, depends the success of the entire project.

Let us start this project by organizing a stock company for the promotion and development of Fulton. Let everybody be invited to subscribe for stock at $25.00 per share and those parties who cannot take a full share, club together under the direction of the soliciting committee, pool their subscriptions and buy one share, said share to be voted at the annual meeting by whoever the pool may elect to represent them.

Let the new movement, the re-organized chamber, be incorporated by all means and if such a corporation cannot sell $6.000 worth of stock, then I am disappointed in Fulton.

Gentlemen of the committee, a golden opportunity for Fulton is in your hands. If you possess the pluck and courage as I believe you do, you will respond to the spirit of the times and exercise your full capabilities. Don't let the matter die on your hands. GET BUSY!

"TAXPAYER'S" POINT OF VIEW REGARDING G. B. DEUEL'S GRIEVANCE.

Dear Mr. Deuel:

Assuming that Mr. Boland will justly consider a replication ... ranted, I will for the sake of "Community Construction" venture t... lowing explanatory statement:

—You ask why you were prosecuted. The answer is, purposed d... ancy. You ask the Hon. ex-mayor to make an apology. I say th... moment you were vindicated by the court and reimbursed by the ... sentatives of the city you received public apology from every individu... payer in the municipality. I believe it to be a righteous attestation to ... exceedingly grateful to the city attorney for publicly clearing the matter that we may enjoy abundantly a vindication so popular.

As broad a person as ex-President Roosevelt appealed to the court in one of those little tragedies, the aftermath of political supremacy, and with tear-dimmed eyes and a voice trembling with emotion, acknowledged to the court that he was satisfied with vindication.

How beautiful that example? J. A. F.

Welcome to Our New Daily; Stop Knocking Let's Boost For It

The "knocker" already hits at our new daily, but what wonder. The man who knocks, knocks from force of habit, and having his little hammer always with him hits at everything visible; sometimes at things bad, hits more often at things good. Force of habit, superstition and prejudice are the three attributes of human nature hardest to overcome, therefore pity the knocker rather than censure for once the habit is formed, like the drink habit it is hard to let go.

Fulton has as few knockers as any city in the U. S. for its size, probably no more than can be found in Squeechas them, one, two or three. The has them, one, two or three. The man with the little hammer always knocks. The last thing hit is Braun's new daily. We have seen him look wise, give the head a knowing toss, then the familiar WHACK of the little hammer whenever Fulton's new daily is mentioned. Now, please kind knocker desist for the good of Fulton. Stop knocking! Talk the new daily up, not down. A live daily in Fulton (our own daily) will be a valuable adjunct to the city's progress, just what we need to help along the Industrial Campaign.

Let's take pride in it. Let's help make it go. Let's call it OUR daily. Let's think of it as our child and we'll speak it of in terms only to good. Let's help finance it. Let's subscribe. Let's advertise in its columns. Let's take at least a share of its stock. If five hundred men would take one ten dollar share each it could be made a howling success from the word "Go!"

Let's join hands. Let's boost Hip Hurrah for the new daily.

EDWARD JOSLIN.

VETERAN DIES IN LAKE CITY

CAPT. C. A. TAYLOR, BORN IN FULTON 73 YEARS AGO —A WRITER.

Through the courtesy of the Oswego Times, the following splendid obituary relative to the death of a former Fultonian is reprinted:

"In the death of Captain Charles Albert Taylor, which occurred at his home, No. 87 East Seventh street, last night at 9 o'clock, the ranks of Post O'Brian, G. A. R., lose another veteran and one of its most distinguished members. Captain Taylor was a soldier, he served in the great struggle of the '60's with valor and no better testimonial of his bravery, his love for country, is to be found than in his rise from drummer boy to captain. He was a member of the Loyal Legion, an officers' organization, and is the last of that order living is Oswego.

"Captain Taylor had been ill for about ten weeks from bronchial trouble. He was subject to this affliction in the damp fall and winter months, but last year escaped the ravages of the disease by going south. He intended going south again this year, but a slight cold developed into a severe attack of throat trouble which caused his death. He was born in Fulton and would have been 73 years on New Year's day. He and Mrs. Taylor observed their golden wedding anniversary last New Year's. He lived in Oswego for over forty years and attended Trinity Methodist church, was a member of Post O'Brian and a past commander of that organization, also a member of the Odd Fellows, Loyal Legion, and Sons of Veterans. He is survived by his wife, two sons, Charles A., jr., of West Albany street; William of Florida; two sisters, Mrs. Louise Bien of San Francisco, Mrs. Stephen Joslin of Wichita, Kan., and one brother, Frederick H., of Utica.

"Mr. Taylor, in his younger days, held an important position in the adjutant general's office at Albany and was well known in the capital. His father, the late Albert Taylor of Fulton, was a major, having attained that rank in the war of the rebellion. Captain Taylor was a prolific and interesting writer and many contributions from his pen were printed in the Times over the signature 'C. A. T.' His style was captivating and as a writer of war stories he was at his best. His last contribution was regarding the burning of Louvain, which he similarized to the burning and sacking in North Carolina by the Union troops.

"Captain Taylor's war record is a history of an eventful life, a record of patriotism and of devotion to duty. In the present European war much is being said about the German troops rushing back to battle after recuperating from wounds. It is compulsory in that struggle, but at the time of the great war in this country the wounded were free to stay from the firing line. Captain Taylor, however, on two occasions, was severely wounded, but each time he went back to the scene of the fighting as soon as health would permit and plunged into the battles with greater force. He was in the battle of Bull Run, the battle of the Wilderness and many others of the bloodiest conflicts.

"Mr. Taylor enlisted May 13, 1861, as drummer, Company E, Twelfth New York Volunteers, at Elmira, and served in the Fourth Brigade, First Division, Army of Northeast Virginia. He was honorably discharged on August 23, 1861, but re-enlisted on November 7, 1861, in Company H, Twenty-fourth New York Volunteers. He was promoted to sergeant on August 30, 1862. He was wounded at South Mountain, Md., on September 14, 1862, and was mustered out May 29, 1863. He saw service at Bailey's Cross Roads, Va., Bull Run, Little River Turnpike, Fredericksburg and many other important engagements. He enrolled September 14, 1863, and was mustered in as first lieutenant, Company A, Twenty-fourth New York Volunteer Cavalry, and was promoted to Captain of Company E, to rank from August 19, 1864."

HOW RED CROSS FUNDS ARE USED.

At this particular time when the community is called upon from so many sources for relief of financial assistance, it is well to know the uses being made of different funds.

At the present time there is being made a general sale of Red Cross Seals and questions are frequently asked, "How is the money used? The sale of Red Cross Seals was inaugurated by the American National Red Cross for the fight against Tuberculosis. It was extended from State to State, from city to city, and town to town, and now is carried on by mail in the rural districts. The national Red Cross gives explicit outlines of the ways in which the funds are to be used, but it is all summed up in "The Fight Against Tuberculosis."

Five per cent goes to the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. (This Society being practically the general sales agent of the National Red Cross.)

Five per cent goes to the State Agency, which in New York State, outside Greater New York, is the State Charity Aid Association.

In Lyons there is a local organization for tuberculosis work and the remaining funds, or 85 per cent, is used entirely under the jurisdiction of this local committee or organization but must be expended under the general restrictions of the National Red Cross.

IN MEMORIAM.

Horatio Putnam Allen, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Horatio Putnam Allen, of this city, died at their home Wednesday morning, December 9th, after a brief illness of five days, aged nineteen months. He is survived by his parents and three sisters, Ruth, Frances and Virginia, all of this city.

Coming into the world on the evening of the day of the death of his grandfather, Mr. Horatio A. Allen, for whom he was named, this baby boy was the greatest comfort and consolation to their sad hearts, and like a veritable little sunbeam, a constant delight and joy to them all. His was a peculiarly bright, active little, personality, always friendly and loving towards everyone.

Many persons of all ages and conditions loved the little fellow, stopping on the way to their daily toil to catch his merry little smile and the wave of his tiny hand. He was fond of flowers to a marked degree, and rarely was he without a dandelion or rose in his little hand, being fond of either. In his brief life he had unspeakably endeared himself to his family, also to a wide circle of friends, and little Horatio will be a strong magnet drawing many hearts to the Eternal Home.

The funeral services were held at the Allen home on Friday afternoon, and burial was made in Mt. Adnah cemetery.

Cards of Thanks.

We wish to extend thanks to friends and neighbors who so generously gave their services during our bereavement by the loss of our dear husband and father, Lorin Austin; also, for the beautiful flowers and to the choir members of Post Schenck, G. A. R.

Mrs. Katharine Hoey.

Mrs. Katharine Hoey, 85, died Dec. 10th at her home, 206 Park street. She is survived by three daughters, Mrs. Mary Allaire, Buffalo; Mrs. Ellen Sweet and Miss Katherine Hoey of Fulton. The funeral was held Friday from the house and from the Church of the Immaculate Conception.

It Really Does Relieve Rheumatism

Everybody who is afflicted with Rheumatism in any form should by all means keep a bottle of Sloan's Liniment on hand. The minute you feel pain or soreness in a joint or muscle, bathe it with Sloan's Liniment. Do not rub it. Sloan's penetrates almost immediately right to the seat of pain, relieving the hot, tender, swollen feeling and making the part easy and comfortable. Get a bottle of Sloan's Liniment for 25 cents of any druggist and have it in the house—against colds, sore and swollen joints, lumbago, sciatica and like ailments. Your money back if not satisfied, but it does give almost instant relief. Buy a bottle to-day.

CITY SEALER IS NOT IN POLITICS

the country thus reveiling our idea that the country is the healthier place.

Wednesday Afternoon.

Farmers in this vicinity feel greatly relieved, especially those who attended the Institute meeting at Church's hall yesterday afternoon, as they were enlightened as to the attitude of the City Sealer of Weights and Measures, Harry O'Brien, towards those who have been in the habit of marketing their products in Fulton.

It was rumored about town that the farmers had sought Oswego, Syracuse and other fields for the marketing of their crops, owing to the fact that this official had been too stringent. This misapprehension was straightened out yesterday and explanations were made by Mr. O'Brien and County Sealer French.

"I try not to be too strict with the farmers," said City Sealer O'Brien but the reason why they notice my demand that the laws be observed is due to the fact that when they go to Oswego and our neighboring cities they are not molested by Sealers. This is due to the fact that the men in these cities hold political jobs and only last the life of the city administration, while in Fulton I am under the Civil Service and I devote my entire attention to my duties and endeavor to protect both the producer and consumer."

City Sealer O'Brien explained the Brooks Net Container Law adopted in 1912 which calls for the marking of the standard weight, measure or a numerical account upon all goods for marketing. He said that he is always at his office in the City hall at the service of the public and that he will willingly give out any information concerning his work and educate those who are anxious to know the laws and their application.

County Sealer French in his talk before the Institute branded the dry measure as crude and advised the farmers to weigh their products as it is far more equitable. Mr. French said that both Iowa and Indiana have abolished the dry measure. Each farmer should have a good pair of scales.

More than forty teachers representing Mr. Kingsbury's supervisory district were present Tuesday afternoon and apparently enjoyed the lectures. Teachers representing Mr. Gardner's district were also present.

General Exhibition.

That school children have shown especial interest in winter exhibits was shown by the fine display and large number of varieties. Mexico and Richland, Palermo, Scriba and New Haven pupils were the largest contributors, entering red, white, yellow and black pop corn of several varieties each from Tom Thumb to Bear's Claw and in every shade of each color.

D. S. Baldwin of Granby showed the handsomest bushel of black pop corn while Mr. Anderson's bushel of white ricked the white which certainly was beautiful. The exhibit of field corn by the children was cause for pride to Mr. Kingsbury as they mostly came from his district. Mr. Vickery had the finest and largest collection of 50 entries of vegetables and they would have done justice to a midsummer fair. Handsome specimens of cabbage, carrots, beets, radishes, onions, kale, celery, parsley, vegetable oysters, pumpkins, squash, sunflowers, wortsles, turnips, oats, rye, buckwheat and bean and last but not least several varieties of potatoes.

One plate of which there were from 1913 crop in good state of preservation.

Floyd Vickery, his son, had a handsome exhibit of yellow flint corn selected from stalks bearing two ears each. From 4 1-2 acres of this corn Mr. Vickery husked over 700 bushels. He also entered 29 single entries.

Twenty-one varieties of apples were shown by various farmers. Wm. Hubbard entered a plate of cotton-seed also competed on an acre yellow flint corn, and large mangles, and wortzles weighing 9 lbs. or more each.

Time to End the Search for Those Holiday Clothes

Just enough of the unusual about these garments to make you unusual looking without being over-conspicuous. Just enough "dash" to set off their refinement.

If you've been dissatisfied looking around, get one of these STADIUMS and then look around. The more you see, the more you'll like your STADIUM for Christmas and afterwards.

You'll find STADIUM standards reflected in our whole line of men's apparel. You'll see, too, an effort to make our store service measure up to that of our goods.

Remember we carry everything for Men folks in Holiday Gifts.

NO PULLMANS FOR PLAYERS

Managers Plan Reductions In Operating Expenses; Taxis Taboo

By FRANK G. MENKE.

New York, Dec. 17.—Here are a few words from Jimmy Gilmore, who proxies for the Federal league:

"I feel that peace would be for the best interests of the game, and I believe that the public wants peace. We are willing to go half-way—but no farther. And when peace comes you can be assured that it will be at terms that are favorable to the Federal league—at terms that will maintain the Federal league as a separate, major league organization."

Guy Shanks, the Washington outfielder, reminds one very much of the Federal league. He was pronounced on the edge of the grave, but he performed a "come-back."

Back in 1910 Shanks went to a medical gent who hammered Shanks' chest, shook his head sorrowful like, and said "My boy, prepare for the finish. You ain't got no more than a couple of weeks to live."

The baseball season had just ended. Shanks, at that time, was playing for the East Liverpool, Ohio, team. He beat it over to Monacca, Pa., just across the river from East Liverpool, and for some old reason he chose to die there. The examination of Shanks was made at the solicitation of the Pittsburg club, which thought a lot of his skill but was skeptical about his general health. When the doctor's report was submitted the Pirates, of course, gave up all thoughts of snaring Shanks.

Shanks went over to that Pennsylvania town prepared to die. Early in the spring Bill Phillips, manager of the East Liverpool team nearly collapsed when he got a letter from Shanks asking when and where he should report for spring training. When Phillips recovered his equilibrium he wrote Shanks to report at once. Shanks did—looking huskier and stronger than ever.

"Either that doc didn't know his business or Monacca is some health resort," said Shanks.

He had a good season in 1911 with East Liverpool and went to Youngstown, Ohio, in 1913 where he graduated from the minors the next season, going to Washington where he has been since.

Shanks wasn't the only star that the Pirates have passed up. Barney Dreyfuss, owner of the Pirates, had a chance to sign Tris Speaker, the wonderful Red Sox outfielder, who then was in the minors. The deal was already to go through when Dreyfuss learned that Speaker smoked cigarettes.

"Right now I'm off that fellow," said Barney. "I won't have a cigarette smoker on my team. These fellows never amount to a darn—no wind, no endurance no nothing."

Whereupon, the Red Sox secured Speaker and he became the sensation of the American league. He ranks to-day, despite the fact that he smokes cigarettes, as one of the greatest outfielders the game ever has known. If he were placed on the market he would bring $25,000 at least.

The ball players are a bit worried over reports that the magnates plan further reductions in operating expenses and that they would reduce travelling expenses to a minimum.

One report has it that the ball players instead of riding in Pullman coaches, will have to ride in ordinary day coaches during day trips. Taxicabs for ball players while on trips will be tabooed as far as the club owners paying the freight is concerned, according to the same report.

In addition to this the magnates are said to be arranging for quarters at cheaper hotels around the circuit. The average hotel cost per day has been $4. The magnates would like to find a place for their men at $3. This would mean a saving of $1.00 for each man in the squad—usually about 20. The teams are on the road about 80 days during the season, which would mean a total saving in hotel bills alone of about $1,600.

Think how much champagne the magnates could buy with that saving.

FOSTER THEATER WILL BE CALLED THE EMPIRE

Old Fulton Landmark to be Opened Christmas Eve with High Class Attractions.

Information has come to The Evening Times from Phillip Hamilton of Paterson, N. J., that the Wallace Amusement company will open the Foster theater on Christmas Eve, December 24th, presenting the Empire Stock Players. The theater will be renamed the Empire theater, which is and will be the name of all theaters controlled by this company. It is the object of the Wallace Amusement company to offer the people of Fulton a permanent stock company, presenting dramatic and comedy—dramatic plays at popular prices.

Some of the plays the theater-goers of Fulton and vicinity will have an opportunity to witness during the balance of the season will be, "The Bachelor," "Tennessee's Pardner," "Gudgeons," "Lavender and Old Lace," "The Attack," "Rosemary," "The Factory Girl," "A Cheerful Liar," "Diamonds and Hearts," "Down East," "The Circus Girl," "My Lady Clara," "A Fool's Paradise," "Hazel Kirke," "The Little Joker," "His Last Chance," "A Modern Ananias," "The Divorce Question," "The Duel," "Dora Thorne," "The Escape," "Bachelors Honeymoon," "The Lure," "A Mass of Honor," "Man of the Hour," "Bought and Paid For," and many other high class plays; one play each week, on Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Saturday matinee.

HIGH SCHOOL'S GOOD GAME

Noted Improvement Over Last Saturday's Oswego Contest; Game Tomorrow

In a hard fought game Saturday afternoon the Auburn High school basketball team defeated the Fulton High school team by the score of 19 to 14. The game was played in the Auburn Armory and the Fulton team was severely handicapped by the size of the floor and by having a brick bounding surface for one basket.

The Fulton team swept Auburn from their feet for the first few minutes. In the first play Hudson scored a basket. This was followed in quick succession by a basket by Keeler and two by Fairgrieve, making the score 8 to 0 in Fulton's favor.

After this Auburn woke up and settled down to work. During the remainder of the first half Fulton scored one foul and Caffrey scored a pretty field goal. For Auburn Peck scored two baskets and two fouls. Osborne succeeded in getting two baskets. There the half ended with the score: Fulton, 11; Auburn, 10.

In the play the second half was a constant struggle for victory on both sides. Fulton was unable to locate the basket on the brick wall with one exception, when Keeler succeeded in getting the right angle. During this period Keeler also shot one foul. Auburn, however, had difficulty in locating their basket. They managed to get three baskets and three fouls in spite of the very close guarding of the Fulton team. Peck shot the fouls and one field goal; Osborne got one basket, and Chamberlain one. All too soon the time was up with Auburn the winners.

The game was featured by good team work, clean playing, close guarding, and fair refereeing. In all there were ten fouls called on Fulton, of which Auburn made five good, and eight called on Auburn, of which Fulton made good only two.

In team work and floor playing the Fulton team showed to better advantage than Auburn. However, unfamiliarity with the court and poor baskets proved too much for them. The High school team has improved greatly since they played Oswego High a week ago and will probably give a good exhibition of basketball against the Solvay High school team here on Friday night of this week.

Summary—Score of baskets, field goals: Keeler, 2; Fairgrieve, 2; Caffrey, 1; Hudson, 1; Peck, 3; Osborne, 3; Chamberlain, 1. Fouls: Keeler, 2; Peck, 5.

TRADE AT HOME

The merchants of Fulton have been "talking" the above slogan for several years and many of them have felt very much hurt because they have seen their old customers going to nearby cities to sell their produce, and as a natural sequel, spend their money.

During the past few months the merchants have been waking up and asking themselves, "Why this condition"? The outcome is the proposed boom that we hope will make Fulton the greatest trading center in Northern New York.

This firm has interested itself in the Chamber of Commerce since one of our officers became a director at the beginning of the year and we have felt and still feel that until the merchants do things to interest the people in the farming community we cannot expect them to co-operate with us, and they will never co-operate until we offer them the same inducements that the larger cities do. Why can we not give them a market for their produce? Why can we not supply them with the kind of merchandise they need.

Fulton is going to have a boom, and a big one; an able committee from the Chamber of Commerce is at work selecting the right man for the job. The secretary of the VanWagenen Corporation is of the strong opinion, and is upheld almost unanimously by the Chamber of Commerce members, that the farmers should be included in the Chamber membership, and help work out their plans, such as a public market, better shipping facilities, a cold storage plant and other improvements to help us all.

—There will always be some who will trade out of town--some will always send to mail order houses--but, let our merchants do all they can to keep trade at home--For instance, there has never been a time in the history of this firm that a wagon or sleigh could not be bought cheaper of us than in Syracuse or Oswego, quality for quality.

Another instance--during the past summer, we found our legitimate Automobile Tire trade getting away from us. We got busy and found that cut rate supply houses in Syracuse were slashing prices--we cut our's so that we made a profit of only 3 per cent on the tires--we advertised--got most of our trade back, now when we sell a tire the customer usually buys something else which helps us out.

We think our policy is right--we want our customers to stay with us and we are always ready and willing to do our part. That we are doing our part is evidenced by the fact that our first year as a corporation, from August 1, 1912 to 1913, showed gross receipts of $90,000, the past year showed $105,000, an increase of $15,000.

Draw your own conclusions.

Yours for a Merry Christmas and A Happy New Year

Sale of Land for Taxes

Sale of land for unpaid State, County and City taxes for the years 1905 to 1914 inclusive.

In pursuance of and by virtue of an Act of the Legislature of the State of New York entitled "An Act to Incorporate the City of Fulton, N. Y., being Chapter 63 of the Laws of 1902 and all Acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto in reference to the collection of taxes, under Sections 252-259 inclusive of said act, notice is hereby given that I shall proceed to sell at public auction on the 7th day of January, 1915 and such succeeding days as may be necessary, at ten o'clock A. M. in the Common Council Chambers in the City Hall of the City of Fulton, N. Y., the following described parcels of land to satisfy the taxes due thereon for the years 1905, 1906, 1907, 1908, 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912, 1913, 1914, as the case may be.

If said premises or land are not sold on the 7th day of January, 1915, the sale will continue from day to day until the whole amount of said parcels are disposed of, and the taxes thereon satisfied. The amount set opposite each parcel is the amount of taxes due on the same, and the expenses of collection.

No bids shall be received in sums less than said amount.

POMONA GRANGE

Three Hundred Members Added to Roll in Year.

Oswego County Pomona Grange, Lacona, met in regular quarterly session at Oswego in the Armory Tuesday. The forenoon session was called to order at 10:30 with a large attendance. State Lecturer F. E. Alexander presided until the worthy master, J. H. Mace, arrived. Committee on applications were appointed, received and reported favorable on eighteen applications, and the candidates were obligated and instructed in the fifth degree by County Deputy F. E. Rounds, who also gave his yearly report that gave a gain membership of 307. Sand Bank Grange had made the greatest per centage gain in membership the past year, and was presented with a beautiful banner. Happy Thought Grange stood second and will receive a prize. Committees were appointed and other business of interest to the members was taken up and then adjourned for dinner. After a social hour, worthy master called the meeting to order. The secretary and treasurer of the Fire Relief association made their reports which were accept and the following directors were re-elected for a term of three years: W. W. Rounds, Oswego Town; C. A. May, Oswego; P. A. Welling, Hannibal; G. W. Robinson, Lacona; W. B. Moran, Parish.

The Pomona officers for the ensuing year were then elected as follows: Master, J. W. Mace, Fulton; overseer, L. D. Beardsley, Fulton; lecturer, Mrs. Ida L. Edick, Parish; steward, John Eckard, Hannibal; chaplain, Mrs. Oscar Green, West Monroe; treasurer, W. C. Hubbard, Fulton; secretary, Mrs. Charles Jones, Lycoming; gate-keeper, F. E. Rounds. Ceres, Mrs. J. H. Mace, Fulton; Pomona, Mrs. Rose Snow, Central Square; Flora, Mrs. Eva L. Colwell, Oswego; lady assistant steward, Miss Edith Gregg, Pennellville; E. H. Benedict of Phoenix was recommended for County Deputy; Executive committee, F. D. Burgess, Phoenix; A. D. Marks, New Haven; Mrs. Jennie B. Stone, Oswego. John H. Mace was then elected delegate-at-large to the State grange to be held at Oswego in February. Otther delegates were William Guyette, Oswego; Mrs. H. J. Upton, Sandy Creek; S. D. Jackson, Altmar; Mrs. Emma Fidler, Hastings; B. L. Howard, Fulton, 2; Mrs. Guy Frary, Pulaski; T. E. Washer, Pennellville; Mrs. James H. Campbell, Altmar; Henry Myers, Bernhards Bay; Mrs. Bert Hall, Fulton; M. G. West, Oswego; Mrs. Eva L. Colwell, Oswego; Jasper Hopper, Hannibal; Mrs. Minnie Snyder, Lacona. Minutes of the meeting were read, bills paid and adjourned to meet at Oswego the second Tuesday in March, 1915.

The county tax ratio will be .72 as against .80 per 100 last year. The combined county and State ratio last year was .86 as against .73 this year. There was no direct State tax this year and the amount to be raised is much smaller, including the cost of stenographers and librarians, amounting to $1,206.57. The ratios for the towns and cities will be made next week.

The total county tax to be raised is $261,230.33 as against $272,761.91 a year ago. Oswego city pays $97,156.06 of the county tax and Fulton pays $46,807.65.

The board will probably not complete its work until week after next. Adjournment will probably be taken on December 23d, although some of the members hope to finish a week from to-day.—Oswego Times.

WORK OF THE SUPERVISORS

Want Grade Crossings Removed.

The elimination of the grade crossing on the Parish-Camden road, town of Mexico, was recommended in a resolution introduced in the Board of Supervisors at Wednesday's session by Mr. Harter of Parish. It was referred to the highway committee. The crossing is one on the Syracuse northern branch of the New York Central at a point called Red Mill. It is said to be very dangerous. The State Highway Department is asked to have the crossing eliminated.

Mr. Wallace offered the report of the committee to settle with judicial officers, showing the salaries paid to county officers and the fines collected by justices of the peace. The salary list follows:

County judge, $2,000; surrogate, $1,500; special surrogate, $150; district attorney, $2,000; assistant district attorney, $1,000; county attorney, $1,200; surrogate's clerk, $500. Over one day.

By Mr. Pierce: Appointing A. S. Barker of Orwell as a member of the Board of Managers of the County Tuberculosis Home to succeed himself, for a term of five years. Adopted.

By Mr. Buck: Fixing the salary of the stenographer of the Board of Elections at not more than $30 per month, payable monthly from the contingent fund. Adopted.

By Mr. Callison: Fixing the salary of the stenographer in the office of the superintendent of highways at $40 per month, payable monthly out of the contingent fund, such payment to cover any and all services to the Board of Supervisors or committees of that body. Adopted.

The reports of the committees on grand jurors, to settle with county clerk and to settle with superintendent of highways, were taken up and adopted.

Large Sum for Highways.

The taxpayers of Oswego county will raise $73,979 for highway purposes according to the resolution on highway levies adopted by the board of supervisors. The following list shows that the towns will raise $48,304 for highway construction; $14,150 for bridges; $4,390 for machinery, and $7,135 for miscellaneous purposes, such as the removal of snow, etc.:

Wanted—Children's Hospital

At the Thursday meeting of the Board of Supervisors, the managers of the Orwell tuberculosis hospital asked for a separate building for children and quarters for the staff and help. E. F. Moree, representing the State Charities' Aid Society, said that he knows more about the Orwell hospital than any other in the State, because he spend his summers in the vicinity, and is a frequent visitor there.

He pointed out that the fact that the average stay of the patients was 180 days was evidence that much good was being done as the patients leave with a full knowledge of how to protect themselves and the community. He said that public health had become a political issue and quoted statistics to show that in counties where the question of a tuberculosis hospital was voted on last fall the vote was about the same as that cast for governor.

Dr. Allen's medical report for the year ending September 30, 1914, is as follows:

Number of patients treated, 51; number discharged, 36; diseases arrested, 4; improved, 14; unimproved, including three who were in the hospital less than a week, 8; born, 1; died, 9. It should be stated that the deaths were of persons who came to the hospital in advanced stages of the disease. One of these died the day after arriving at the hospital. Others were there less than a week. Number in hospital, September 30th, 14.

Number of patients who gained in weight, 20; average gain, 8.6 pounds; number who lost in weight, 5; average loss, 5.2 pounds; greatest gain in weight in one patient, 40.75 pounds.

The summary of expenditures and receipts follows:

Expense—Provisions, $2,762.26; expenses of institution, $2,764.84; salaries and wages, $5,458.41; total maintenance expense, $10,985.51; new construction, equipment and repairs, $2,568.37; total expense, $13,553.88.

Received for board and care of patients, $301; amount still due, $108.58; total, $409.58. Net expense, $13,144.30. The total amount appropriated was $18,000; the amount paid out by order board of managers, $12,417.08. Balance, including receipts from patients, $5,883.92. The present resources of the farm are valued at $384.

CONSTANTIA ATTORNEY

Is Elected to Succeed Mr. Coville.

County Judge-elect Henry D. Coville presented his resignation as county attorney, to take effect December 30, 1914, to the Board of Supervisors at Thursday's session, and Supervisor William M. Gallagher of Constantia was elected to succeed him for a term of two years at an annual salary of $1,200 per year.

Mr. Nichols presented the resignation of Mr. Coville and moved that it be accepted. This was carried. Mr. Wallace offered the resolution appointing Mr. Gallagher. Mr. Barker of Orwell seconded it. The motion was unanimously adopted.

Mr. Coville has been county attorney for the past six years, or since the office was created. He was elected county judge at the last election.

Concerning the retiring and incoming official, the Oswego Times says:

"Mr. Coville has filled the office to the entire satisfaction of the county and has earned the commendation of the State examiners of opposite political faith.

Mr. Gallagher is the son of Attorney James Gallagher of Constantia and is serving his third term on the board. He has always been active in the affairs of the board and regarded as one of its most competent members.

Poor Expenses Increased.

The report of the committee to settle with superintendent of the poor was offered by Mr. Jackson and contained Superintendent Stone's report for the past year, as follows:

Expenditures—County Home and farm, $13,468.16; expended for outdoor relief, $3,698.56; Oswego Orphan Asylum, $565; St. Francis Home, $355.67; lunacy examiners, $60; Oswego City Hospital, $647.27. Total, $18,621.66.

Receipts—Levy for support of poor, 1914, $10,000; received from towns, $4,079; received from sale of produce, $1,876.40. Total, $15,955.40. Deficit, $4,000.26.

The demands on the poor authorities the past year have been extraordinary and have caused the deficit. This will be wiped out next year and leave a small surplus, as the rate charged the towns for 1914 is $2.50 a week instead of $1.50 as heretofore. But the money to pay the 1914 bills will not be available until after January 1st next. The receipts from towns in Mr. Stone's report are for 1913.

Mr. Stone reports that the toal amount expended for the support of the poor by the county, towns and cities of Oswego and Fulton in 1914 was $42,107.69.

New Pavilion at Orwell.

The board adopted a resolution offered by Mr. Parsons providing for the erection of a pavilion at the County Tuberculosis hospital to cost $8,000 and appropriating this amount. The action was unanimous and was taken in response to an appeal from the Board of Managers for better accommodations for the children and the hospital staff. This amount is in addition to the $16,000 appropriation for maintenance that has been asked for.

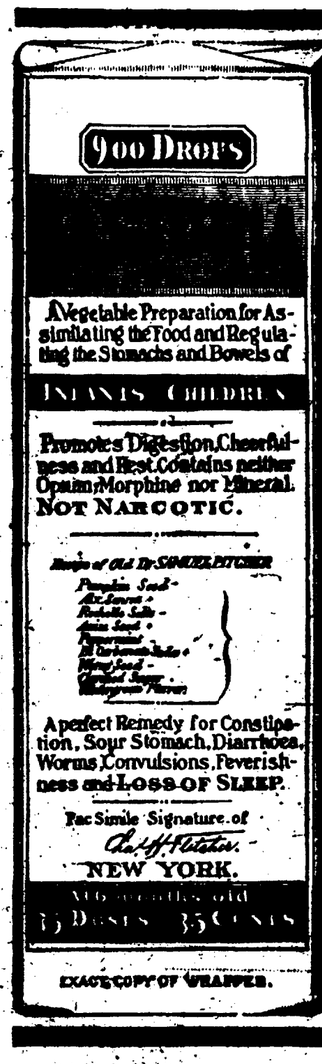
Mr. McNamara offered the report of the committee on local legislation fixing the tax on dogs in New Haven at $1 for dogs and $5 for female dogs. A resolution in accordance with the above was offered by Mr. Parsons and adopted.

By Mr. Vant: Ratifying the contract made by the commissioners of elections with F. M. Cornell of Fulton for printing the list of enrolled voters for county for $575. Adopted.

The reports of the committees to settle with pudical officers and on foreign claims were adopted."

ROUND ABOUT.

Several Wolcott and North Rose business men are looking for a smooth young man about 28 years old, 6 feet tall, with dark hair, who is known to them as Harry Reynolds, but whose correct name is unknown. Last week he succeeded in getting quite a sum of money on worthless checks from those merchants and the last heard of him was when he purchased a ticket from North Rose to Wolcott and checked his baggage to Syracuse.



Former Assemblyman Herman F. Schnirel of Geneva has returned from several months spent in Germany, Belgium and France. Mr. Schnirel acted as interpreter for the German Red Cross and having a military pass was able to get first hand information of conditions in the various armies.

Germany has millions of troops to call upon and will win, Mr. Schnirel declares. He states that the regular seventh army corps has not been mobilized and that the "Landstrum," consisting of 7,000,000 men could be mobilized and that the "Landstrum" considers these numbers he stated that there are over 1,000,000 volunteers desiring to go to the front at the present time.

Mr. Schnirel declares that everybody in Germany is in favor of the war. He also declares that Germany has lost only about 70,000 men killed, and that the number of wounded has been about 250,000, 95 per cent of whom were able to return to the ranks.

Captain George Guenther, a battle-scarred hero of the Civil war, who also served in the German army before coming to this country, is dead in Albion at the age of 90 years. In the Civil war he served with Company K, 13th New York Regiment, also with Company H, 8th New York cavalry. He was a marble cutter by trade and six years ago just after recovering from a sick spell, he carved a tombstone for himself as he felt he would soon need it. The stone bears this epitaph: "I fought in the first and last battles of the Civil War."

Several of the young married women of Penn Yan have under way a crusade which is known as the "Two-meal a day Club." The members take the ground that two meals a day, breakfast and late afternoon dinner, are enough for all except very young children. They claim to have the backing of several prominent physicians of Penn Yan and elsewhere. On Tuesday, December 1st, the law will be enforced and about twenty Penn Yan families will try it out. If successfully carried out, it should be a great boon to young married women to say nothing about their husbands.

Holds Off A Burglar.

How An Indiana Woman Was Able To Stand the Severe Strain.

Mrs. Johanna Foegely, of South Bend, Ind., recently passed through a most thrilling experience, which would be a severe strain upon any person and especially so for a woman of 72 years of age. An Indiana paper contains a long and interesting account of it, saying that the burglar would soon have ransacked the house had it not been for the coolness and presence of mind of Mrs. Foegely, who cleverly diverted his attention, even while the burglar kept a revolver at her head, commanding her to "keep quiet or I will send a bullet through you," until he feared to remain longer. This is the Mrs. Foegely who was permanently relieved of dangerous Kidney and Bladder disease in 1900, by the prompt use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, and because she possessed this good health and strength she was able to withstand the shock of her recent experience. Here is the first statement Mrs. Foegely gave, in 1900:

"For over three years I suffered from the most severe disease in my Kidneys and Bladder. Other medicines and my doctor failed to do me any good. Inflammation set in and I was obliged to stay in bed. I tried Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy and I felt better before I had taken the first bottle. I am now cured and I will always recommend it."

In 1912 Mrs. Foegely writes another letter in which she says, in part:

"My testimony is as good as ever. The doctors all gave me up and told my daughter that anyone with such Kidneys could not live. After I had taken three bottles of your Favorite Remedy I talked to one of the doctors who treated me. He saw that I was better. I told him what I was doing and he said I should keep on taking it. I took seven bottles and considered myself cured—that was 12 years ago). I am now past 72 years of age. I feel as well as ever, but a little nervous at present, owing to that burglar experience."

Brave Mrs. Foegely! She is a "little nervous," and who wouldn't be? But she had the strength to stand it and twelve years ago her doctors said she would die. She us. Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy in time and another name is added to the long list of men and women who have been permanently relieved or cured of serious Kidney, Bladder and Liver troubles by this reliable medicine. Send to-day for a free sample bottle and medical booklet containing valuable information. Dr. David Kennedy Co., Rondout, N. Y. All druggists.

Items of Interest From the Annual Report of the Superintendent of Public Schools

The annual report of Superintendent of Schools, James R. Fairgrieve, has just submitted to the Board of Education and contains many items of interest to the citizens of Fulton, some of which follows:

There are at present employed in the city public schools sixty-six teachers: High school, 15; Phillips Street school, 11; Erie Street school, 8; State Street school, 8; Oak Street school, 8; Academy Street school, 4; Fourth Street school, 4; Rochester Street school, 3; Walradt Street school, 1.

In addition to the above, there are Miss A. Lawton, instructor of manual training; E. Alta Thompson, supervisor of music; Nancy C. Cook, teachers' training class.

Janitors and Attendance Officer—Frank S. Randall, janitor Fourth Street, Rochester Street and Academy Street schools; Frank Sherby, janitor Phillips Street school; Timothy Sullivan, janitor Oak Street school, and attendance officer; S. D. Chidsey, janitor State Street school; William Gillard, janitor Walradt Street school; Albert Guernsey, janitor Erie Street school.

Number of Pupils in Schools Compared—Our city charter calls for an annual report by the superintendent to the board in December.

Oak Street Building—1909, 192; 1910, 195; 1911, 239; 1912, 259; 1913, 257; 1914, 262.

Total—1909, 1,864; 1910, 1,826; 1911, 1,907; 1912, 2,029; 1913, 2,066; 1914, 1,977.

Last year 328 pupils, owing to the crowded conditions, could attend school only half a day. One-half of these attended the forenoon sessions, the other half the afternoon sessions.

This year all but thirty-eight are attending school both sessions. These thirty-eight pupils are in the First grade at the Erie Street school. Satisfactory adjustment could not be made to take them on full time. The favorable conditions for housing school children this year comes from the parochial school, taking 147 pupils; the completion of the two new grade buildings; and the Board of Education retaining four school rooms in the Falley Seminary building.

Comparisons 1909 and 1914.

The following statistics from the annual reports to the State Department of Education made in July, 1909, and in July, 1914, show the steady growth of the schools during the past five years:

July, 1909.

Number of High school pupils (registered during the year), 289. Whole number of pupils in school (registered during year), 1,935. Number of High school teachers, 10. Whole number of teachers in the schools, 50. Number of school desks, 1,940. Aggregate days attendance, 304,560. Average daily attendance, 1,604. Assessed valuation of city, $4,381,893. Bonded indebtedness on school property, 35,350. Number of High school graduates, 20. Received from State for teachers' wages, $4,825; from State tuition of non-residents, $860.54; from State Teachers' Training Class, $650; from State Academic fund for quota and attendance (the amount received annually for attendance varies), $623.67. Tuition from districts under the contract and grade pupils, $1,714.56. School budget, $31,000. Paid for janitors and attendance officer, $2,180; for teachers' salaries, $27,757.69.

July, 1914.

Number of high school pupils (registered during year), 438. Whole number of pupils in schools (registered during year), 2,359. Number of High school teachers, 14. Whole number of teachers in the schools, 60. Number of school desks, 2,420. Aggregate days attendance, 353,170. Average daily attendance, 1,870. Assessed valuation of city, $5,688,142. Bonded indebtedness on school property, 73,800. Number of High school graduates, 32. Received from State for teachers' wages, $5,640; from State tuition of non-residents, $1,918.25; from State Teachers' Training class, $700; from State Academic fund for quota and attendance (the amount received annually for attendance varies), $471.83; from districts under the contract and grade pupils, $1,918.25. School budget, $42,000. Paid for janitors and attendance officer, $2,645; for teachers' salaries, $38,286.57.

New School Buildings

From a material standpoint, this year can truly be said to be the greatest in th history of the City School System. Two beautiful, well equipped, modern, grade buildings buildings have been completed during the past year and are now occupied.

The new Oak Street building was opened to pupils on April 14th, and the old building which it replaced has since been torn down, and the grounds graded. This was properly the first step taken in building up the City School System.

I think it can be safely said that no better eight-room grade school building for the money paid for its construction can be found in the State.

The cost of construction follows:

Receipts from sale of bonds, $22,000; from premium on sale of bonds, $140.80; from accrued interest, $451. Total, $22,591.80.

Contracts—J. C. Cummings, general contract, $19,396; Kelsey Heating Co., heating and ventilating contract, $1,349; Graning & Wellman, electric wiring contract, $240. Total $20,985.

Extras—J. C. Cummings, foundation work, $300.12; L. P. Smith, plumbing, $363.18; G. H. Maude, interior painting, $200; Kelsey Heating Co., extra work, $9.40. Total, $873.30.

Summary

Contracts, $20,985; extras, $873.30; architect and inspector, $1,313.15. Total cost of building, $23,171.45.

The Erie Street building was completed and occupied at the opening of school, September 8th. This school was much needed not only to relieve congestion in the East Side schools but in justice to the many children living in that section of the city who before were compelled to come a long distance to the Fourth Street building.

The grading around this school has not yet been completed.

The itemized cost of this building can not at this time be given, as the final estimate of the architect has not yet been received and the bonds, although sold, have not yet been taken, owing to the financial condition of the money market.

The relief which the opening of the new Erie Street school brought enabled the Board of Education to establish manual training and handwork departments, departments much needed, which give our pupils opportunities that are enjoyed by most pupils in cities the size of Fulton.

The children in two grade rooms were taken from the Fourth Street building and these rooms furnished and equipped for manual training and handwork.

Sixteen work benches were placed in one of these vacated grade rooms in the Fourth Street building and sixteen additional benches in the Phillips Street building. The necessary machinery and tools were purchased. The total expense of this manual training equipment was $1,336. Mr. Jesse A. Lawton has charge of this department and 167 pupils are taking manual training.

The other room in the Fourth Street building from which grade children were taken has been equipped for the drawing and handwork department. Twenty adjustable drawing desks, a sewing table, a metal working table, and necessary tools purchased at an expense of about $400. Miss Nancy Cook has charge of this department.

The Commercial Department

This course is now fully established—shorthand, typewriting and other commercial subjects are taught in a very effecient manner. The complete course covers four years of High school work.

Grade Libraries.

The grade libraries were started in our schools eight years ago and books have been added to them each year.

These libraries in the Fulton schools have been highly complimented by the State Department of Education for their excellence.

The lists have been carefully revised and are published in the Manual. This year the greater part of money to be used for this purpose should be spent for libraries in the rooms of the new buildings.

Evening School.

A petition signed by fifty foreigners asking for an evening school in the new Erie Street building, was granted by the Board of Education and this school was opened on November 2d with Prin. J. E. Lanigan and Mr. Jesse A. Lawton as teachers. As authorized by the board, another evening school will be opened at the Phillips Street building on January 5th.

The chief purpose of these evening schools is to give instruction to foreigners who expect to become citizens of this country.

Fulton now has five modern and well equipped school buildings in excellent condition and repair. They are the Phillips Street school, Oak Street school, Fourth Street school, Erie Street school and the State Street school buildings. The Phillips Street building should be completed according to the original plans as soon as the number of pupils attending school in that part of the city justify it.

There are two rooms in the Walradt Street building. One of these rooms is used for primary children living north of the D. L. & W. tracks. Inside toilets have been placed in this building but the room is still heated by a stove. The other room in this building but the should be fitted up for school purposes and a furnace installed during the coming summer.

The Rochester Street building has three rooms and at present 109 pupils. It has no toilet room for the boys.

The lease of the Falley Seminary property expires at the close of school in June, 1915. Four rooms are now used there for school purposes with 132 pupils.

Plans for the Future.

The proposition to purchase the Falley Seminary property as a site for a High school was sumbitted to a vote of the taxpayers on November 3d and for the third time was voted down, the vote being 427 for and 573 against the proposition. Personally, I feel that this is very unfortunate.

The following plans for the future were submitted to your Board in my last annual report and I repeat them here as they express my views in regard to the building up of our school system.

The first and important move now to make is to secure a site for a High school—and then as soon as conditions will possibly permit build a High school building suitable to the needs of our growing city. When this is done, the present building used for High school purposes can be used as a grammar school. This will give us a large grammar school building situated in about the center of school population on the East Side and another large grammar school building (the Phillips Street school) situated in about the center of school population on the West Side. This building can be completed as soon as condition necessitate thus making a building which will accommodate 800 pupils.

A careful study of this plans shows this: that as time goes on and the city grows the younger grade pupils on the East Side will be housed in the State Street and Erie Street buildings and grade pupils including all the Seventh and Eighth grade pupils on the East side will attend at the Fourth Street building. On the West Side the younger pupils will attend the Oak Street and Walradt Street schools, and in addition to grade pupils all the Seventh and Eighth grade pupils will attend the Phillips Street school. From the Phillips Street and Fourth Street schools the pupils will be promoted to the High school.

This arrangement will not only provide for the future but will permit of the introduction of departmental work in the Seventh and Eighth grades—such as is now used in the Seventh and Eighth grades in the Phillips Street school, and will also give room for the introduction of systematic class room training of domestic science and manual training in the upper grammar school grades of the city schools.

The work of securing a site and planning for a new High school building is the important matter connected with our school problems and when settled it should be for the best interests of the future as well as the present.

Stop That Cough—Now.

When you catch cold, or begin to cough, the first thing to do is to take Dr. Bell's Pine-Tar-Honey. It penetrates the linings of the throat and lungs and fights the germs of the disease. "Our whole family depend on Pine-Tar-Honey for cough and colds," writes Mr. E. Williams, Williams, Hamilton, Ohio. It always helps. 25c at your druggist.

FASHIONABLE FADS

Pretty Evening Gowns—Cotton Possibilities; the Knitting Craze.

New York—New York is knitting mad this winter. Never were spare moments so filled with occupation for the butterfly contingent.

One would think from the click of the ivory needles at Symphony Concerts, fashionable musicales, and at almost every other assemblage, that the Teutons had taken New York instead of Brussels. No doubt a lot of the mufflers will reach men in the trenches and miserable refugees without even a trench that they can call their own, and meanwhile idle fingers find occupation and big handsome knitting bags are in demand, so that part of the profit is reaching people here who need the money and can turn out artistic and practical receptacles for the bulky work. Brocades and other decorative stuffs are used for these and many of he flat, oblong shaped bags measure nearly a yard in length by half the width. Irregular, plaque shapes, with small frills at the edges, and decorations of ribbon embroidery are new and fetching, and are quite as useful for party bags as for knitting.

Cotton Fancies.

With the movement started by Gertrude Atherton—the distinguished novelist—and many other women as prominent for the wearing of cotton fabrics, there has come a decided revival of cotton fashions. Cotton shirt waists with valenciennes trimmings and dainty touches of embroidery are back in favor for suit wear, and fancy silk and cotton mixtures and mercerized cottons are increasingly worn for dainty indoor use, even for informal dances and dinner gowns. As such garments are readily made at home at very small cost, the movement meets with favor not only from people who wish to aid the cotton growers, but from those who are always on the lookout to combine economy with smartness of attire.

Pretty aprons of fancy printed cottons, with a wide up-turned hem divided into pockets that hold wool and knitting needles will prove most acceptable Christmas gifts.

The New Trains.

While very short evening dresses are the rule, trains are more in evidence than for a long time back, but these are quite separate attachments caught to the shoulders, and often not caught to the dress at any other other point. Scarfs of net or tulle jetted, or beaded, or wrought with embroideries, are first favorites for use as trains. These are thrown over the arm in dancing, and rival the graceful effects produced by Romney scarfs of tulle, now so modish. These are held in place by the bracelets or rings that finish their ends.

Crystal and pet, and onyx ornaments are all first favorites at the jewelry counters.

FULTON FIRM LOSES

Chateaugay Firm Gets Parish-Camden Road Job.

The following proposals were received by the State highway commission for constructing the Parish-Camden road, part 1, 4.79 miles in length:

Pathfinder Cors., Fulton, $46,994.20; E. J. Anderson, Albany, $49,116.05; Guy B. Dickison, Syracuse, $51,508.05; Greece Cons. Co., Rochester, $48,921; A. J. Rockwood, Rochester, $47,138.40; Wood & Tompkins, Hilton, $48,596.35; Spellman-Oliver Company, Chateaugay, $44,381.10; Chambers & Barnes, Rochester, $50,175.45; Dana W. Robbins, Inc., New York city, $45,613.85; John H. Gordon, Albany, $48,857.10; J. A. Culkin & Co., Oswego, $49,110.70; Thomas Grady, Rochester, $49,353.65; P. H. Murray, Rochester, $48,532.60; Frank E. Gore, New York city, $46,537.55; J. A. Weidman, Syracuse, $48,853.65; Samuel Bonn, Syracuse, $50,384.17; Stanley Cons. Co., Buffalo, $46,316.80; Semper Brothers, Watertown, $45,727.40; Conroy & Nixdorf, Oneida, $52,044.60; Dale Engineering Co., Utica, $48,347.50; Newport Construction Co., Herkimer, $47,322.20; Michael H. Ripton, Rochester, $47,935.60; Phelan & Sullivan, Utica, $48,402.65.

The Spellman-Oliver Company of Chateaugay, N. Y., is the lowest bidder, with a figure of $44,381.10. There was a large number of bidders and the tenders were for the most part very close. The Pathfinder Construction Company of Fulton and J. A. Culkin & Co. of this city were among the bidders. The road is partly in Oswego and partly in Oneida county and connects the villages of Parnish and Camden.

It is on this road that the grade crossing which the Board of Supervisors has asked to be eliminated is located. This work is independent of the road construction.

MEMORIAL TO DEAN BARRY

Organization to Be Formed to Build in Oswego Cemetery a Monument.

Members of St. Paul's congregation, Oswego, are perfecting plans to have erected in St. Paul's cemetery a monument to the late Very Rev. Dean Barry. It is their belief that his grave should not go unmarked, even though he did not favor display, and that his devotion to the people of the parish should receive recognition.

The Dean for some time before his death entertained the idea of erecting a suitable memorial in the cemetery as a mark of devotion to all the dead of the parish. His idea was to have erected a Latin cross, with a wreath encircling the center, signifying faith and love.

THE MENACE OF THE BIG BEAR

Russia and the Ruthenians; a Place of Pan-Slavism; Prepared by the Austro-Hungarian Consul General

Paul Kowalski of West Broadway has placed for publication the following unusually interesting phase of the great war. The article was written by Alexander von Nuber, Austro-Hungarian Consul General, for a Polish newspaper. It reveals a hidden motive and a lot of treachery by Russia's diplomats.

Count von Nuber says:

It is safe to assume that most of our readers are unaware that the Ruthenians, or Little Russians as the Russians christened them, or Ukrainians as they style themselves, are a people numbering 40 millions. The Western World hardly suspected the existence of this nation, which ranks second among the Slav; the Ruthenians have been moved to a more prominent place in European politics lately, their future destiny being one of the main causes of the present war.

Of the 40 millions of Ruthenians, more properly called Ukrainians, about four millions live in Eastern Galicia and a half a million in Upper Hungary, whereas, more than 35 millions are at home in Southern Russia in the fertile plains stretching from both banks of the Dnieper to the Don and the Black Sea. As far back as the tenth century Ukraina was a mighty country, and its capital, Kiew, then was the largest, wealthiest and the most advanced city in Eastern Europe. In those days Western Europe fully realized the Ukrainian rulers' power, foreign rulers sought their friendship. Prince Volodymir Monomach was married to Harold's, the Saxon King of England's daughter, Gytha, and his daughter, Anna, became Queen of France. After the destruction of their flourishing country by the invading Tartars, the Ukrainians came under Lithuanian, the Polish and finally Russian domination.

Russia was quick to realize that, were the national civilization of such a large population occupying the most fertile parts of the empire, allowed to subsist, this would ever be a source of danger for herself. It was, therefore, decided to de-nationalize the Ukrainians; and drastic and unscrupulous were the methods applied to this end. The very existence of the nation was denied, its language was summarily decreed to be the "Little Russian dialect" and was prohibited in schools and official life. Not content with this, official Russia prohibited the printing of Ukrainian texts, even of prayer books.

Their War Progress.

The total suppression of national existence which threatened the Ukrainians was happily averted when a fraction of them came under Austrian rule as a consequence of Poland's partition. With the constitutional freedom granted by Austria the Ukrainians in that country were enabled to maintain and develop their national existence and culture. Ukrainian schools and colleges were founded, beside many national clubs or associations for upholding the people's economic and ideal interests. Ukrainian was officially recognized as the country's language, and acts were passed in the local county councils and parliament safeguarding Ukrainian rights. The people were inaugurating a national renaissance, their culture and literature were once more going ahead, the Austrian government, well appreciating the situation, had agreed last year to the establishment of an Ukrainian university in Lemburg.

The national resurrection of the Ukrainians, though materially confined to Austria, had a moral affect far beyond the Russian borders. Comparing their lot with that of their happier fellow countrymen in Austria, the Ukrainians in Russia gave signs of unrest, and Russia had to realize that her yoke was unbearable to the people who looked to Galicia as to their "Piemont."

The Ukrainian aspirations were not noted unnoticed by the watchful Russian officials who quickly perceived that a new threat was arising to their government's despotism; nationally enlightened Ukrainians would not willingly submit to Russian oppressive rule and would even attempt to free themselves.

Official Russia then declared that the annexation of Galicia was the best course to take in order to offset the threatening danger. When this would be achieved, the time-honored Russian "a la Cosaque" methods would nip in the bud the resurrecting Ukrainian culture. These official Russian views were disseminated in periodicals and at public meetings. As long as a powerful Austria stood in the way, such theories could be advanced in speech and print, but they could not be put into practice. Since annexation by violence was not possible, one had to resort to other means.

The Ukrainian "renaissance" was declared by official Russia to be but a malicious invention of the Austrian government, nay, the very existence of Ukrainians in Galicia was flatly denied, and the Ukrainians were declared by Petersburg as Russians, Russians who who were subject to intolerable religious and national oppression! The Petersburg government gave its financial support to the recently launched "Russian-Slav Society" and "Slav Benevolent Society," both inspired by Count Bobrinski with the sole object of promoting Russian political agitation in Galicia. In this campaign, which started both on educational and religious lines, the chief Russian weapon was—the Ruble.

Plotted Against Jews.

At first Galicia was flooded by Russian emissaries; these "agents provocateurs" were entrusted with the "disaffection mission" of the poorer class of peasants who were to be promised a free hand in the partition of the dominial estates and the robbing of the Jews, once the Czar would have conquered the country. Numbers of these poor peasant's children were taken to Russia, there to be educated in convents to be fit agitators for the Russian Orthodox Church (the Ukrainians in Galicia are members of the Roman Catholic church, though they have retained Greek rites); once their education completed the "students" were sent back to Galicia with sufficient funds and in order to agitate and also to act as military spies, as the prosecutions in Marmaros Szigeth and Lemburg have amply disclosed.

Free boarding schools for poor peasant's sons were founded with Russian funds, the educational work being carried on in accordance with Russian aims. Galicia was flooded with Russian anti-American literature, the prayer books containing prayers for the Czar, and the Russian benefactors gave all these goods things free, without wanting anything in return! Even certain English newspapers were influenced so far as to publish accounts of "the unparalleled oppression of the Russians in Galacia," the authors being Bobrinski and also J. W. Birkbeck, an Englishman acting as Russia's agent for England. Bobrinski did not shrink from going to Galicia and there to speak in terms which should, had the Austrian authorities concerned not been too lenient for peaces' sake, have led him to detention for political crimes. Attempts were also made to persuade the Austrian government through diplomatic channels that peace with Russia could be maintained only if the Russian agitation in Galicia were tolerated; at the very time Petersburg's bureaucrats declared Galicia would soon be ripe for picking.

Inasmuch as public opinion exists in Russia it was carefully prepared and familiarized with the idea that war with Austria is unavoidable. This policy was succinctly expressed by Bobrinski's charateristis exclamation: "We shall not rest ere the Russian flag flies on the Carpathians!" To bring war about, and at the same time to conceal her aggressive policy, Russia started the anti-Austrian campaign in Servia. The unsuspecting reader might fancy that Russia's attitude in backing Servia is the outcome of a sincere feeling of Slav solidarity, but the initiated knew perfectly well that Russia could reach Lemberg best by way of Belgrade.

Let us finally consider what was the Ukrainians attitude when this was started. From the very first minute it was well defined and unanimously supported: "We shall fight for freedom and Austria." Immediately hostilities began numerous Ukrainian volunteer companies took the field against Russia, their archibishop in Lemberg, Count Sheptycki, having devoted his entire fortune to this purpose. The archibishop has already been made prisoner and sent to Russia, where he shall have to answer for his unswerving patriotism. Count Sheptycki will be one of the many noble victims of a just cause; the Ukrainians will hold his memory in high esteem and honor.

It is to be anticipated that the hopes of his endu ng and cultured nation will be fulfilled at an early date. Western civilization would fare all the better by it.

HANNIBAL NEWS

(Rec'd too late for last week.)

J. B. Burt has a pleasing miniature pictuure display of the Endicott, Johnson & Co. factory, located at Endicott, N. Y., in one of his windows. It is very pretty in the evening especially when lighted by electricity.

The following High school teachers were home for Thanksgiving: Miss Applegate, Onondaga Valley; Mrs. Grace Ammerman, of Fayetteville; Miss Eva Windsor, Glens Falls; Miss Grace Becker, Albany.

Mrs. W. D. Cowles is visiting her aunt, Mrs. J. E. Follett, in Auburn.

William Bisonette was the guest of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Lottie Stevens, last week.

Mrs. Edgar Barlow and children of Syracuse were guests of her parents last week.

Town Clerk Frost issued a marriage license November 28th to Miss Ruth Gifford, Hannibal Centre, and Sylvester J. Avery, Fulton.

A donation and oyster supper will be held at the Presbyterian church Friday evening, December 11th. A fine musical program has been arranged for the occasion.

Mrs. H. B. Douglas returned last week from a week's visit with her parents.

W. J. Bradt has just finished husking 1558 bushels of corn from one acre. The average yield in the U. S. is 56 bushels.

The marriage of Miss Ruth Gifford and Sylvester J. Avery occurred last Thursday.

Messrs Day and Peters have opened their store in Sodas.

Miss Merle Pooler and Fred Scanlan were married November 25th at the Church of the Immaculate Conception at Fulton. They were attended by the brother and sister of the groom, Mathew Scanlon and Mrs. E. J. O'Brien. The happy couple left immediately for Auburn, where a large reception was held at the home of the bride's aunt.

At the meeting of Golden Sheaf Grange Saturday night the following officers were elected: W. M. Fred Manning; W. O., Harvey Perkins; W. Sec., Mrs. E. L. Gardenier; Lecturer, Edgar Crofoot; W. chaplain, Mrs. C. Eldridge; W. stewart, Frank Goodroe; W. gatekeeper, Harvey Wheeler.

Another old resident passed away suddenly at his home on the Bethel road south of this village. Joel Sprague was 74 years of age, a veteran of the civil war, also a member of Golden Sheaf Grange, and for two years its master. He was born on the farm where his life was spent and which had descended to him through three generations, and has been in possession of the Sprague family over one hundred and ten years. He leaves besides his widow three sons and one daughter.

Song of welcome, school; reading, The First Thanksgiving, Ruth Brackett; recitation, Thanksgiving Joys, Gladys Williamson; reading, The Friendly House, Bryan Williamson; recitation, The Squirrel's Thanksgiving, Nora Roberts; reading, A Capital Punishment, Jessie Rogers; song, Ruth Brackett and Nellie Carter; recitation, Crickets in the Hay, Wayne Perkins; recitation, A Thanksgiving Table, Nellie Gifford; recitation, The Baby's Part, Elsie Brackett, Nellie Carter; recitation, Thanksgiving Time, Gladys Parsons; recitation, At Grandma's House, Helen Williamson; recitation, Gladys Perkins; reading, A Thanksgiving Party, Nellie Carter; closing song.

MT. PLEASANT.

(Received too late for last week.)

The Rev. Williams, assisted by pastors of adjoining churches, is holding revival services in the Hawks schoolhouse.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Bartlett entertained friends from Mexico recently.

Earle Foster, who had his new barn blown down during the recent wind storm, has it again on the foundation and is in Baldwinsville building a house there.

Almon Beardsley visited relatives and attended the board of supervisors' meeting in Oswego as the guest of Supervisor Vant.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Lewis entertained their brother and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lewis, of Baldwinsville.

Mr. and Mrs. James Cole were called to Lysander recently to attend the funeral of a relative.

Mr. and Mrs. Pike and family have moved to foreign parts quuite suddenly.

Lyman Bargey, who was killed in Fulton last week was a native of this town and well known here, where he worked in the cheese factory several seasons.

A certain young man who was calling on a certain young widow had his horse either stolen or moved by practical jokers recently and at last reports he was wandering about the neighborhood enquiring for it. Sympathy is extended.

Mrs. Fred Ives and Mrs. Muriel Osborne were recent guests of Mrs. Geo. Hutchins, who is in a critical condition.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Brown and Mrs. Sperry, who are in California, seem a trifle hard to please. They write that San Francisco was a trifle too cool in the evening and although strawberries and pomme fruits and flowers are plenty. Los Angeles is quite noisy, as many as eleven trolley cars passing their hotel in five minutes. Now it seems to us as though it was quite convenient, but perhaps we might tire of it. They are going to San Deigo next to try the place. They have seen no rain since leaving here November 5th.

The Facts About Divorce.

Ida M. Tarbell, the well known journalist, contributes to the January Woman's Home Companion an article entitled "What Women Are Really Doing"—an article in which she answers with facts and figures some disturbing questions as to the status of women in the United States to-day. Miss Tarbell has made a careful study of the Thirteenth Census in order to get at the truth in regard to marriage, divorce, child bearing and other subjects. After proving that more women marry now than did formerly, she takes up the subject of divorce as follows:

"There has been an increase in divorce. In the thirty million married women whom the census takers of 1910 reported, they found 185,065 who had been divorced. Considering the difficulties of married life, the number does not appall. It rather gives one a greater respect for human beings to see that they can handle such complicated relation with such a small percentage of disaster. There is no other human relation that can show anything like so large a statistical proof of success. The number of divorces found in 1910 is greater, proportionately, than the census takers unearthhened in 1900, still larger than they found in 1890. In each of these ten year periods there has been an increase of one-tenth of one per cent. It is doubtful if this be due to loss of faith in marriage. A proportion of it is due to a higher ideal of marriage; an unwillingness to see the relation prostituted by a dissolute, cruel, or unfaithful partner.

"A percentage is due, too, to the greater carelessness with which marriages are made under our changing social practices. We have removed largely from boys and girls the protective social devices by which we once guided their relations and choices. They go and come freely and, as might be expected, marry with less sense of the seriousness of their undertaking."

Suits growing out of the recent wreck at Granby have been instituted against the D., L. & W. Railroad Co. The amount involved is $21,000, of which $10,000 is claimed by John Robinson for the false arrest of his son, Theodore Robinson, held on suspicion of having caused the wreck. Stephen Baldwin, Joseph Decaire and his wife, Mrs. Edith Decaire, each ask $3,000 damages for alleged injuries in the wreck.

Boys and Girls Get Busy!

ONE OF THE PONY OUTFITS WILL BE ON EXHIBITION IN FULTON IN ABOUT TWO WEEKS. When the little fellow arrives the contestants will become greatly enthused and may get some of your friends to promise them their votes. Before the other contestants get them tied up with promises you would better get busy. When you ask people to trade at the stores below you are not asking them to do you a favor but you are doing them a favor instead, as each one of the stores in this contest is a leader in its respective line. They are all pledged to each other to offer special values during this contest.

There is only one way to win and that is by hard work. Your chances are just as good as anyone's else. You must work systematically. Take a paper and pencil and make a list of all your neighbors, relatives and friends, and then you and your parents and brothers and sisters should start out at once and ask them to buy everything they need from the stores in the contest and save the votes for you. Tell them how badly you want the pony, and tell them that you may lack just the amount of votes that they can give you, if they will help you out. If you fail to see them on the first attempt do not drop them but check them on your list to be seen again. Then after you have secured their promise remind them from time to time of the stores that are giving votes.

"I AM GOING TO JOIN MY COMRADES"

Were The Last Gallant Words of Captain Kochler of the German Cruiser Dresden to the German Consul at Buenos Ayres. German Cruiser Reported Sunk in South Pacific.

Valparaiso, Dec. 18.—The German cruiser Dresden is reported in a wireless dispatch received here last night to have sunk off Cambridge Island in the Pacific by the British cruiser Bristol. The dispatch says that when the Dresden was overtaken by the British ship an engagement lasting forty minutes took place and that the Bristol was badly damaged but succeeded in sending the Dresden to the bottom.

Puntas Arenas, Argentina, Dec. 16 (by Wireless to Buenos Ayres, Dec. 18).—"I am going to join my comrades," were the last words spoken by Captain Koehler of the German cruiser Dresden to the German consul here as he went aboard his vessel to sail to what he believed to be certain destruction. During the course of a conference with the consul, the suggestion was made to Captain Koehler that he better let his ship be interned, but he replied: "We will fight."

While the Dresden was here Captain Koehler gave the first authentic account that has been secured as to the Falkland Islands battle. He said:

"The German Pacific division left the Pacific to go to the Falkland Islands by way of Cape Horn. The voyage was made without incident. A little before arriving at our destination the commander of the division, Vice Admiral Von Spee, detached one of our cruisers to explore and discover facts concerning the presence of Engli'. ships in the islands. The ship returned and reported that there were two English cruisers. The admiral prepared at once to give battle to the hostile ships, issuing the necessary orders.

"Advancing toward the islands, in a little while we were able to make out the strength of the hostile forces. There were not two cruisers, but six. Our commander kept to his resolution and continued the advance.

"A little later, at the mouth of the bay, we noted two dreadnaughts of the Lion type, 26,000 tons, more or less, whose presence was unknown before.

"The conditions were magnificent. The weather was clear and calm. These conditions made impossible a combat with a chance of escape for the German fleet. Admiral Von Spee persisted in his resolution to give battle with the Scharnhorst and Gneisenau acting together, ordering at the same time the disposal of the three other units, the minor cruisers Leipzig, Dresden and Nuernberg.

"Meanwhile the two cruisers above mentioned courageously faced the English fleet. The latter was attacked by our two cruisers, while the Leipzig, Nuernberg and Dresden tried to place themselves outside the range of the enemy's cannon, the only device compatible with the circumstances in view of the number, quality and size of the English ships.

RUSSIAN WAR OFFICE ADMITS REPULSES

By FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY

Petrograd, Dec. 18.—"Persistent attacks by great masses of German troops have compelled a re-grouping of our army west of Warsaw," says the Army Messenger to-day. "The enemy is suffering heavy losses in his offensive against the Kazunpolski-Teresin-Skierniewic front, where our artillery is repulsing his massed attacks."

(This statement by the official organ of the military establishment confirms the German announcement that the Czar's troops have retreated. Kazunpolski is on the Vistula, sixteen miles from Warsaw and directly across the river from the fortress of Novo Georgiersk. Teresin is twenty-two miles west of Warsaw, and Skierniewic is thirty-nine miles from the Polish capital. This defensive line of the Russians before Warsaw is about thirty-six miles long, running from northeast to southwest, and is behind the Bzura river, which the Germans have been trying to cross for several weeks.)

Berlin, Via Amsterdam, Dec. 18.—Casualties suffered by the German, Austria and Russian armies in Poland number more than 400,000, according to a semi-official dispatch from Breslau to-day. It states that in the Poland battles alone the Russians have lost 125,000 in killed and wounded, besides enormous numbers of prisoners.

"Further heavy losses are being inflicted upon the Russians as they retreat," the dispatch adds. "Our troops are rapidly pursuing the enemy, who has been completely routed."

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Paris, Dec. 18.—All counter attacks made by the Germans in Belgian have been repulsed, and south of the Franco-Belgian frontier numerous trenches have been captured by the French according to an official statement issued here to-day.

The official statement follows: "The day of Dec. 17 was marked by progress on our part in Belgium. All counter attacks by the enemy were repulsed. In the region of Aras a vigorous offensive was made in masses.

London, Dec. 18.—Latest reports from Scarborough, Whitby and Hartlepool show that the casualties suffered by civilians and coast defense soldiers numbered 462. There were 108 killed outright and 354 wounded. Of the latter sixteen have since died, increasing the death list to 124. Five of those wounded at Scarborough are dying.

London, Dec. 18.—Nicholas Ackers, British citizen and former consul for Germany at Sunderland, appealed to-day from the decree sentencing him to death for high treason in that he sent German residents of England home to fight against the British. The court hearing the appeal was composed of the Lord Chief Justice and four other judges and constituted the realm's highest criminal tribunal.

Paris, Dec. 18.—The war has given rise to a new industry in France. Peasants follow the battle lines picking up exploded artillery shells, for which the French military authorities pay eighteen cents a piece, because they can be used again. Many peasants have gone in for "shell picking" on a large scale and risk their lives in the work.

Emden's Crew Raid In Stolen Collier

Manila, Dec. 18.—Forty men of the crew of the German cruiser Emden, who were left on Cocos Island when the Australian cruiser Sydney discovered the Emden and chased and forced her to run ashore some time ago, have captured a collier and mounted two Maxims on her and are now raiding commerce in the Pacific, according to a report received here.

The report came through officers of the British steamer Malacca, which has arrived at Jolo. The report has not been confirmed officially.

The men of the Emden had gone ashore on Cocas Island to dismantle the wireless and fled, but were unable to rejoin their ship when the Sydney appeared. The German party, which is commanded by Lieutenant von Muecke, left Cocos Island with a commandeered schooner and plenty of provisions, and also their own armed launch and two boats, according to the report. Where they captured the collier is not stated.

The Malacca reports that she steamed to Jolo without showing lights at night.

FEAR ANOTHER RAID

London, Dec. 18.—Excitement was renewed here and along the entire north seacoast of England to-day by reports that another German raiding squadron had been sighted headed for Great Britain to renew the bombardment of coast towns. The reports apparently originated at Scarborough, a dispatch from there stating that light signals had been flashed from off the coast during the night and had been answered by signals from the land.

Melbourne, Australia, Dec. 18.—An all night session of the Federal House of Representatives broke up in a riot this morning when the Speaker rebuked Liberal Leader Cook for insulting remarks, and Cook and his followers left the hall. A motion was then passed suspending Cook until he made proper apologies. The Liberal leader declined to apologize, declaring he would not sit under a tyrannical Speaker.

Washington, Dec. 18.—"If we had gone to war with Russia or the first class powers in August at least nine of our vessels would not yet be ready to fight. We are dawdling, we have following the demented policy of building warships for cold storage," said Gardner of Massachusetts in this fashion suming up the situation in the navy at a hearing in the House to-day.

After the House Rules' committee had denied Gardner a hearing on his request to name a committee to inquire into the army and navy for war the Navy Affairs committee accorded him the privilege of making a statement was a peppery one.

Berlin, Via Amsterdam, Dec. 18.—Emperor William has completely recovered from his illness and will return to the front this week, according to an official announcement today. He held a long conference with Imperial Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg on Wednesday, it is stated, [illegible] first class on the Chancellor.

London, Dec. 18.—British officers home on leave of absence or because of wounds give interesting sidelights on the war. One of them told today of the plight of Private H. Barter of the Grenadier Guards, the tallest man in the army, who has been wounded in West Flanders. When taken to the base hospital at Boulogne it was found that there was no cot in the wards long enough to accommodate Barter's six feet ten inches. Consequently the "foot" had to be knocked off one of the beds.

WAS IT MURDER?

Scarborough, Dec. 18.—A verdict of murder was returned to-day at the investigation into the death of those killed by the bombardment of the city on Wednesday. The coroner said the troops were here but the city was not fortified. Such an attack would never be made by the British and other nations do not approve of this plan of this German culture. The vedict is that those who met death was in a numerous attack."

BOTH LINES IMPREGNABLE

Terrific Artillery Duel Rages In West Flanders. Germans Making Fierce Attacks in Futile Endeavor to Recover Lost Ground

Paris, Dec. 18.—The offensive operations of the allies in Northern France are becoming more marked and the attacks of the French, British and Indian troops all the way from Warneton, on the Belgian border, to the River Oise have become more violent.

In West Flanders the Germans have been making fierce attacks in futile endeavors to recover lost ground along the east bank of the Yser canal, between Dixmude and Nieuport. South of the forest D'Houthulst and south of the Ypes-Menin road the Anglo-French forces have made slight progress. The Germans have been compelled to evacuate trenches made untenable by the French and British artillery. Near Zillibeke, Klein Zillebeke and Van Voorde, between Ypres and Menin, the struggle has cost heavily in human life.

Along a line stretching roughly through Bixschoote, Langemarck and Zonnebeke artillery duelling is in progress, punctuated with infantry charges.

Kaiser Hopes to Return to Front

Berlin (by wireless via Sayville), Dec. 18.—The health of the Kaiser is not causing alarm here. The Tribune correspondent learns from a confidential source that the Kaiser is so much improved that he expects to return to the west front in two or three days.

Paris, Dec. 18.—A Madrid dispatch published in "Le Journal" says:

"Reliable news received here says that Emperor William's condition, although recorded by the bulletins as improved, is giving great anxiety. His doctors speak of a serious sore throat, following diphtheria, which the Emperor contracted during a visit to the eastern front."

Struck a Floating Mine

Scarborough, Eng., Dec. 18.—Another steamer was blown up and sunk off the coast to-day, believed to have been dropped by the German warships that bombarded the coast Wednesday. This is the fifth vessel sunk within twenty-four hours. The identity of only three are known. Twenty men on these three vessels were lost. The vessel that went down to-day carried all her sailors. News of her loss was brought here by a launch that was too far away when the steamer was blown up to render any assistance.

FAVORED THE R.R.

Washington, Dec. 18.—A decision to the railroads handed down by the Interstate Commerce to-day, in the 5 per cent rate case, granted permission to the railroads to make increases in certain territory not to exceed 5 per cent, at the same time forbidding increase to be added to rate hitherto raised.

Commissioner Clements and Harland dissented from the opinion of the majority.

Fear is felt in Canada for the government steamer Sharon, bound from Sydney to Newport Wales. The ship is a month overdue and carried a crew of thirty men. She was in the coal trade.

AUTO BANDIT SHOT DOWN

POLICE KILL DARING ROBBER AFTER A RUNNING DUEL —POLICEMAN FATALLY WOUNDED

Cincinnati, Dec. 18.—Frank G. Hohl, the notorious automobile bandit who has terrorized this city for the past three days ended his career last night when he was shot to death by a police officer. The duel with the policeman resulted in almost fatal wounds to the guardian of the law.

During the past three days Hohl robbed two Cincinnati banks and secured $13,100, which is still missing. Officials believe money was passed to confederate during wild ride.

Yesterday morning Hohl entered the Provident Savings Bank and Trust Co., fired two shots at Cashier Edward Hughes scooped up $8,000 in currency, backed through the door, jumped into a stolen automobile and escaped. Hughes fired fruitless shots after him.

Later Hohl entered the Liberty Banking and Savings Co. Bank, ten blocks away, fired two shots at Cashier George Winters, grabbed $5,100 in currency, ran to his automobile and again disappeared. Winters was uninjured.

Clews led three policemen to an apartment in a house on West Ninth street. The door was suddenly flung open and Hohl opened fire, probably fatally wounding Policeman Edward Knoul. Escaping to the street, Hohl fled in the automobile.

In rounding a corner the machine crashed into a telegraph pole and was wrecked. Hohl opened fire on two pursuing officers, and soon fell, with four bullet wounds in his body. He died in a hospital.

U. S. Guns Trained On Mexican Camps

Naco, Ariz., Dec. 18.—An American battery was placed on the Disbee Road today, nearly three miles from Naco, but about two miles from the border in a straight line, and directly north of Governor Maytorena's headquarters.

This battery faces the front of the Villa forces besieging General Hill's Carranza soldiers in Naco, Sonora. It also faces Hill's east trenches. The guns are trained directly south.

No firing was carried on today by the Mexican factions, except an occasional shot from Hill's trenches.

Washington, Dec. 18.—With six batteries of artillery, three regiments of infantry and eleven troops of cavalry stationed at Naco, Ari., the United States to-day was ready for any action General Maytorena or his foe, General Will may take.

Neutral Shipping Suffers Severely

Stockholm, Dec. 18.—A survey of events shows that through mine disasters Sweden has lost eight ships and from fifty to sixty lives, Denmark six vessels and six lives, Norway five vessels and six lives and Holland three vessels and fifteen lives. It is estimated that the loss to Sweden in these vessels and their cargoes will amount to more than $2,000,000.

OPINIONS

Learning to Know Each Other.

In the schoolhouse in Belleville, Wis., a few evenings ago, upon motion of the Catholic priest, the Methodist minister was elected president of the community's social center for the coming winter, says the Wichita Beacon.

Then three basketball teams were formed, including the priest, the minister, the blacksmith, the editor, a farmer the keeper of the village restaurant a dentist a clothier, a teamster, a druggist, a garage owner, the banker, a hardware merchant and a house painter.

They diffused in religion in politics in incomes, in social status about as widely as men can differ. But in the common school building, in the free democracy of the social center, they agreed to lay aside their differences for the novel purpose of discovering how much good fellowship there was in meeting together, now and then as equals, as brothers.

In the democracy of play, in the democracy of frank, fair discussion of public questions, they are finding out, these differing men, of Belleville, that, as human beings they are amazingly alike, once you get below the surface.

And out of this agreeable discovery will come for Belleville, more tolerance, more kindliness of feeling, more give and take than it had ever known before. Even when they shall differ again—as, of course, they often will—it won't be with as much bitterness, as much bigotry, as much mean hate as of yore.

It's a wonderful solvent, is brotherhood.—Hamilton Republican.

The Only Remedy.

If it appears, from recent hearings of municipal or legislative committees in the East, West or South of the United States, that the interests behind conspicuous advertising signs are becoming more and more alert and energetic in defense of what they call their rights, it also appears that the public is far less apathetic on this subject than it was found to be down even to a very recent period.

* * *

The public, we think, is opposed to this form of advertising. Behind it is selfishness, backed by financial influence that takes little account of public opinion. Taxation that will operate to license billboards rather than to suppress them does not, in our judgment, merit encouragement. Such an offense to public taste, such a disfigurement of public places, such a blot on the landscape as the common advertising sign has become is not to be condoned on any terms, or tolerated at any price. In our opinion it is folly to attempt to regulate it; the only remedy is elimination.—Christian Science Monitor.

One Way to Get Better Salaries.

Edward J. Tobin, Cook county superintendent of schools, has taken a radical step to insure that rural school teachers are paid something like they deserve. He doesn't want them to be drafted to the cities the minute they become valuable to the country.

The county superintendent has nothing to do with the payment of salaries. The trustees of the school districts do that. But the superintendent is a court of last resort in one way—he must issue certificates. The teachers can't teach unless they have his imprimatur.

"I want you all to understand that I shall issue no certificates to teachers who contract to work for less than $55 a month," announced the county superintendent at a meeting of teachers in the county building.

"Something should be done to raise the standard of wages for rural teachers, and that is the only way it can be accomplished. I do not want you to think I am antagonizing you by such a stand. I am trying to help you. The past history of our school system has convinced me that the teachers prefer to work in the city and town school when the financial consideration is the same. To protect our schools it is necessary that the wage standard in the country be higher.

"But as long as some of you are willing to work for $50 a month I can easily understand how the district trustees will pay only that much. If you all hold out for $55 they will pay $55, and I propose to have you do that. If all of you do not take such a stand one by one, the better instructors will leave for more agreeable berths in the city schools. I think the trustees themselves will see the wisdom of the plan."

County superintendents all over the country, who have mourned because the rural schools lost their good teachers, have something to consider at least in this revolutionary move by the Cook county superintendent. They can fix a minimum rate and stick to it. There may be a fuss, but—Banker-Farmer.

GERMAN CRUISER INTERNED BY U. S.

Washington, Dec. 18.—The German converted cruiser Cormorant with her twenty-two officers and 355 men was voluntarily interned at Guam, Philippine Islands. The warship put in ... only short of coal, food and water. In view of Guam's remoteness from any German port the commander consented to internment.

"FEED AMERICA FIRST."

"It may be more romantic to knit for a hero on the battlefield than for a sick child in the slums of an American city," said Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, long recognized as the leader of New York and Newport's most exclusive society sets, "but I think it is time for more common sense and less sentiment. Those good people who have been touched by the stories of conditions in Europe brought about by this frightful war should not forget our own destitute and starving people, and our army of hundreds of thousands of workers who are idle at the beginning of winter."

The above holds true in our city. May the gracious ladies of Fulton who have been busily clicking their needles not forget that there are many families, little babes and old folks in this city who through the long winter months will stand in great need of food, both in spirit and body.

Ensign Fitzgerald of the Salvation Army and his good wife are deserving of the community's help. In their earnest, unselfish devotion to their great work these people stand a potent factor for good among us and may no creed, sect or individual live within bounds so narrow as to not recognize this fact.

Any contribution turned over to the army one may be sure will be carefully and wisely expended—where it will do the greatest good. Ensign Fitzgerald constantly keeps in touch with those who are in need. He sees to it personally that no one receives an over-supply at one time and nothing at another period. He acts as an employment bureau. The non-laboring factor is given a prod and the willing down-and-out character is helped to his feet.

If you do not know the Ensign, get acquainted. It will do you good—and him, too.

OUR PRINCIPLES

The first and primary duty of a newspaper is to print the news. In the performance of that duty, there ar two principles that should never be forgotten: that it prints the truth without fear, favor or bias; second, that it print, in the language of one of our esteemed contemporaries, "all the news that's fit to print." Upon its observance of the first will depend its reputation. No newspaper can succeed or become a power in any community, that allows itself to be swayed from the paths of truth and fairness in its enumeration of the events of the day. Upon its observance of the second will depend the class and character of its readers. The newspaper that expects to enter and become a source of knowledge and helpfulness to the home circles should not pander to gross tastes, and in its narration and description of unpleasant and unwholesome events should say no more than is absolutely necessary. The only excuse for the existence of a newspaper is its need. There is no greater factor in developing the resources of a community than a live newspaper. Ambitious and progressive Fulton needs the Fulton Evening Times.

Dear Kris:

As a thing of use and joy forever the Thermos bottle is unexcelled for snowshoe parties. Last winter with the first deep fall of snow a party of us went out on an afternoon and evening tramp, and say, what three Thermos bottles did to make that jaunt a success couldn't be underestimated.

As a substantial Christmas gift to the out-of-door enthusiast, or the person who must carry some lunch on "busy days" it is great!

Oh, yes! I forgot to add it is just as fine for keeping liquids icy cold, and in summer the auto trip without a Thermos in the company misses "good company."

The prices are in reach of every one.

Putnam's Drug store has the best graded line of Thermos bottles of any place in the city and too a fine line of perfumes, brushes, and leather novelties.

Christmas wishes,

YALE KRINGLE.

Schumann-Heink's Oswego Appearance.

There are many cities in America where Madame Schumann-Heink feels perfectly at home, and it seems right that she should feel so, since she is beloved by the American people, but there are towns in Germany where the name of Schumann-Heink has the power of a princess.

It has been said by musical reviewers of the German newspapers and magazines that no singer of the generation erects a greater influence with the widow of the great composer, Richard Wagner. This accounts for the number of young singers whom Madame Schumann-Heink has introduced at the Bayreuth Festival each year. It is worth mentioning that despite her German training, and name, when the great contralto was billed to sing at Bayreuth last season, her name on the poster read: "Madame Schumann-Heink, New York, U. S. A." and since Madame Schumann-Heink now has four homes in the United States, she has truly demonstrated, that she believes, in American customs and the American people.

For many years, Madame Schumann-Heink has devoted herself to concert singing, but occasionally she consents to sing to opera and then something worth while is sure to happen. It happened again in Boston last winter when the celebrated contralto was engaged to sing the role of the Witch in "Hansel and Gretel." In discussing the merits of the performance of this fairy opera, one Boston critic wrote: "Usually, the play is the thing," as Shakespeare said, but Madame Schumann-Heink is the exception. She is the attraction and the opera secondary."

There is absolutely no denying the fact, Madame Schumann-Heink is the greatest concert artist of the age and Oswego is proud that she is to be heard there so soon.

Parcels must be taken to the main postoffice or to one of the stations of the postoffice to be zoned and rated. They must not be placed in street letter or package boxes, if they weigh in excess of four (4) ounces. Parcels up to four (4) ounces in weight are chargeable at the rate of 1c per ounce regardless of the distance they are to go.

Pack and wrap parcels securely in heavy wrapping paper and tie them with stout twine. Do not seal them.

Address them fully and plainly.

Parcels may be marked "Do not open until Christmas," which will permit their being sent several days before Christmas, thereby avoiding the rush.

Insure valuable parcels. It costs 5c to insure up to $25, and 10c up to $50. Insured and C. O. D. tags may be had in advance by application at the postoffice, which can be prepared and tied to the parcels before presenting them for mailing, saving much time thereby.

If the contents of the parcel is fragile or perishable, tell the clerk so, and he will stamp it accordingly.

The People's Column

Opposed to Hammers.

Editor of The Evening Times:

Having addressed an open letter to the Chamber of Commerce development committee I now confine myself to that portion of the general public styled "Knockers."

While Fulton has perhaps as few "knockers" to the square inch as any city in the U. S., Fulton has them and like mumps, and measles at times they are very much in evidence and very disagreeable to contend with. It may be thought the writer has knockers on the brain, having alluded to the species once before in this issue in a former edition, but notwithstanding the fact that I am engaged in the hardware business and have hammers to sell, I am opposed to the use of them for knocking a good cause.

When you get a good idea in your head, dear public, knock and hammer away until you get what you go after, but beware of the habitual "knocker," the man who knocks because it has become chronic. Already we hear the sound of the little hammer, little I say because the chronic "knocker" carries only a toy hammer? Mechanics, skilled in the use of tools, pound, they never knock. So it is the unskilled, the chronic, the small man, who knocks. Already I say is heard the sound of the little hammer, knocking away at the proposed action the committee of the Chamber of Commerce may take in promoting an industrial campaign for the development of Fulton. We hear much about the Electric Light Co., being active and earnest in their desire to aid the committee in launching the development campaign. Some say don't take their money, don't have anything to do with them (the Electric Co.) presumably lest the town turn on its and make somebody pay for it. I never saw Mr. Warner of the Electric Light Co., don't know whether he is black or white, don't care, and as for Mr. Jordan, he and I are not chums, but if the Electric Light Co. offers to give five hundred or a thousand dollars I would say to the committee: take it and as much more as you can get. The Electric Light Co. expects to get their money back just as we all do through the industrial growth of the city.

If more families and more factories are brought into Fulton they will sell more light and more power, just as they will sell the merchants more electric service if our business increases; so don't hang the Electric Light Co., for offering to make a generous subscription, take their money and get all you can. Then another sound of the hammer, and in a whispered voice lest the wrong person should hear, don't let the Catholics in in this, don't have anything to do with a Catholic. The person or persons who would set up an imaginary wall in our city separating Catholics and Protestants from social relations and business dealings is bigoted—bigotry and narrow sectarianism of the most diabolical type.

Why a Catholic that behaves himself or herself is different from any one else. Did you ever see a Catholic wearing either horns or hoof? I have cherished for years friendly relations with Catholics of the most sincere nature. I have visited Catholics in their homes, I have eaten with Catholics at their tables and my table, I have even slept with a Catholic friend and the only difference noted was that my Catholic friend knelt by his bed side in prayer while seldom have I known a protestant to do the same whom I have chanced to room with. You then let us drop the Catholic issue and all join hands in one big brotherly fellowship, all hands around and good fellowship for all.

Let the chronic knocker read and heed the following copied from a Western Hardware Journal and remember also that in some towns out west they hang knockers:

The Knocker and the Booster.

When the Creator had made all the good things, there was still some dirty work to do, so He made the beasts and reptiles and poisonous insects, and when He had finished He had some scraps that were too bad to put into the Rattlesnake, the Hyena, the Scorpion and the Skunk, so He put all these together, covered it with suspicion, wrapped it with jealousy, marked it with a yellow streak, and called it a Knocker.

This product was so fearful to contemplate that He had to make something to counteract it, so He took a sunbeam and put it in the heart of a child, the brain of a man, wrapped these in civic pride, covered it with brotherly love, gave it a mask of velvet and a grasp of steel and called it a Booster, made him a lover of fields and flowers and manly sports, a believer in equality and justice, and ever since these two were, mortal man has had the privilege of choosing his associates.—Copied.

WAR ROYALTY AND BASEBALL

League On Continent Would Have Averted War; Peace Wherever Game is Played

By FRANK G. MENKE.

New York, Dec. 18.—There would not have been any general war in Europe if baseball was played there as generally as it is in America, according to a Harvard graduate who spent several years abroad.

Writing to the Harvard Alumni Weekly, he said, in part:

"If there had been a regular baseball league in Europe with teams in London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna and Antwerp, like we have in the big cities here, the fans never would have tolerated the breaking out of this war during the baseball season. They would have forced the crowned heads to put off hostilities until the world series was over and by that time the excited royalty would have had a chance to cool its heels and there would not have been a war."

The writer adds that baseball has done more to civilize the Philippines than the American army, the constabularies and the missionaries put together.

Freddie Welsh, lightweight champion of the world, has lost his drawing power in this country. Welch came here touted as the most scientific boxer of the age, yet he has been outboxed twice by American fighters who make no pretense of being more than ordinary boxers.

Welsh, as a boxer, has been overrated. He does not compare with Packey McFarland and Mike Gibbons. Welsh has a good defense but his punches are woefully lacking in steam. The one thing in which Welsh is far superior to other lightweights is that he can run faster.

Considerable opposition has developed over the rule permitting a kick for goal after touchdown but it is unlikely that the football rules' committee will abolish it at the meeting this winter.

The argument is made by fans of the rule that there is nothing spectacular about a kick after touchdown. That's true. But the result of a game often depends upon the success or failure of a kick. Skill, coolness, a perfect eye and kicking judgment are necessary in the making of a successful goal kick after touchdown. Furthermore, the players are given a chance to catch their breaths while the preliminaries of the goal kick are taking place.

The old umpire stars are passing. Jack Sheridan, ranked as the dean of arbitrators, is dead. "Bob" Emslie is aging, "Hank" O'Day may not return, and "Silk" O'Laughlin, because of added years, has lost his former activity and may quit the diamond game soon.

The St. Paul club in the American association is said to have lost $50,000 during the 1914 season, and the losses of the Indianapolis club were around $40,000, according to the same source. If these figures are approximately correct it shows that the attendance in the American association last year was far under those claimed by organized baseball claims.

St. Paul carried an average of 22 men during he season at an average salary of $2,100. That would mean $46,200 for salaries. The travelling expenses probably totalled $12,000. The incidental expenses of the club including salary of officials, rentals, interest, etc., probably were about $17,000 more. That would make a grand total of about $75,000.

If the net losses were $50,000 that means the entire income for the season was only $25,000. Figured on the basis of 154 games, it means that the gross receipts per day for the club was only about $160.

The reason that Yale is convalescing so rapidly from severe injuries it received on November 21st when it was run down by the Harvard juggernaut, is because its 1915 outlook is brighter than any Yale outlook has been in six years. Not since the days when Ted Coy was a freshman has Yale had such a bright future as it has now with six of its 1914 regulars seasoned and ready for 1915.

There may be enough money in the reserve fund of the university of Pennsylvania to build that 100,000 seating capacity stadium that they are talking about, but those who saw the Army-Navy game on Franklin field are inclined to believe that the Pennsy people wouldn't let loose of it for such a purpose. They are too economical.

The U. of P. folks who had charge of the Army-Navy game were so economical about it that they failed to whitewash the yard lines. Whitewash would have cost about 10 cents. Also they used an announcing board which seemed to have been lettered about six years ago and which hadn't been retouched since. Retouching would have cost about 25 cents.

Baseball Chat.

Larry McLean, of the Giants, is hoping that he'll be traded to the Yankees. If he isn't he may jump to the St. Louis Federals, which are owned by Otto Stifle, brewery proprietor.

"Germany" Schaefer has been released by the Washington club. Alas poor Yorick, we knew you well!

Having run out of cruel words to say about the Federals, Garry Herrmann has begun picking on Johnny McGraw.

"McGraw's proposed action of taking fifty ball players to the training camp is utterly absurd," says Garry. Did jealousy inspire them weirds, Mister Heiman?

A perfect paradox:

"Walter Johnson was about through as a pitcher, anyway. Just before he jumped to the Federals, the Washington club offered him a three year contract calling for $16,000 a year"—Ban Johnson.

Another perfect one:

"There is not much lost by Johnson's action in jumping to the Federals. Johnson ranks as one of the greatest pitchers of all time."—Ban Johnson.

Atrocity commission, attention!

"The Federals are dead."—Garry Herrman.

Probably the reason that Sherwood Magee is reluctant about jumping to the Federals is because there are several umpires in the National league that he hasn't soaked on the beezer.

A former ground keeper for the Naps is 81 years old. He expects to live 19 years longer, but hopeful as he is about the future, he will not say that he expects to live long enough to see a Cleveland team win a pennant.

Reno, Nev., Dec. 17.—Kid McCoy, after four years absence from the ring will stage a "come back" here tonight when he meets Anton La Grave of San Francisco in a ten round bout. McCoy has been in training for six months.

Chicago, Dec. 17.—Waivers have been asked on more than half the Cubs now listed on the 1915 roster. Roger Bresnahan admitted as much today, prior to leaving for Toledo. This move leaves 17 players who are supposed to be in good standing.

* * *

Chicago, Dec. 17.—Decision regarding a Maroon-Dartmouth game for next fall, rests with the University of Chicago athletic board of control. Coach A. A. Stagg has received a letter from Walter McCormack of the Dartmouth alumni association in Chicago offering a 1915.

"We will fight the Federals to a finish."—Garry Herrmann.

DR. HINMAN TO APPEAL.

Dr. Hinman's attorneys will make an appeal from the verdict. Attorney Barnum is to apply for a certificate of reasonable doubt, pending an appeal from the verdict of the jury.

The appeal does not act as a stay of sentence and at the time sentence is pronounced the bail is canceled unless the defendant has secured a certificate of reasonable doubt.

SHERIFF TO REPLACE OSWEGO COUNTY TURNKEY

It was rumored about town to-day that Frank Gegon, of Fulton, turnkey at the Oswego County jail, will be replaced by Sheriff William L. Buck's son. Jailor George Simmons of Fulton, will be retained under the new administration.

The New York Stock Exchange speculators talk war and the security prices suffer. Yesterday the sales were a little over 100,000 shares.

Holiday trade better in commission houses.

ABOUT THE COUNTY

At the annual meeting of the Presbyterian church, Mexico, a resolution was unanimously adopted to add $200 to the present salary received by the Rev. D. L. Roberts, making the salary for 1915, $1,200. It was also voted to pay him an additional $100 for the past year. This action is eminently fitting, as Mr. Roberts is an indefatigable worker, an excellent pastor and an able preacher.

Papers incorporating the new parish at Mexico were filed last week, with the clerks of Oswego and Onondaga counties. These papers are also filed in Albany with the Secretary of State. The new parish will henceforth be known as St. Mary, Star of the Sea. The incorporators are the Rt. Rev. John Grimes, D. D., Bishop of Syracuse; Very Rev. M. Clune, Vicar General; the Rev. W. H. McCormick, Pastor; Julian Vault, treasurer; Louis Branche, secretary.

DISPUTED HUNTER CLAIMS TO BE HEARD TUESDAY

(Palladium.)

Next Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock Special Master in Bankruptcy Stone will continue the hearing in the matter of the disputed claims against the Hunter Arms Co, made by the Hunter Fan and Motor Co. and several members of the Hunter family.

A transcript is to be taken from the books of the Arms Co. and the Fan and Motor Co in an effort to find where the discrepancy in regard to the amount of the indebtedness of the former to the latter occurred.

The Fan and Motor Co., through James C. Hunter, says that there is still owing to it from the bankrupt Hunter Arms Co. the sum of $41,375.83. In the last year of its existence Mr. Hunter swore the Arms Co. borrowed $60,000 or $80,000 from the Fan and Motor Co., a part of which was repaid.

He claimed that for several years when there was a dividend the Arms Co. would credit the Fan and Motor account and charge it. The dividends were paid out of the funds of the Hunter Arms Co.

William Hunter put in a claim for $18,508.72 alleged to be due to himself on dividends and running accounts with the Hunter Arms Co. and for $4,966.37 for his wife, Leona Hunter, for money advanced the company from her own personal resources inherited from her father. Mr. Hill said that he believed the objections to Mrs. Hunter's claim would be withdrawn. Thomas Hunter offered the claim of his mother, Mrs. Mary Hunter, of Sterling, N. Y., for $1,857.67, the balance of her drawing account with the Co.

Attended S. O. P. Banquet.

A number of Oswego county Republicans were in attendance at the Republican dinner in New York last night, among them being Congressman Mott, Speaker Sweet, County Chairman W. C. Richards and Dr. M. J. Terry of Pulaski.

Johnston Case Settled.

All parties concerned have filed a consent in United States Court at Utica for the dismissal of the bankruptcy proceedings against George Johnston of Fulton. Judge Ray orders the bond of $25,000 of Maurice M. Conley, the receiver, to be discharged. Besides the receiver, the consent is signed by George W. Fanning, the receiver's attorney; F. T. Cahill, the attorney of the creditors who wanted to throw Johnston into bankruptcy; and William S. Hillick, attorney for Mr. Johnston.

The case is now apparently settled.

Directors Elected.

The report of the inspectors of election of the annual meeting of the Fulton Heat Light & Power Co., filed today, shows that the following were elected directors. J. R. Sullivan, R. J. Pendergast, Edward Quirk, A. W. Wilson, L. W. Emerick, C. E. Nellis, H. A. Lewis, G. N. Tidd, A. Parshall, M. J. Warner and H. M. Whiting.

Sold Shares Unauthorized

A preliminary injunction restraining Edward Quirk of this city from disposing of certain mortgages was secured by James Brown, of Philadelphia, Pa. The injunction was issued by Federal Judge Ray. These four bonds are for $2,500 each. Brown has brought suit to recover certain property and for an accounting against Quirk.

It is the claim of Brown that Mr. Quirk sold 19,600 shares of Mexican Metal Co. without his consent.

The shares and bonds were up as collateral for loans. On the other hand it is the claim of Mr. Quirk that Brown owes him $4,574. The injunction will stand until the suit settling the dispute is tried out.

A. T. Jennings is the plaintiff's lawyer, while Allen J. Baker of Syracuse represents the defendant.

HOSPITAL APPROPRATION

County Tuberculosis Hospital to Set $15,600 for 1915

Oswego, Dec. 18.—Patients at the County tuberculosis hospital at Orwell will be well cared for during the ensuing year, as the Board of Supervisors at their regular session appropriated $15,600 for the maintenance. The money will be in charge of the Tuberculosis hospital auditing committee.

A resolution also was adopted authorizing the county treasurer to issue certificates of indebtedness for $5,000 to pay court orders and Tuberculosis hospital orders up to March 1, next year. The certificates will carry interest at 5 per cent.

The Highway committee reported favorably on a resolution providing that the highway and the elimination of the grade crossing on the Parish-Camden road at Red Mill in the town of Mexico. These matters will be taken up with the State Highway department.

A resolution was passed asking that the law governing the compensation of supervisors be amended to provide as follows: The salary of a supervisor to be $200 per year with fees for extending taxes, $3 per day for attending special sessions and mileage; $3 per day for services on special committee with allowance for the necessary expenses.

Chairman E. L. Vincent appointed a committee to take charge of the work of making necessary changes in the Special Term room at the Court House in which the Robinson law library is to be located.

TRUST CASE UNDER THE BROOKS' LAW

Cortland, Dec. 18.—County Sealer of Weights and Measures Charles R. Lord made his report at the meeting of the Board of Supervisors to-day. The total number of weighing and measuring devices tested during the year was 3,896, of which number 3,863 were found correct and the remainder were condemned.

There was one prosecution under the general business laws for violations, which is now in the hands of the Attorney-General. The case is the first to be taken up under the Brooks' law.

The 1914 report of the State department of Weights and Measures gives Cortland county an average of 97 2-3 per cent in the apparatus that was tested by the deputy state sealer who made inspections here.

A. D. Jenny Dead.

Attorney A. D. Jenney of Syracuse, well known to the members of the Fulton Bar association died at his home in the Salt city yesterday.

Mr. Jenney was attorney for the Lackawanna and he transacted business in this city on many occasions.

Death was due to heart trouble. He noticed a break in his health in September, when he complained of exhaustion after arguing a case in Oswego. The funeral will be held Saturday.

SUGAR EXPERTS FROM U. S. BREAK RECORDS

Washington, Dec. 18.—Figures made public by the Bureau of Domestic and Foreign Commerce on export of sugar during August, September and October illustrate strikingly the war demand for food products on the United States.

Nearly 230,000,000 pounds of domestic refined sugar were exported from continental United States during the three months ended October 31, 1914, or more than 10,000,000 in excess of the entire exports in 1910, the high record year of the last quarter century.

AT THE QUIRK

On Monday afternoon and evening, Dec. 21, the attraction is the musical comedy "Don't Tell My Wife." This company is the original New York cast and the play is just what the title reads, a big screaming comedy in three acts, full of witty lines, absurd situations, screaming complications, pretty girls with an endless chain of laughter. The company carries a complete set of special scenery and electrical effects. During the performance singing and dancing will be introduced and "The Big City Quartette" will be in popular songs. The plot of "Don't Tell My Wife," is a story that is absolutely wholesome and clean, interesting and full of surprises and the situations are genuinely comic. It is bound to make you laugh. If you don't want to laugh don't see this great comedy. The prices are: Mat., balcony, 10c, lower floor, 15c.; Night, 10-15-20c. Tickets now on sale.

The prima donna, Miss Grace Farnham, has a full rich contralto voice of remarkable range and makes a decided hit.

2,000,000 Fire Loss

Pottsville, Pa., Dec. 18.—A large part of the business section of this place was destroyed yesterday with a loss estimated at nearly $2,000,000. Almost an entire block in the heart of the business section was burned. The fire was the most disastrous Pottsville has ever known. It started about 3 o'clock in the Woolworth Novelty store and burned in all directions.

The Academy of Music, Britton Hoffman Co. Furniture store, J. Miehle and Son Department store, Cowen Dry Goods and C. W. Morris ner estate, hatters, were burned to the ground. A dozen buildings were partly destroyed. The fire is still burning, but is under control. Lack of water pressure, it is alleged, permitted the fire to spread rapidly.

ADVOCATED PUBLIC MARKET

Ezra Tuttle, for more than 30 years a practicing lawyer in the metropolis, recently appointed Deputy Commissioner of Foods and Markets, a department recently created by Governor Glynn spoke before the audience of the Farmer's Institute Thursday. Mr. Tuttle who was a former resident of Oswego county said that the object of this commission is to secure a more adequate price for the producer and a more reasonable price for the consumer. The chief means for remedying the outrageous price conditions which now exist according to Mr. Tuttle is the establishment of public markets for the farmers. He advocated a market for Fulton. Editor Dillon of the Rural New Yorker is commissioner of the new department and a more abler man could not have been selected.

FULTON MILK PRICE LOW.

Local Wholesalers Urge Adoption of Uniform Price.

It is the purpose of Oswego County farmers to perfect their dairymen's association at a meeting to be held at Grange Hall to-day at two o'clock so that a uniform price for milk be established.

Wholesalers of milk in this section claim that they are not receiving sufficient rates, citing the difference in prices between milk sold here and in northern New York. Jefferson and St. Lawrence county dairymen realize $2 per hundred pounds while the local figure is only $1.80.

John Y. Gerow of Washingtonville, head of the general dairyman's league will deliver an address Friday on "The Merits of the Dairyman's League" and President S. A. Rappole of the Fulton branch will preside.

Mr. Gerow will also discuss the new milk law, which provided for the issuance of new permits to dealers on March 31, 1915.

ROWE FOR POSTMASTER

Oswego, Dec. 18 County Judge Louis C. Rowe is the latest spoken of in Democratic circles for the position of postmaster.

The present incumbent, J. B. Alexandra, editor and publisher of the Oswego Times, will retire in the near future.

Judge Rowe is a former postmaster under the Democratic leadership of William A. Poucher. This is the only plum that the Democrats have to offer to a local man, and it has been much sought for by men who are reputed to be the most prominent in Democratic circles. Judge Rowe was defeated in the last gubernatorial election for the office of county judge. Although defeated by County Judge-elect Henry Colville of Central Square, one Republican nominee, Judge Rowe ran ahead of the Democratic party in this city by 1,700 votes. He lost out in the county. He has a host of friends in the Republican and Democratic parties that would like to see him appointed by President Wilson to the postmastership.

New Under-Sheriff.

Supervisor Richard Schultz of Oswego City has been appointed undersheriff to succeed John Dennis of that city. The position carries a salary of $1,000. Sheriff William L. Buck has ten other deputies to appoint.

Backfiring.

A man who recently had his automobile destroyed by fire caused by "backfire" could have averted the fire and he had more mechanical experience. That a man experienced in the machinery of an automobile could have averted it by throwing the engine on the battery. Blanking the magneto, and the reversal of the clutch would then exert such a pressure on the radiator that the water would be forced along the casing of the tube from which the back fire flashes. This will at once extinguish any ignition that comes from the back fire and another any possible flame coming from a leakage of gasoline.

Dear Kris:

As a hint I would suggest that everybody try Bennett's Clothing Shop at Cristmas time. If the shirts, hosiery and handkerchief sets shown me there are not just the snuggest suggestions for us, I am no judge. Perhaps mother has noted that my overcoat is about gone up Salt river, and I wouldn't in the least object to having a mackitaw like uncle Joe's. He told me his coat came from the Bennett Clothing Shop. I like to trade at Bennett's.

Christmas wishes,
DAD KRINGLE.

FASHION HINT

By JUDIC CHOLLET

It is not often that one pattern can be made to serve two entirely different ends, but here is a coat that can be made with a tunic to wear over a plain skirt or without the tunic to wear over a fancy skirt, and the difference is so complete that it scarcely would be recognised as fundamentally the same.

The short double breasted coat is much liked for the tunic skirts and for the draped skirts that still keep their place, and the coat with the open tunic is one of the newest of the sort.

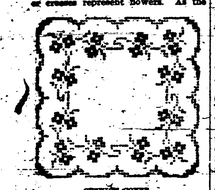
The model, while it includes all the latest features, is eminently a simple one, for the seams to the shoulders mean an easy fit.

The tunic when used is joined to the lower edge and the model will be found an excellent one for all the fashionable serges, for the broadcloth that is so much liked, as well as for gabardine, wool velours and the like.

For the medium size the coat with tunic will require six yards of material twenty-seven inches wide, with one-eighth yard of velvet for the collar; the coat without tunic three and one-half yards twenty-seven inches wide.



This May Manton pattern is cut in sizes from 34 to 44 inches bust measure. Send 10 cents to this office, giving size, and it will be promptly forwarded to you by mail. If in haste send as additional two cent stamp for better postage. When ordering use coupon.

Her Convert to the Cause

He Was an Apt Pupil in Two Ways.

By AGNES G. BROGAN

"I am glad you are interested, my dear," said Mrs. Brentwent. "Young and charming women are needed to keep up enthusiasm in the cause."

Bettie glanced admiringly into the older woman's face. "It was all so lovely," she murmured. "The flashed lights and you, with your silvery hair and velvet gown, making that wonderful speech. Indeed, I was quite thrilled."

"Good," laughed the speaker of the afternoon, "and prettily said, Miss Bechtel. Won't you come to our open meeting tonight and inspire others? The fathers, brothers and sweethearts are invited, for, between you and me, my dear, notwithstanding our boasted independence, it is the men's assistance which we need and must have."

So Bettie gladly agreed, bursting in upon her astonished family a short time later in a state of jubilant excitement.

"I am a suffragette," she explained, somewhat incoherently, "and it's the finest thing in the world. Hereafter I shall have a voice in matters which concern me, and men shall not entirely manage my affairs. I am going to another meeting tonight, Dickie," she went on, "and you will have to bake me."

Her brother rested knife and fork to look at her. "I have an engagement," he began tentatively.

"What time?" the sister asked.

Dick consulted. Lectures and things of that sort usually opened at 8 o'clock. "Seven-thirty," he answered briskly.

Bettie seated herself at the table. "Then you need be only half an hour late for your engagement," she remarked pleasantly.

"But how will you get home?" Dick grumbled. Bettie smiled in the direction of her father.

"Oh, dad will attend to that," she said. Father shook his head.

"I'm afraid I can't make it, Bess," he said apologetically. "The directors' meeting is called for 9:30, and we seldom finish business until a late hour."

"You can be excused," this tyrannized young woman assured him, and so it was settled. Mrs. Brentwent met her escort at the door.

"So good of you to come," was her greeting. "We are going to have a large, representative crowd and some brilliant speakers. Let me introduce you quickly, then, when you have found a disinterested person, endeavor to enlighten him in the cause. Your bright eyes of yours could convince a man of anything you choose," she added teasingly.

Bettie had forgotten half the murmured names before the round of introductions was accomplished; but she found herself presently, seated at the rear of the spacious hall, with a good looking young man as companion. He was horribly frank—this young man—and ingenuous.

"Mrs. Brentwent mentioned you as a friend of many years," he said. "That also applies to me—and—and—we have said plenty of her goodness."

"Perhaps I may have helped you," Bettie suggested with a sidewise glance, but the young man shook his head. "I should have remembered if you had," he answered meaningly, and both laughed.

"I think I never saw so many beautiful women gathered together in spots here tonight," the young man continued.

Bettie leaped forward eager for a discussion. "That," she explained, "is because they are interested and enthusiastic. All suffragettes are beautiful."

Her companion shook his head decidedly. "I have attended other meetings," he replied.

"You are prejudiced," Bettie accused.

"Not a bit of it," her companion retorted. "Why, my own sister is an ardent worker for the cause."

"And she has not convinced you?" Bettie incredulously exclaimed.

The young man laughed. Eleanor couldn't convince me in a thousand years," he said; "she's too illogical."

Bettie bestowed a contemptuous glance upon him. "There is no one so blind as those who will not see," she quoted.

The provoking young man wheeled about to regard her amusedly. "I am willing to consider open every subject," he answered. Bettie studied the frank, good natured face reflectively. Here would be a man worthy of her mettle—manly, forceful, with a magnetism of personality that drew one against one's protesting will to look again and still again into the sincere, dark eyes. At home in the corner of her desk was tucked an instructive book which Mrs. Brentwent had edited for the cause. She might look it over before tomorrow evening and then—

"Splendid!" said Bettie, "one is not in sympathy with a certain movement because one does not fully understand its purpose. Now, if I could prove to you the benefit of suffrage, could explain its many—"

"You could," the young man interrupted with surprising readiness; "I'm sure you could. May I call some evening and learn how things stand in the suffrage?"

"May I ask you to wait while I restore your property?" the speaker continued. The pride and dignity have suffered sufficiently in this sudden, hasty exit from the hall without being further obliged to descend bending "over the stairs."

A smile trembled at the corners of Bettie's lips; then she dimpled merrily. "You are not obliged," said Bettie.

"I—am," positively declared Mr. Brown. When he had carefully wrapped the cloak about her shoulders he still lingered. "I have a dinner from Miss Stuyvesant," he said, "and—you are elected delegate to the convention at Brentburg tomorrow, while I am honored as chosen speaker; therefore we shall have to postpone that impressive meeting at your home—unless you would be so kind as to enlighten me during the journey."

There was no reply.

"I have been called a delightful travelling companion," modestly suggested Mr. Brown. He bent to look earnestly into the girl's averted face. "You will go?" he begged.

"But I do not understand the duties of a delegate," she objected.

"A delegate's chief duty," Mr. Brown informed her, "is to see that the speaker is well entertained."

"Indeed?" questioned Bettie.

"Yes," answered the speaker. For a moment their eyes met in laughing challenge; then the girl's lowered before something softly pleading in his own.

"I will go," she said.

And long after the door had closed upon her slender figure the young man stood lost in reverie.

Mrs. Brentwent just begins the journey," he murmured happily.

The convention at Brentburg was eminently successful. The convention hall was crowded and the enthusiasm was at fever heat. Mr. Brown took a prominent part in some of the discussions and gave several addresses. Bettie's attention was fixed upon him with ever increasing admiration.

All things must have an end, and so had the convention. Bettie remembered that the next evening she was to convert Mr. Brown to the cause and wondered if he would appear for the hour appropriate for an evening call approached, dressed in her most becoming costume, she awaited the coming of the man to whom she was to explain the doctrines of equal suffrage. When the doorbell rang she was quite in a flutter.

"Mr. Brown," she said, "I think it was very mean of you to deceive me as you did."

"Had I disclosed your mind of your error I should not have enjoyed this call."

When Mr. Brown left Bettie that evening at a late hour she had converted him, but not to the cause of woman suffrage. He had become convinced that he wanted her for his wife.

AGNS CO-OPERATION.

Chamber of Commerce Will Investigate Worthiness of Solicitors.

The Utica Chamber of Commerce asks that the business men co-operate with its committee about to be established for the purpose of supervising all solicitations for money from the business men of the city. The idea is to prevent fraudulent and wasteful requests for money, by requiring any solicitors for money, advertising or any other purpose, whether by local or out of town solicitors, must have the approval of the Chamber of Commerce through the new committee, which is to have the matter in charge, and will investigate the claims that the solicitor may have and pass upon the worthiness of the proposition.

In some cities the business men get together on this proposition and do no advertising, except in newspapers, except on endorsement of schemes by their association's representative. They even extend it to the purchase of tickets for benefits and similar entertainments, which are common about election time in many places.

"ORDER ORANGES" SLOGAN

Mrs. Julian Heath Has Plan to Aid Growers.

"Order oranges!"

This is the new slogan of the Housewives' League. The appeal to buy a box of oranges was sent to all members of the league all over the country by Mrs. Julian Heath yesterday. Mrs. Heath said that the National Executive Committee of the league had received hundreds of letters from citrus fruit growers, saying that their plight is serious. The orange and grape fruit crops are heavy this year, but the fruit is not moving. The orange growers need the help of the Northern consumer, just as the cotton growers did.

"Buy a box of oranges." If you cannot buy a box, buy a dozen," Mrs. Heath appeals.

Black Velvet Hats Enhance The Beauty of the Complexion

VELVET hats seem to have completely captured the hearts of fashionable women. They are, worn everywhere. Truth to tell, there is something exceedingly fascinating about them. Contrasted with the soft black of the velvet, the complexion takes on a distinct clearness which no cosmetic could impart. The somberness of the black is relieved by touches of color such as is imparted by the cluster of burnt-orange cockades fastening the upright feather novelty which adorns the shapely turban illustrated. While entirely in black, the other is a smart affair for a young woman. It has a sloping crown and rolling brim. The top of the crown is banded with grosgrain ribbon and long black feather fancies which curl in opposite directions.

The most popular hats are made very largely of black velvet, and many of them are trimmed with silver or gold roses. There have been many predictions that metallic fabrics would come into high favor, and the cross on the new hats justify them. They are very attractive—those velvet hats with silver roses or silver binding or braid about the edge.

No longer is a hat loaded down with feathers or with ribbons, and no longer is the trimming a separate and distinct feature of the hat. The feather or the ribbon should be essential to the effect which is desired. It must be indisputably a part of the hat's line. One now finds that, instead of making the hat more elaborate, the feathers give a desired height, or they are necessary to the abrupt downward slope of the brim, or perhaps, giving seemingly one thing off, they are a necessity because by unusually sloping brows. To remove a bit of ribbon or feather where it juts from the side of the brim would be to alter completely the meaning of the creation.

DON'T TRUST THE PRUSSIANS

Bavarian Commanders Warn the French During Lull of Battle. Gallant French Sergeant's Deeds

By R. FRANKLIN TATE

(Special Correspondent of the International News Service and London Daily News.)

Paris, Dec. 19.—An aviator who has just returned from a part of the front where the French are, or were, opposed by Bavarian troops, tells of an extraordinary sort of entente over a spring between the lines.

It is the only spring of fresh water in the neighborhood. At first by tacit consent French and Bavarians drew water at different hours without molesting one another. Gradually they become more friendly, chose the same hours, exchanged the time of day and offered one another tobacco. They even took coffee together sometime. All the while the Germans regularly destroyed a defence work which the French regularly reconstructed day by day, and the French destroyed a redoubt which the Germans as often rebuilt.

One day two German officers, unarmed, left the trenches, and held up their hands. They were met by two French officers to whom they proposed that each side should leave the other in enjoyment of his works, for it was absurd to go on indefinitely destroying the same construction.

"Done," said the Frenchman.

Before separating, the officers exchanged newspapers, and one of the Bavarians said: "Our time is up. We do not know what troops will take our place, but if they are Prussians I advise you not to trust them." "By and by," he added, "if they are Prussians, we will let you know by sticking bits of white paper on the barbed wire defending our trenches."

Sergeant Maginot, who is an ex-Under Secretary of State, deputy for Bar-le-Duc, and one of the tallest men in France (he stands over six foot six inches), was recently awarded the military medal for conspicuous bravery, and is now lying in hospital at Verdun gradually recovering from his very severe wounds.

M. Maginot, who knows every inch of Loraine, commanded a section of volunteer scouts. On Nov. 9 while reconnoitering by an outpost of German infantrymen, who opened fire killing four of the scouts, Sergeant Maginot, who is a fine shot, sought to cover the retreat of his men. As the Germans advanced he fired and two dropped. Immediately afterwards he himself was hit by a bullet which shattered his thigh bone. He fell but picked himself up again, fired his remaining three or four shots, and managed to retreat some fifty yards under a hail of bullets. Here a sound shot took effect, this time in the kneecap of the other leg. Still he struggled on, and finally reached a rock behind which the survivors of his little band had taken refuge.

It was then 8 o'clock in the morning, and for the whole of that day the Germans vainly strove to surround the handful of Frenchmen. Four or five times they got within 40 or 50 yards, but as often they had to retire with a loss of six or seven men.

Maginot and his men in this way held out until dark, when they were able to crawl towards the French lines. Two men attempted to carry the wounded sergeant by using their rifles as a stretcher, but his gigantic bulk was too much for them, and at last they had to drag him along by hands. In spite of the agony he was enduring Mr. Maginot did not lose consciousness, and when help arrived and the Germans were once more pursuing, he continued to give his orders.

Of the little party of eighteen, five were killed and seven wounded. The Germans did not make a single prisoner.

The above story is told by Sergt. L——, who was one of the party.

BRITISH CENSOR TO ENJOY A HOLIDAY.

London, Dec. 18.—The Official Press Bureau has issued the following announcement to the press through Sir Frank Swettenham: "The present intention is to close this office from 2 p. m. on December 24 to 9 p. m. on December 25. Between those hours and dates no news will be issued to the press and no cable messages or press matter will be censored. I am to express the hope that this proposed arrangement for a partial observance of Christmas Day will not cause you any serious inconvenience."

Another Threat at England's Shores.

(New York Tribune.)

The cruiser raid off the east coast of England is another brilliant dash on the part of Admiral von Tirpitz's men, who have long since established their quality as daring seamen. Its aim may have been either to cover a navel move in another quarter or to frighten England into keeping reinforcements at home and out of the advancing line in Flanders. Either purpose would amply justify the coup, even if ships were sacrificed in the manoeuvre.

Of actual invasion the attack contains hardly a suggestion. This is the season of densest fogs, and the feat of the German vessels in slipping by the English mines and scout ships is easily understood. Such a raid, however, is a long way from a crossing in force. Much as we can admire the skill of the attack, we are bound to feel that the military situation of the opposing fleets and of England's relative safety from invasion remains unchanged.

BULLETINS

Scarborough, Eng., Dec. 18.—One hundred and fifty buildings in Scarborough are destroyed or damaged as a result of the bombardment by German warships and the casualties amount to 51 killed and 200 wounded.

Athens, Dec. 18.—A Greek naval officer, attached to the staff of the Greek legation in Constantinople has been arrested and condemned to death as a spy. The Greek government is making protests to the Turkish government against the persecution of Greek residents at Aivali.

Athens, Dec. 18.—A dispatch from Mitylene states that a British squadron on Sunday bombarded Turkish troops concentrated along the Gulf of Saros, an inlet of the Aegean sea.

Nish, Dec. 18.—Official announcement was made to-day that Servian troops pursuing the Austrians across the Drina river had effected a juncture with the Montenegrin troops and captured Visheg rad, Bosnia.

U. S. Treasury Finances.

Washington, Dec. 18.—The condition of the United States Treasury at the beginning of business today was: Net balance in general fund, $70,255,500. Total receipts yesterday, $1,776,080. Total payments yesterday, $1,986,077. The deficit this fiscal year is $80,335,608, against a deficit of $11,291,055 last year, exclusive of Panama Canal and public debt transactions.

WAR COSTS FRANCE $200,000,000 MONTH

Paris, Dec. 18.—The cost of the war to France for the first six months in 1915 is officially figured at $1,185,888,573, or about $200,000,000 monthly. This total is in addition to the usual expenditures of the army, but it includes $101,400,000 allowed to families of soldiers, $4,000,000 to persons out of employment, $10,200,000 for the maintenance of persons driven from their homes by the German invasion and various other items directly due to the war.

The Appropriations Committee of the French parliament met today to consider the budget, which aggregates for the first six months in 1915 a total of $1,705,$52,881.

The rate of $200,000,000 monthly for next year is about the scale of expenditures for the five months of the war in the present year.

According to advices received from the theater of war the French and British outnumber the Germans along the West battle line.

100,000 GERMANS SENT TO FLANDERS

Teutons Working Night and Day To Strengthen Their Positions. British War ships Bombard Belgian Coast

By FRANKLIN P. MERRICK.

Paris, Dec. 19.—British warships have bombarded Milkerke, on the North sea, inflicting severe damage upon the German position there. A successful aerial reconnaissance has been made over Ostend by the allies' aerial scouts, who report the arrival of fresh German formations at that point. The Germans are working night and day to strengthen their positions at Middlekerke and Ostend to stem the advance of the Franco-Belgian forces which pushed to Lombartzyde early this week. The invaders have mounted some of their 42-centimetre Howitzers at Ostend.

(Middlekerke lies four miles west of Ostend and two and a half miles east of Westende, which was bombarded several days ago by English men-of-war.)

It is reported from West Flanders that the Germans have transported 70,000 fresh troops to Antwerp and have strengthened their lines along the Belgian coast with 20,000 reinforcements.

German artillery masked by forests along the Heulebeck river, near Dadizeele, Beclaere and Moorslede is bombarding the French and British north and south of the Ypres-Menin highway.

The battle around Armentieres, Lille and La Bassee has become more violent as a natural result of the increased pressure of the allies. The battle line at this point lies in the form of a horseshoe with La Bassee and Armentieres at the points where the Caulks would be.. Lille lies at the extreme eastern end of the curve and it is there that the most severe fighting is going on. The Germans have been carrying on an incessant bombardment of great severity to break up the efforts of the allies to pierce the German lines.

There is great activity on the part of heavy artillery along the center and on the heights of the Meuse, but the French columns which penetrated Lorraine and Alsace seem to have met with a check, as they have reported no further progress in their efforts to advance toward Metz, Strassberg and Muelhausen.

In the Argonne there is considerable hand-to-hand fighting for the French have singled out the army of the German Crown Prince as the object for fierce and concentrated attacks.

At Verdun the situation is unchanged.

The great battle which began fourteen weeks ago to-day still rages over lines that have not changed to any extensive degree during the past six weeks and previous to that time the only appreciable change was in the extreme northern part, where the fronts were extended into Belgium.

Roulers is again unofficially reported to have been occupied by the allies but this is not borne out by official dispatches.

GREECE TO DECLARE WAR

Athens, Greece, Dec. 19.—Premier Venizelos called a special meeting of the capital to-day to take action on the arrest of a Greek naval officer by the Turks at Constantinople.

A dispatch from Rome states that Greece would declare war on Turkey within 24 hours.

King George of England is here seen talking to wounded Indian soldiers at the hospital camp at New Forest, England. Notice the black band of mourning which the king wears on the sleeve of his coat. He is accompanied by an aid. The king spends a great deal of his time visiting the wounded and cheering them up.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

New Yord, Dec. 19.—The Norwegian freight steamer Bygdoy, outward bound for Rio Janeiro, collided with the Greek steamer Themistocles off Quarantine to-day and had to return to port for repairs.

London, Dec. 19.—Deaths of persons injured by the German bombardment Wednesday has increased the mortality list to 126. Latest reports from the coast town state that 549 were injured.

London, Dec. 19.—Field Marshal Sir John French, commander of the British troops in France and Belgium, has asked Earl Kitchener, secretary of state for war, to increase the Royal Flying corps. In almost every official dispatch Sir John French praises the work of the aviators and dwells on the importance of their duties.

Berlin, Dec. 19.—All of the boys in the German schools have been put under military training, which indicates that the German government believes that the great war will last for some time to come. Approximately 12,000 boys in the Berlin schools alone are receiving military instruction from officers who are too old to go to the front.

Copenhagen, Dec. 19.—A German aeroplan was stranded on the Danish island of Fance to-day and the aviator was arrested by Danish soldiers. He will be interned until the end of the war. Fance Island is in the North sea, ten miles from the German coast.

PRUSSIAN HUSSARS WERE ANNIHILATED

In Vain Attempt To Penetrate Muscovite Lines In Poland—Only Fifty Survived The Charge

By FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY

Petrograd, Dec. 19.—Heavy reinforcements rushed to the Poland front have strengthened the Russian lines there and every attempt made by the Germans to pierce the line of defense stabliahd wst of Warsaw has been repulsed. The heavy losses suffered by the Germans have compelled them to abandon the advance which they attempted along the thirty-six and a half mile line from Kazunpolski to Skierniewic, but they maintain their assaults at Teresin on the Sochaczew-Warsaw railroad line.

Fighting with the aid of searchlights, the Germans made five attacks Thursday night at Teresin. Fierce hand-to-hand conflicts developed there, but after they had lasted for seven hours the Germans were finally repulsed. It is estimated that in these five attacks the Germans lost 6,000 men.

Details of the fighting about Lodz are beginning to trickle in as the censorship relaxes. They show that the Germans fought with desperate valor and that the temporary advantage they gained in this region was secured only at enormous cost.

The Prussian Hussars, who led the first German attacks at Lodz were almost destroyed. A regiment of 3,000 men was cut off from the main German forces by Russian troops from Siberia. The Hussars tried to cut their way through the Russian lines, but failed. Of the whole regiment only fifty men succeeded in escaping.

All the others were killed, they refusing to surrender.

A Russian officer who has returned from the front paid this tribute to the Hussars:

"Their bravery was magnificant. Though they might have saved their lives by yielding, they preferred the forlorn hope of cutting themselves out. This was impossible, but they fought on, only to fall in heaps as machine guns were turned upon them."

"On leaving the Caucasus I carried with me the best impression of my troops and pleasant recollections of the demonstrations of loyalty and love on the part of every class of the population. I thank you and beg you to express my gratitude to the valiant army of the Caucasus, its chiefs and all the people."

It is known that the Emperor is completely satisfied with the operations against the Turks.

WANT COLD STORAGE PLANT

Fulton Vegetable Growers Go On Record Last Night Favoring Such An Innovation.

The Fulton Vegetables and Shippers' association held a special meeting in the court room of the City Hall last night and discussed the business conditions in general.

The produce growers firmly believe that the country will enjoy a wave of prosperity shortly and then they will market their winter crops.

President O. T. Day of Granby Center presided and eight members were in attendance.

At present Mr. Day said the market conditions are about normal. In speaking of a public market place President Day believes it will be a great benefit to both the consumers and producers.

"There is one thing Fulton has sadly neglected and that is the erection of a cold storage plant. It would mean several thousand dollars more a year for some energetic citizen who would erect such a plant. At present we are storing our produce in neighboring cities and villages and we would prefer to patronize home industry along this line and none exists.

"Just to illustrate how much Fulton is losing each year, I will take my celery crop for instance. It is costing me 2½d this year to store fourteen hundred bushels in a Red Creek storage warehouse. Consider how many other large vegetable growers are doing the same thing" said President Day to a Times' reporter.

"We would willingly co-operate with President E. J. Penfield and the Chamber of Commerce to bring this about such an innovation."

KING GEORGE'S NARROW ESCAPE

By HERBERT TEMPLE.

London, Dec. 8 (by Mail to New York to escape British censor).—Although the facts have not become p... it is known in certain official circ... that King George narrowly escaped disaster from a German torpedo on his journey across the English channel to the front recently.

The trip was made at night so as to minimize the risk of attacks from German submarines, but in spite of all precautions an attack was made.

It was a comparatively clear, moonlight night, and the French coast was already in sight when a torpedoboat destroyer accompanying the King's vessel signalled that a hostile submarine was near. The lights on both ships were extinguished and that bearing the King took up a zig-zag course, in order to make it a difficult target, while the destroyer, aided by other convoy ships began a chase of the submarine. Two torpedoes were fired by the German craft, believed here to have been the famous U-9 which sank the British cruisers Aboukir, Cressy and Hogue.

Owing to the heavy seas, however, and the harrassing tactics of the destroyers, the aim of the Germans was bad and the submarine disappeared without accomplishing its mission.

Fiercest Fighting in Flanders

Paris, Dec. 19.—The French are continuing their advance in the region south of Ypres. The operations in that district are over swampy ground which makes troop movements very difficult.

South La Basse the French have advanced more than a half mile and have made progress at other points. The repetition of announcements as to short gains made by the French troops shows that the Germans are making desperate resistance against the continued offensives of the allies. It is said that the fighting in Flanders and Northern France is the fiercest that has taken place there in the campaign.

INDICTMENTS EXPECTED

New York, Dec. 19.—Indictments, probably ten in number, were expected to-day against conspirators and gunmen involved in the assassination of Barnet Baff, wealthy poultry merchant, who was shot down in the street after being lured from one of his stores. During a twelve hour grilling James Moore, who was recently arrested in connected with the case, is said to have made important revelations showing the existence of a "murder syndicate" in this city. Other important testimony was placed before the grand jury which was hastily summed by means of automobile and telephone.

U. S. Troops Sent to Border

Naco, Ariz., Dec. 19.—Troop trains bringing United States cavalry to reinforce the forces held here to protect the lives of American citizens from the bullets of Mexican factions across the border, began to roll in at dawn to-day. The arrival of General Hugh L. Scott, chief of staff of the U. S. army, everything will be in readiness to curb the Mexicans of they continue their fighting.

During the night the Carranza forces under General Hill dug three lines of trenches parallel to the American border. If the troops under General Mytorena attempts to storm these their bullets of necessity must fall on American soil. General Bliss, however, is confident that intervention by the American troops will be unnecessary as a result of a second order received by General Maytorena from Provisional President Gutierrez.

This forbade a resumption of the attack on the Carranzistas, but states that reinforcements are being sent to Maytorena.

Special Agent George Carothers of the American State department, who arrived here yesterday and conferred with General Bliss and General Maytorena was in communication with Washington last night. He said to-day that he believed trouble would be avoided.

MAGEE WITH FEDS.

Chicago, Dec. 19.—Lee Magee will manage the Brooklyn Federal team next season. R. B. Ward of the Brookfeds is aid to have completed arrangements to this effect.

ARMORED TRAIN BLOWN UP

By STEVEN BURNETT

Vienna, Via Berlin and Amsterdam, Dec. 19.—A Russian armored train proceeding from Lemberg to the Carpathian front with ammunition and food for the forces engaged in battle there was blown up on Thursday and all the soldiers on board, numbering about 200, were killed.

News of the disaster was received here from Budapest to-day. The dispatches stated that the train was blown up by a mine planted by a small force of Austrian cavalry who had succeeded in evading the Russian pickets and getting well within the enemy's lines.

It is believed that all the members of the Austrian raiding party were subsequently captured, but not before they had destroyed a large section of railway upon which the Russians depend for transportation of troops and supplies.

GERMANS TRANSFERS TROOPS

Berlin, via Amsterdam, Dec. 19.—German military experts for to-day forecast the transfer of several corps of German troops from the eastern to the western seat of war as the result of the Russian defeat in Poland.

No attempt was made here to magnify the German victory in Poland, it being pointed out in the Pageglatt. The western army has not been annihilated; it has been defeated and has retreated and its powers of resistance are undoubly still great.

FIRE FIEND'S WORK

Syracuse, Dec. 19.—Two firemen were overcome and seven persons, one of them an unconscious woman, were rescued from an upper floor of Myers building. The fire caused $8,000 damage to-day. The police are investigating the fire on the theory that it was of incendiary origin. Two alarms were called to the blaze.

WILL WILSON ACT?

Naco, Ariz., Dec. 19.—Five bullets from Mexican fighting forces around Naco, Sonora, to-day struck near the shelters built by American troops on the border. Many other shots fell in United States territory.

CLEARY READY TO COLLAPSE

New York, Dec. 19.—After being treated with drugs all night in his cell, William Cleary was almost in a state of collapse to-day as he was led into court for what was expected to be the final day of his trial for the murder of Eugene Newman, his son-in-law. Cleary raved continually after being taken last night from the courtroom where he had heard his daughter, Newman's wife, bare the story of her relations with Newman before they were married.

Dr. M. J. Sullivan was summoned and administered opiates, but these quieted Cleary only for a time and the physician had to return several times during the night.

In the meantime, Mrs. Anna Cleary Newman, the young widow, who had sacrificed herrself in an attempt to save her father's life, slept peacefully at a local hotel.

"I hope I have saved my father," she said to-day. "I should do no more."

As a result of the story told by the girl, bets of 3 to 2 were made here to-day that Cleary would be acquitted.

New York, Dec. 19.—Attorney Frank Comiskey, chief of counsel for William B. Cleary on trial for the murder of his son-in-law, Eugene Newman, to-day summed up. He deemed the acquittal of Cleary on the ground that he was irresponsible when he shot his son-in-law. District Attorney Gagan in his address to the jury demanded the death penalty for Cleary, emphasizing the point which in his opinion called for a verdict of first degree murder.

WAR AT WASHINGTON

Washington, Dec. 19.—That a state of war exists between the White House and the Senate over the President's attempts to name federal officials contrary to the wishes of the senators was emphasized further to-day when it was learned that the nomination of Judge Ewing C. Bland as U. S. marshal for the Western district of Missouri would be repeated on Monday.

OPINIONS

In view of the situation on the Western European battle line, it is interesting to recall the prophecy of the late Jean de Bloch, the well known peace propagandist. Eighteen years ago Monsieur de Bloch said, "The war, instead of being a hand-to-hand contest in which the combatants measure their physical and moral superiority, will become a kind of stalemate, in which, as neither army will be able to get at the other, both armies will be maintained in opposition to each other, threatening each other, but never able to deliver a final and decisive attack. It will be simply the natural evolution of the armed peace, on an aggravated scale."—Youth's Companion.

PRAISE FOR BARGE CANAL

Chairman E. R. Carhart of the New York Produce Exchange, who was in Fulton several weeks ago on a tour of inspection of the State Barge canal, highly commends the engineers and others connected with the work of this great project.

Mr. Carhart said in part:

"We were greatly impressed by the efficiency of the engineering staff of the State. The enthusiasm of the engineers and their pride in the results produced by them are fully justified in our opinion by the character of the work now so nearly finished. There is no doubt, even to lay minds, of the high character of the work as a whole and of the really great character of some of its more important structures.

"We are convinced that the men who built the canal should have a large part in its operation and maintenance when finished.

"We feel that our trip was well worth while; we believe in the canal now more than ever and are better qualified to take up those matters having to do with its use, care, operation, maintenance, etc., in which our Exchange has so much interest."

WILL WE HAVE TO FIGHT

Carranza says that any interference on the part of the United States with the shooting of American citizens on American soil will be looked on as an unfriendly act. General Huerta, from his present retreat in Spain, characterizes Villa as a jail-bird, Zapata as a highwayman, and, in an expressive Americanism, calls Carranza a four-flusher. Whatever one may think of the killing of Madero, it must be conceded that Huerta, the ranking general of the former regular Mexican army, is a different manner of man to the present Military Chiefs of the various Mexican armies.

His opinion of Carranza is worthy of attention, and there are a great many American citizens who believe that Carranza's bluff should be called. It is possible that Carranza will get away with his bluff, so long as only American citizens are killed, but the termination of the present European war will make some considerable change in the Mexican situation. With millions of trained veterans all under arms, it will be surprising, if the great European powers do not insist upon retribution for the killing and destruction of the property of their subjects. Villa is about to retire from the Mexican capital and asume the control of the thinly settled wild mountainous regions of Northern Mexico. His Yaqui Indians, the fiercest on the American continent, loaded with loot and satiated with rapine and murder prefer the desolate lonely wastes of Sonora and Chihuahua to the thickly settled States near the Mexican capital.

Villa, himself, realizes that there will be a day of reckoning, and the "Wild Bull of the North" will feel safer among his fellow Indians.

Villa's march from the Northwest to Mexico City was much the same as would be that of Sitting Bull, with an army of Sioux from the Dakotas, to Washington city, and Zapata's arrival from the Southwest would resemble the triumphal entry of Geronimo, and his Apaches.

Be that as it may, it is certain that sooner or later, we must stop the fighting in Mexico, or the Monroe Doctrine will be put to a supreme test.

AN APPRECIATION

To our many boosters, the stand-patters for home progress, The Fulton Evening Times offers sincere appreciation. If steadfastness of purpose in loyalty to our patrons can be at the badge of a trust rightfully given, the honor and glory will be ours and yours.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS.

Taxation without Representation is Tyranny, becomes a real and concrete thing when we face the fact that the women of Tompkins County, according to the New York School of Agriculture, own over nine thousand acres of land.

The recent election in Arizona, so runs the Phoenix Republican, put the quietus on two stock arguments against woman suffrage, namely, A majority of the better class of women would not vote and the polls would degrade them if they did.

It asserts that not only did the better class of women vote in large numbers, but that they elevated the polls which were never so orderly and business like, in spite of the election being the culmination of a campaign of unusual bitterness.

An unknown lady, by name Mrs. Vickers, with an unknown address has now arisen and proclaimed that woman suffrage is a failure in Australia. Australia is too far away to be a practical suffrage argument, but, at least, we can ask:

If it failed why did it spread? South Australia began it in 1895. West Australia watched the experiment for five years and then copied it. Then all the neighboring countries tumbled in, New South Wales in 1902, Tasmania in 1903, Queensland in 1905, and Victoria in 1908. As though that were not proof enough, the Parliament of Federated Australia in 1910, by a unanimous vote of both houses, passed resolutions testifying to the good effects of woman suffrage and advised other countries to copy.

These are official proceedings anyone can verify. It would be wise for the unknown lady to go way back and sit down and let the wheels of progress take its way without attempting any interruption.

"How better could we show our confidence in the principles of liberty," asks President Wilson in his message to Congress, "how better could we demonstrate our steadfastness in the course of justice?" and he proceeds to exhort Congress to pass the bill granting greater political freedom to the Filipinoes.

It is all very well to grant freedom to far away people of another race, but justice, like charity, should begin at home. If the President really wants to know a better way of proving, as he says, that he has "the faith we have boasted and professed," he couldn't do a better thing than to begin by giving to American women a voice in their government.

Helen Louise Johnson is at the head of the Home Economics Department of the General Federation of Women's Clubs. Mrs. LaFollette comments with pleasure on the fact that "she has gotten down off the fence, where she was a few years ago, and become an enthusiastic advocate of votes for women.

Any person who attempts to deal with home questions in a scientific way has started on the road that leads to a sincere belief in the need of votes for homemakers. It is a road that has no turning.

Deputies Announced.

Sheriff-elect W. A. Buck announced the appointment of ten deputy sheriffs to serve during his term of office. Silas Holmes will succeed Grant G. Edick as deputy sheriff and jailer in charge of the Pulaski jail. The deputies are:

It Isn't Your Town—It's You

If you want to live in the kind of a town
Like the kind of a town you like,
You needn't slip your clothes in a grip
And start on a long, long hike.

You'll only find what you left behind,
For there's nothing that's really new,
It's a knock at yourself when you knock your town.
It isn't your town—it's you!

Real towns are not made by man afraid
Lest somebody else gets ahead.
When everyone works and nobody shirks
You can raise a town from the dead.

And if while you make your personal stake
Your neighbor can make one too,
Your town will be what you want to see.
It isn't your town—it's you!

ROUND ABOUT

The Imperial German Chancellor, Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, received word yesterday confirming the report that his eldest son, who is a lieutenant of cavalry, was made prisoner by the Russians in Poland. He is suffering from a bullet wound in the thigh, which he received while patrolling.

The negotiations between Italy and Turkey over the removal of G. A. Richardson, British consul, from the Italian consulate at Hodeida, Arabia, are approaching a satisfactory solution. The Turks have returned Mr. Richardson to the consulate and presented excuses for his removal. They also promised to punish those guilty of the breach of diplomatic relations.

The British official press bureau announces that investigation of the sinking of the battleship Bulwark disclosed no evidence of treachery on the part of any persons aboard the ship or of any act by an enemy, but that the disaster was the result of an explosion due to the accidental ignition of the ammunition aboard the ship.

A passenger train leaving Kansas City for St. Louis left the track on Friday, November 27th, injuring thirty people and wounding one fatally. The cause of the accident has not been learned.

"Five million immigrants will come from Europe in two years after the war," declared Charles Henry Cheney of San Francisco, who is in Washington attending the tenth annual convention of the American Civic association to-day. Mr. Cheney said his estimate was based on information furnished by the United States Immigration Commission. "Tickets from Europe to San Francisco by all-water route will be much cheaper than transportation by steamer to New York and thence by rail across the continent," he said. "This, therefore, will result in enormously increased immigration to the Pacific Coast.

The war tax placed on wines, liquors and beers of all kinds is working one hardship—Rochester saloon keepers this week announced that there would be no more "growlers."

Among the late statements showing how expensive it is to run for Congress is that of "Uncle Joe" Cannon. His campaign cost him $3,275. Nicholas Longworth, also a "comeback," expended $1,648; W. A. Rodenberg of Illinois, $2,133, and William B. McKinley of Illinois, $4,358. Former Representative Daniel Lafean of Pennsylvania, one of the "best spenders" to former Congresses, has been returned, and certifies that the campaign cost him $3,112. Representative Copley of Illinois, a millionaire, and one of the few Progressive members to be returned, expended $3,782.

Immediately after the election on November 3d the New York Short Ballot association questioned 5,000 voters as to whether they remembered the names of the respective candidates they voted for on the State ticket below Governor. Between 700 and 800 replies were received, showing that the percentages of those replying were as follows: For Lieutenant Governor, 29 per cent; Controller, 44.4; Attorney General, 40; Secretary of State, 31; State Treasurer, 37; State Engineer, 26; Judge Court of Appeals, 28.

A new system is being tried out in the police department in Lyons whereby the record of arrests made by each officer will be kept separately. Police Justice Sheffield is the inaugurator of this system.

One year of the war in Europe will add $500,000,000 to the foreign commerce of the United States, in the estimation of Edward E. Pratt, chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. Mr. Pratt made this calculation after a study of the reports of American consuls and commercial representatives abroad, of agents of his bureau in this country and of the new orders for American manufactures and products reported in commercial periodicals.

Secretary of State Bryan lays the defeat of woman suffrage in Nebraska to the hostility of the liquor interests. "How humiliating it must be," he writes in the Commoner, "to the good men who were deluded enough to join hands with the saloon—how humiliating it must be to them to be found on the same side!"

The vote: 90,782 for, and 99,036 against was not at all discouraging to the friends of suffrage.

McNamara Was a Policeman.

The great Irish baritone, Edward McNamara, who will share honors with Madame Schumann-Heink at the State Armory, Oswego, New Year's night, is an artist who has attained the high rank he holds by giving to the public "something for their money." The fact that he is Irish insures a program that cannot fail to please an audience, and his charming manner and personality are merits not to be overlooked by the most exacting. As is generally known, Mr. McNamara was discovered by and is a protege of Madame Schumann-Heink. This alone is an endorsement that many a singer would give a half million dollars for, mainly because every singer who has merited the patronage of Madame Schumann-Heink has "made good" all over the world, That Mr. McNamara was at one time a police officer demonstrates that the world's greatest and most beloved contralto plays no favorites.

Madame Schumann-Heink's appearance New Year's night is an event that all can be proud of, for it was the great contralto's own wish to start the New Year with a recital where she had never before appeared. Madame Schumann-Heink has sung in Syracuse a half dozen times and on each occasion to a sold-out house. Utica and Rochester have heard her many times and two years ago Madame Schumann-Heink broke new ground by giving a recital at Lockport. Already negotiations are under way to secure Madame Schumann-Heink for Rome and Watertown for next year.

She who does the buying for the home has quite as important a business matter on her hands as the income-maker for the home!

The income-maker furnishes the capital on which the home is run. The housewife spends the money—manages the "business" in which that capital is invested!

She is responsible for the BUSINESS SUCCESS of the home—and no home IS a success unless its finances are managed prudently and wisely.

The housewife must KNOW VALUES—not merely "usual prices of things," but differing VALUES in commodities. She must know bargains—and the very latest word of bargain news. When to buy—what to buy, where to buy—she must learn from an intelligent and persistent study of the ads!

LIBERAL DONATIONS FOR THE NEEDY

Ensign Fitzgerald of the Salvation Army and His Workers Gather One Hundred Christmas Baskets.

Ensign Fitzgerald of the local corps of the Salvation Army estimates that over one hundred Christmas baskets will be prepared from the donations of the public and parochial schools of this city.

During the past few days the local Army workers have been busily engaged in the collection of goods from the schools.

Three overflowing sleigh loads were secured and stored in the barracks where they will be prepared and ready for distribution Christmas eve.

As this is considered a hard winter the baskets of nice danties and substantials will be greatly appreciated in many a poor home.

Mr. Fitzgerald believes that in the neighborhood of 600 could be fed with the donations.

During the time the Ensign has been in charge of the Fulton corp he has accomplished some commendable work. The City Charity Department has been relieved of many heavy burdens by the philanthropic work of the corp.

The cold weather that we have experienced during the past few days has kept down the donations in the "Charity kettle" but it is to be expected that Fultonians will loosen up and aid the good work.

SUES FOR CHILD.

Mrs. George Johnson, as guardian ad litem for her infant son, Charles Coleman, has instituted an action through her attorney against the Lou B. Cleveland Contracting Co. for $5,000.

The child was injured in July, 1913, while a passenger on an automobile transfer. An obstruction in the street alleged to have been neglectly allowed to exist by the contractor caused the child to be hurled from the vehicle thus sustaining painful injury.

Mrs. Johnston, who was a passenger at the time of the accident settled her claim against the Bridge Co. some time ago.

WHITMAN GETS GREAT OVATION

Over 1,100 Republican State Politicians Crowd Waldorf-Astoria at the G. O. P. Jollification Meeting

Congressman Luther W. Mott and Speaker Thaddeus C. Sweet figured quite prominently at the Republican "Feast of Victory," held at the Waldorf-Astor Wednesday evening.

The dinner followed a meeting the State Committee in the afternoon

Practically all the prominent Republican leaders were present with the noticeable exception of William Barnes, former State chairman.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University said it looked like a national convention.

The principal feature of the occasion was the address of State Chairman Frederick C. Tanner.

Mr. Tanner spoke as follows:—

"This great gathering is here tonight because we Republicans have fought a good fight and have kept the faith. We have risen from the ashes of defeat—a defeat in which only two states in the Union—Utah and Vermont—were carried by our candidate for President in 1912—to a victory which with the exception of one, is the greatest that our party has ever won in the State of New York.

"Ano I wish to express at this time my appreciation of the loyal support given to me by the party leaders throughout the State in this campaign—to the County Chairman and State Committee men—and to the humblest worker in the ranks. Without them, this victory would never have been achieved.

It would indeed be ungracious if I did not make special mention of my associates, the officers of the State Committee, who are our guests tonight. Throughout the trying hours of the campaign, Merton E. Lewis, was my counselor and friend. Throughout that campaign, I found our ever-faithful and suave Secretary, Lafayette B. Gleason, a fountain of information and of humor. And the Treasurer, Mr. Alexander M. White, who took the office only at my urgent request, did what few men could do— persuaded Republicans to give to the campaign fund from what little money they had left after four years of Democratic rule.

Nothing is more interesting than election figures, when the figures are in our favor. In 1912, the State of New York was carried by the Democratic party by 285,000 votes. In 1914, it was carried by the Republicans by 145,000, or a net change of 350,000 votes.

It has been said in explanation of this remarkable return of confidence in the Republican party, that this result was due to the injection of the Sulzer episode and the religious issue, but this assertion will not bear the test of facts. The ticket for Constitutional delegates was on a separate ballot, and it had no religion in it, nor a Sulzer candidate upon it. Every delegate at large upon that ticket was elected and the vote for the leading candidate upon that ticket was 685,357, or only 1344 votes behind that cast for the Republican candidate for Governor.

"This election was not a sporadic evidence of distrust in the local organization known as Tammany Hall. It was a return all along the line to the Republican party as the best means of efficient government. We have captured the entire state with the exception of one office. We have a Republican plurality of 16 in the Senate, and of 50 in the Assembly. We have 116 delegates to the Constitutional Convention to 52 Democrats. This election in the State of New York, therefore, means that the people, by an almost unprecedented plurality, have chosen our party, not only to administer the government in Albany, and to enact new legislation for the State, but also to frame a new Constitution under which we are to live for the next 20 years.

"There is a new alignment of political parties in the State. The Republican party has regained the first column on the ballot. Next comes the Democratic party, and third, the Independence League. After these follow the so-called American party with 70,000 votes; then the Prohibition party with 54,000 votes, and sixth in line, the Progressive with 45,000 votes. If we have not done anything else in this campaign, we have certainly accomplished this. We have re-established the Republican party as the leading political factor in this State, and we have attended to the ease of the Progressive party decently and in order. Most of the Progressives have returned to us, and the rest of them will return. I do not see what else they are going to do. They believe in a protective tariff, and they desire prosperity. Where else can they go? No other party insures either of these things.

Personally, I think we should extend to them the right hand of fellowship. We should welcome them back into the Republican party, but we should welcome them back without the sacrifice of a single fundamental principle which has made our party and our country great.

I am satisfied that the public has had enough of ripping up of constitutions, of muck-raking attacks on business, and denunciations of the courts. What the people want is sound, honest administration of the affairs of government, with the reduction of the tax rate, and an opportunity for all to earn a decent living. That is what the Republican party is pledged to give them. I have nothing but praise for the charitable committees now being formed to alleviate the sufferings of the impending winter; but the best, the most effective, and the only permanent relief for that suffering will be found when a Republican plurality is returned to both Houses of Congress.

"It is clear from the figures in the 1912 election that the Democrats are a minority party, and would not have come into power had it not been for the breaking away of the Progressives. And it is equally clear that the Democratic party is losing its hold every day that it remains in power. There is no good and sufficient reason for that party remaining in charge of the government at Washington. It has no clear, consistent or vigorous foreign policy, and its views on taxation and business regulation resulted in depression and hard times months before the war broke out in Europe.

"The Congress which is today in session has sat longer, and has spent more money than any other Congress ever assembled in this country. We have today a tariff that produces an insufficient revenue and insufficient business. We have an income tax, but fast decreasing incomes. We have a war tax, but without any war. The cost of living has not been reduced as promised, but, on the contrary, has been increased, and we have little to show for our pains in changing to a Democratic government but investigations that do not discover, regulations that do not regulate, commissions that do not compel, and indictments without convictions. The reduction of a Democratic majority in Congress from 147 to a bare plurality means that this uncertainty has got to stop, and that a condition must be created under which a business man can go ahead and add his efforts to increasing the volume of the industries of his country, without being uncertain as to whether he will stumble into a bankruptcy court on the one side, or into a jail on the other.

"It is because labor as well as capital has decided that the Republican party is the best means of effective government that our party has been restored to power. And in exact proportion as our conduct merits confidence, our party will remain in power.

"And now as to the administration in New York. Here we meet a somewhat different situation. What is most needed in our own state is a little common honesty. Payrolls have been padded and the Treasury looted even beyond the extent that was revealed in the campaign. The Republican party, if it hopes and deserves to live, must set its face like a flint against the sort of thing that has been going on in Albany for four years. Useless commissions have been created and political nuisances committed. The idea of real public service upon which a party must rest if it is to live, has been forgotten. The public has said by the greatest plurality but one that the electorate of New York has ever given, that they want a housecleaning at Albany and throughout the State. The Governor-elect, Charles S. Whitman, and the State ticket that has been elected to office with him, realize that this is so. They are pledged to rectify these conditions—a task the like of which we have not seen before. They need your earnest and unwavering support. I ask you here and now, as patriotic Republicans, to pledge them that support, as I expect to pledge them mine as your State Chairman.

FRENCH TROOPS' DARING DEEDS

Bavarian Troops Dug Trench Only To Find It Occupied By French At Daylight

By FRANKLIN TATE

Paris, Dec. 21.—Corporal Philip of the 24th Colonial Infantry, is a brave of braves. He has been awarded the military medal for repeated acts of gallantry in this war. When his lieutenant fell wounded and the Germans were running up to capture him the Corporal rushed in under their heavy fire and rescued his officer under their very noses. He is the kind of man who comes at once to the front when the situation is desperate.

The other day the Colonel sent for him and said to him:

"Phillip, I know you are a gallant fellow, and that is my reason for entrusting you with an extremely perilous mission. At nightfall you will take twenty-five men and go to the crest yonder where German soldiers are seen yonder digging a trench. You are to endeavor to remain there in concealment till the morning when you will return and report what you have seen."

At nightfall away went the little party. On reaching the crest the Corporal saw German engineers digging a trench, while a sentry kept guard. Hiding twenty-four of his men in a little woods, he took the twenty-fifth man with him saying: "when we get near the German sentry and he cries 'Wer da!' you must keep apart from me, to the left, and make a noise with your bayonet, so as to make him turn your way. Then, no matter what he does or what I do, lie down and await my orders."

Stealthily the two approached so near the sentry that they could hear him softly humming a tune. Then Philip moved to the right, and intentionally made a slight noise.

"Wer da!" challenged the sentry. Instantly, the soldier keeping to the left, rattled his bayonet, and the German turned towards him. At the same moment Philip was on him, running him through the body twice with the bayonet. His aim had been so true that the sentry dropped dead without a cry. The men working vigorously in the trench twenty or thirty yards away had heard nothing. Quicker than a quick-change artist the Corporal donned the dead man's helmet and cloak, and seizing his rifle began pacing up and down in his stead. Every now and then as he passed he carried the body a little farther away.

At last the trench was ready, and the Germans retired to the main body, calling a friendly good-bye to the sentry, who, without a word continued on his beat. But they had no sooner disappeared than the helmet and cloak were flung to the ground and the corporal was running towards the wood. A few minutes later the twenty-six French infantrymen were installed in the German trench.

At day break a Bavarian company marched up to occupy the trench. The men, all unsuspecting were chatting and joking. A few yards from the trench a murderous fire greeted them. They attempted to rush it, but twenty-six rifles kept mowing them down, and finally the survivors broke and fled—all except eighteen, who threw up their hands.

A few days later the corporal was shot in the right arm and shoulder but refused to go to the ambulance. He fought on for the next twenty-four hours. In the thick of the fighting he shot a German officer who fell. The corporal ran forward to bring him in, but the officer drawning his revolver fired the last shot, the bullet shattering the corporal's shoulder. The Frenchman had strength enough to beat out his enemy's brains with the butt end of his rifle, but then he collapsed with pain and loss of blood.

HINMAN SENT TO AUBURN

Claims Innocence — Charges That He Was Framed Up —Minimum Term One Year and Ten Months

(Special to The Times)

Oswego, Dec. 19.—"I have been 'framed-up,'" was the substance of a written statement given to the press by Dr. Elmer L. Hinman after Supreme Court Justice Irving G. Hubbs passed sentence upon him here this morning.

The Oswego physician was sentenced to Auburn State prison for a term of not more than three years and six months and not less than one year and 10 months.

Dr. Hinman took his medicine coolly, thus maintaining the same composure which he bore throughout the entire trial.

The Hinman trial has been one of the greatest sensations in Oswego county in years due to the prominence of the doctor and the nature of the crime. He was convicted of abortion and performing a criminal operation.

District Attorney Francis D. Culkin, the energetic prosecuting attorney of Oswego county stated that he did not believe Dr. Hinman would appeal.

Jurors Selected for January Term

The Nondescripts and Yacht club of the City league will bowl Monday night.

SEASON CLOSED

This week will mark the close of all State work done on the Barge canal for the year 1914. Practically everything is closed down on contracts Nos. 35 and 37, the Burgard Co. at Fulton being the only company doing any work at the present time. The Burgard company is doing some excavating along the canal and expects to finish that work this week.

HIGH BRED CALF

Owner Elmer Taylor of the Osgood farm has purchased a high bred Holstein bull from a Marcellus breeder for $1,200.

It is an eight-months old calf and is registered as Spring Farm King Pontiac Abberkirk, and is one of the finest thoroughbred in this section of the State. Mr. Taylor is proprietor of a meat market in S. 1st St., this city.

UNION MEETING

(Palladium)

Fulton, Dec. 18.—On January 1st the First M. E. church and the State St. M. E. church will combine in a month's union evangelistic campaign, alternating two weeks in each church, beginning at State St. church.

Following the series of meetings in Fulton there will be held two weeks of meetings in Oswego in First M. E. church, the Rev. Mr. Stallwood, pastor. Mr. Stallwood will assist in the Fulton meeting, and the Revs. Stockwell and Holmes will reciprocate by helping in the Oswego meetings.

CIVIL ACTIONS

Judgment by default was entered in City Court this morning against Bartholomey & Co. this city, for $3,250 in favor of Kroman & Co. of New York city. Attorney F. S. Spencer represented the plaintiff. The action arose over a bill of fruit.

Decision has been rendered in City Court by Judge Wilson against Thomas Jasach in favor of Anna Hlebica for $95.30 borrowed money. Attorney Spencer represented the plaintiff.

BEFORE THE CITY JUDGE

The next time two local Polish men wish to test their pugilistic ability it is believed they will "hire a hall," as a bout they pulled off in W. 1st St. last night cost them $50.

City Judge Wilson imposed this rent upon them for the use of the public street this morning. They paid. One had the "rent" with him and the other was allowed to pay on installments. Officer Bray made the arrest.

LADIES' NIGHT AT CLUB

Ladies' night will be observed Monday evening at the regular meeting of the Current Event club. Miss Ada Thayer and Mrs. Charles Olmstead are in charge of the program.

The Club will meet with Mr. and Mrs. John Hunter, Highland St.

WORLD WAR KILLS SPORT

European Conflict Will Prevent The American Polo And Tennis Teams From Getting Revenge

New York, Dec. 19.—Uncle Sammy's chances of winning back the pole and tennis championship cups in 1915 are remote, because of the general European war.

It is unlikely that there will be an international polo match between England and America next year. Most of the men who made up the 1914 English polo team were army officers. They are fighting in the war now. It is possible that one or more has been killed or wounded.

Even if war is over by next sprring, it is not likely that a match will be arranged as it will take England a year or more to readjust itself, commercially and in a military way and it will not have much time to think of or indulge in sports.

The same is true concerning the Australian tennis team which won the Davis Cup last summer. Anthony F. Wilding and Norman E. Brookes, the main cogs in the championship team are on the firing line for the Allies and have given up all tennis thoughts.

Charles Herzog, who manages the reckless Reds, has become so badly afflicted with golfitis that he has about decided to quit raising crops on his Maryland farm and will have the farm laid out as a golf course.

"Never could see the sport in golf until I got a club in my hand one day," says Herzog. "I used to think it was child's play to knock that innocent looking, prostrate ball a couple of miles.

"Well, just for exercise I swung at the ball with a club that belonged to a friend of mine. I missed. That made me vexed. I swung again, and I swung low. That time I nearly knocked the bottom out of the tee.

"What's the use of going farther? Golf got me like it does nearly everybody else. It looks so simple that you think it is a waste of time hitting the ball until you try to hit it. And when you try and miss the ball seems to laugh at you. It seems to jeer you into taking another swipe, and the oftener you swipe the oftener you want to swipe."

Herzog grows oats on his farm.

"Unless somebody builds a golf course in my neighborhood by next fall, I'll quit sowing oats and I'll use the oat field for a golf course, Herog said.

The University of Pittsburgh expects to adopt the one year residence rule to govern all athletic teams, at the January meeting of the University Athletic Council.

The rule is the most drastic eligibility requirement that colleges demand and is lived up to only by such colleges as Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Cornell and Pennsylvania and teams in the Western Conference, Afl Missouri Valley Conference and Ohio Conference. Under this rule no student is eligible for varsity athletic compitition until he has been in residence in the University for one year.

The University of Pittsburgh, which is now 125 years old, has a student enrolment of three thousand and ranks as one of the biggest colleges in the country.

Pittsburgh has made a remarkable record in athletics during the past five years, especially in football, and has been demanding recognition of the larger Eastern colleges. The adoption of this rule is expected to bring this about.

Ban Johnson thinks the Yanks need a new owner; the prospective owner thinks they need a new manager. And the fans think they need about twenty-one new players.

JACOB RUPPERT IS INTERESTED IN SPORT FOR SAKE OF SPORT.

When it became almost certain that Ban Johnson was going to force the transfer of the control of the New York American league team there were rumors of half a dozen purchasers. Gossip finally centered on Jacob Ruppert, the wealthy New York brewer, as the man who would supplant Farrell and Devery in control of the Yankees. Fans were pleased at the idea, as Colonel Ruppert had long been known as a man who was interested in sport for the sake of sport, and he was regarded as a desirable man to be at the head of a big baseball club.

Pay Ex-Enlisted Army.

Washington, Dec. 19.—Secretary Garrison's suggestions for increasing and improving the army are embodied in a measure which was introduced in the Senate today by Senator Lodge, who is also the author of the Senate resolution calling for an investigation of national defences. The points covered by the Lodge bill, which are the same as those accentuated by Mr. Garrison in his annual report, are—

1. To fill up to their full strength the existing organizations which compose the aggregate mobile army, and to appoint not more than 1,000 officers for commands in this increased force.

2. To authorize the President to discharge enlisted men at the expiration of eighteen months' service if they are proficient in military duties by that time.

3. To establish a reserve made up from the men so discharged who shall be subject to call for military service in time of war.

The bill was referred to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, where it may be taken up for preliminary consideration during the present session, although it will not be reported in connection with the bill of Senator Chamberlain, providing for the creation of a national council of defence.

Her One Weakness

A Story of Old Virginia

By EUNICE BLAKE

That peninsula which lies between Chesapeake bay and the James river is replete with interesting associations. It was there that the first settlement was made in North America, there sprang up the patriarchal system of the plantation, and there occurred one of the most noted struggles in a war that resulted in the downfall of that system.

The second of these periods is the most delightful to contemplate. The descendant of the cavalier had become the planter. His sons were fine men; his daughters were possessed of many virtues. The age of chivalry had not yet given way to the more matter of fact existence that has pervaded the south since the war between the states.

About Williamsburg, the seat of William and Mary college, were scattered families who were the flower of the Virginia aristocracy. Edward Fitz-Herbert, a planter living in this section, was blessed with sons and daughters who had grown up among customs that had been inherited from the defenders of King Charles I.

At this time, when the family of Mr. and Mrs. Fitz-Herbert were passing from youth to manhood and womanhood, an invalid, Bleeker van Tromp, went from New York to Williamsburg, hoping that the climate of Virginia might restore him to health. There he met Eugenia Fitz-Herbert, a typical southern girl, with a wealth of raven black hair, a complexion like the mingling of the magnolia and the rose, and a bewitching figure.

If there was one virtue among the southern planters of those days more prominent than others it was hospitality. Bleeker van Tromp brought letters to the Fitz-Herberts and was received and introduced by them to the planters of the peninsula. Eugenia Fitz-Herbert was drawn to him through pity for his lack of strength, induced by ill health, and he was drawn to her on account of an attractiveness that captivated all who knew her.

The life lived by these people was very like that of the country gentry of England. They gave house parties and rode to hounds. Eugenia was a fine horsewoman and fond of hunting, but since Bleeker was not strong enough to engage in the sport, from the goodness of her heart she often made excuses to remain behind when hunting parties were formed that she might alleviate his disappointment. For while his body was weak his spirit was eager for action.

Naturally this attention drew him closer to Eugenia. Indeed, it was not long before he worshiped her. Her father and brothers noticed the growing attachment and frowned upon it, their ideal for a husband for this flower of the family being some man of prominence, some commanding figure upon whom the people of the south would look as a leader. Van Tromp, whatever might be his talents and attainments, was not strong enough even to enjoy the manly sports of a Virginia gentleman.

Eugenia, understanding this contempt held by her father and brothers for the want of vigor on the part of the man she loved, was troubled. When it was referred to by one of them she replied with fire in her eye that fortunately there was a way by which a weak man might show that he was equal, if not superior, to a strong man if it became necessary to do so, and she referred to the code duello, where the weaker could pull the hair trigger of a pistol with the same facility as the stronger.

This defect in her lover continued to trouble Eugenia. She nursed it and brooded over it, not because she considered it a defect, but because she was conscious that her family and her associates regarded Van Tromp as one who could not take a position in the community in which she lived such as she would desire. At any rate, she felt so deeply on the subject that she failed to conceal it from her lover.

Not only did the New Yorker learn it from Eugenia, but one of her brothers, who was friendly to him, said to him one day:

"Bleeker, why don't you challenge a fire eater and shoot him? That will satisfy everybody, and they'll let you alone."

"Because," was the reply, "I don't care to kill a man simply to prove that I'm not a coward."

There came to the peninsula from New Orleans a creole named Le Bouf, who was received in the social circle of the planters and, being a young man of aristocratic manners and having an aggressive way with him, was very popular with the women. He was not a man to brook any obstacle to his desires or advancement and was inclined to treat those whom he considered his inferiors with a silent contempt more galling than outspoken superiority.

What are now states united in reality as well as in name were then separate colonies, in many respects antagonistic. There was certainly nothing in common between Louisiana, which was mostly French, and New York, which was a mixture of Dutch and English. France and England were especially antagonistic, and the Louisianan's sympathies were all with France. This and the fact that he was absorbed in himself antagonized him against Van Tromp, and the latter's delicate physical condition induced Le Bouf to treat him as one unworthy of any consideration except the most formal politeness.

The two men might have existed in the same social circle indefinitely had not Le Bouf been charmed by Eugenia Fitz-Herbert. As soon as he began to pay her noticeable attention she saw that the fact troubled Van Tromp.

To analyze a woman's reasons for an act is usually a hopeless task. Eugenia gave Le Bouf some slight encouragement. Why she did so no one could tell. Some thought it an ordinary desire to pique him with a view to assure herself that she held him in thrall. Some thought that she had been captivated with that aggressive air of superiority which the creole assumed over most of those with whom he came in contact. The event proved that she was influenced by neither of these.

When a man loves a woman and another man intrudes himself between him and her, unless she makes a quick decision between the two, there is liable to be trouble between the men. Eugenia, while she did not change in her treatment of Van Tromp, gave Le Bouf just enough encouragement to cause him to think he might win her. The blood between the rivals grew hotter apace, and it was not long before, one evening while the young men of the neighborhood were regaling themselves at the tavern, Le Bouf spoke contemptuously to Van Tromp. Instantly all conversation ceased, the party being shocked by the act. Had the creole spoken the same to any other of the men present there would have been resentment, followed by a duel. What would the weakling do?

"This is all wrong," exclaimed one of the Virginians. "Mr. Van Tromp is an invalid."

"Gentlemen," said Van Tromp, rising, "I have never approved of the method of settling disputes more prevalent in the south than with us in the north, but I confess that it is a boon to me. I may not be able to stand up against an enemy with a rapier, but I need no strength to fire a pistol. If I am challenged the choice of weapons rests with me, and I shall choose the latter. And, furthermore, I propose to kill my enemy."

There was a cold bloodedness in the speaker's tone that impressed those present and sent a chill to Le Bouf. Nothing more was said at the time, the party breaking up. The sympathies were with Van Tromp because he was an invalid, because he was much liked and because the creole's assumption of superiority had prejudiced them against him. One of the young men offered to stand as Van Tromp's substitute in the affair, but he declined the offer with thanks, expressing surprise that it had been made.

Le Bouf saw at once that he was in an unfortunate position. He was compelled to challenge Van Tromp, who he knew had the sympathies of the others present and would, when the affair became known, elicit the sympathies of the planters generally. On consultation with others he was advised to send Van Tromp an apology for the words spoken at the tavern. He did so, and a reply was returned that the apology was not accepted.

He then reluctantly sent a challenge, which Van Tromp placed in the hands of a friend with instructions to choose the derringer pistol used in duels. The seconds arranged that the meeting should take place in a secluded spot the next morning, the second after the insult.

It was impossible to keep the meeting a secret. The afternoon previous to the meeting a brother of Eugenia said to her:

"Gene, Van Tromp is to have a chance to prove his mettle. He's going to meet Le Bouf tomorrow morning."

Eugenia turned pale.

"When and where?" she asked eagerly.

"Nobody knows. It's only known that they're going to fight."

Eugenia said no more, but sought the cabin of Sam, a negro, who adored her and would have given his life for her. She instructed him to discover and let her know the time and place of the coming duel. Sam gained the information from the servants of the principals, the negroes having lain in wait for it at the keyhole.

The next day, when, in the gray of the morning, two duelist parties had assembled, Eugenia rode up to the ground, jumped from her horse and advanced to a point between them.

"I am to blame for this," she said. "It must go no further."

The principals stood still and said nothing.

One of the seconds, after an embarrassing pause, asked Le Bouf if he would withdraw his challenge.

"Certainly," he said. "Anything the lady commands."

"Do you permit the withdrawal?" Van Tromp was asked.

"No."

Eugenia looked at him reproachfully.

"Not for my sake?"

"No," was the firm reply. "Let us proceed."

Eugenia went to him, kneeled before him and begged him to yield. He was obdurate until she assured him that should blood be spilled it would be on her account and it would wreck her life. Then he threw down his pistol and walked away.

But he never forgave her for the one little bit of feminine weakness that had led her to place him at possible peril with a fellow human.

New Outing Sweater Notable For Its Good Looks and Comfort

HANDSOME CAPE SWEATER.

THE dark green cape sweater illustrated here is one of the handsomest of the new models. It buttons diagonally across the front, terminating at the side. The cape falls over the coat effect, so that it is really of double thickness. The collar fastens closely about the throat. This is a splendid sweater for the outdoor girl. It is just what she needs for skating, skiing or coasting. The soft felt which is worn by the model in the picture is an excellent outing hat. Very smart are the heavy gauntleted gloves

Please come see my new Christmas doll
The sweetest, the dearest, the best!
She lies in a beautiful basket,
In dainty pink robes is she dressed.
Her eyes are as bright as the starlight,
Her cheeks are as pink as can be
I wonder if really and truly
Kriss Krinkle brought dolly to me.

The night that dolly came to me
I heard my dad creeping around,
But I lay very still and quiet,
I did not utter one sound.
I took a peek through the keyhole,
But nothing at all could I see;
I wonder if really and truly
Kriss Krinkle brought dolly to me.

When I awakened next morning
Dad cried, "Come see what is here!"
And there was my sweet little dolly;
I tell you, girls, she's a dear.
I love to hold her and rock her,
She knows that we know to be;
I wonder if really and truly
Kriss Krinkle brought dolly to me.

EXTRAVAGANCE IS TABOO.

This Christmas to Be Marked by Common Sense in Gift Giving.

This is to be a practical Christmas, says the Dry Goods Economist. The indications are that, while the exchange of gifts among relatives and friends will be as free and generous as ever, more people than usual will select articles which are really useful.

There is good reason for this attitude. While this country fortunately is far removed from the scenes of carnage and suffering created in Europe by the dread hand of war, the thoughts and imaginations of our people have been profoundly stirred by the stories and descriptions which have come to us through eyewitnesses of battlefields, ruined towns, trains full of wounded, groups of refugees and other appalling features of the terrific struggle.

In the light of these happenings thoughtful Americans are less prone to extravagance and useless expenditures, even though they may not themselves feel the need of economy. Many, too, are generously contributing to the various relief funds. The spirit of helpfulness, which has prompted their contributions to funds for relieving the afflicted in other countries, also suggests the purchase of practical gifts for those nearer and dearer to them.

CULINARY ECONOMIES.

Have your butcher inclose trimmings with your meat. This will increase your dripping as well as soup stock.

Milk slightly turned may be made sweet enough for use by the addition of a dash of common baking soda.

Tie a paper bag over the mincer when grinding stale bread. It will prevent the crumbs from scattering.

When boiling beef or tough fowls add a spoonful of vinegar to the water. It will make them more tender.

Cold corned beef is a good meat for luncheons or even dinner. It provides the hearty ingredient of a meal and yet is not heavy nor overheating.

An icing without eggs may be made thus: Take one cupful of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of milk; boil until it spins a thread, taking care not to cook too much. Remove and stir until smooth and white.

To warm over a thick soup it is best to put it in a double boiler. It must not be covered. If one does not have a double boiler put soup boiler in a pan of hot water over fire.

Seasonable Gifts That Will Please Both Old and Young.

MANY NOVELTIES ARE SHOWN

Muffs and Fancy Sets For Maids and Matrons' Wear Together With Many Sensible Articles Which May Be Devoted to Household Use.

Several of the large metropolitan fur departments are making extensive holiday displays of fur sets and separate muffs, says the Dry Goods Economist. These smaller pieces are particularly salable for gift purposes.

Natural blue fox and dyed blue fox are much in vogue. As the real blue fox is so high in price that it will not become a big factor in the smaller stores, the dyed furs, which closely imitate this coloring, are shown in medium priced qualities.

As these furs are quite as suitable for the matron as for the miss, they will doubtless be an important item in the Christmas showings. Other furs in novelty sets which are in good demand are fitch, skunk, beaver, ermine, the variety of foxes, civet cat, Hudson seal, etc.

Fur articles which are often overlooked are tiger skin rugs retailing from $28 up. These are prominently displayed and attract much attention, as they give a decorative effect to the departments.

Foot warmers are also made in novelty styles for Christmas. They are shown with leather cases having various kinds of pelts for the lining. They retail from $8.50 up.

Children's sets of beaver, of krimmer and of white coney, ermine and fox are placed in Christmas boxes and conspicuously shown in the department stores.

The set consisting of hat, cape and muff which is illustrated here will make a charming gift for a young girl. The three pieces are made of one of the fabric furs closely resembling seal. This is combined with shirred black satin and black velvet buttons. The hat crown is encircled with ostrich, while a piquant effect is imparted by a stiff black quill.

EDIBLE DECORATIONS.

Suspend glass balls, icicles and other light ornaments from the Christmas tree by fine black cotton thread which is practically invisible.

Beside tapers or electric bulbs hang from tree branches apples, oranges—strung on a loop of coarse, light linen carpet thread run up through the fruit with a coarse needle, fastened at the lower end by means of a button mold instead of a knot—bunches of raisins and white and purple grapes, bronzed and gilded nuts. Single cranberries or garlands, strung on coarse thread like popcorn, may be added to give the warm red Christmas touch.

Where scarcity of room makes "the short life and merry one" desirable for the space robbing Christmas tree decorate it with fruit, nuts, cakes and bonbons only and have what German children are taught to call a "tree plundering" on the day after Christmas. Such a "stripping" may come as the windup of a grownup card party or as a children's gathering.

EGGLESS FRUIT CAKE.

Mix two cupfuls of sugar, one cupful of meat drippings, one pound of raisins, one teaspoonful of cloves, two teaspoonfuls of cinnamon, half a nutmeg and two cupfuls of hot water. Boil hard for one minute, then set aside to cool. When cool beat in three cupfuls of sifted flour, with two teaspoonfuls of soda mixed with it, and bake. Five cents' worth of suet will when melted out make about a cupful. If making half the recipe use two cupfuls of flour and a little more than one teaspoonful of soda. Ice heavily if desired. This makes a good fruit cake or an excellent pudding with hard or wine sauce.

A Christmas Gift that Helps

—a sufferer
—your city
—and yourself!

It is but a little gift—yet of all your Christmas Gifts none will so truly express the spirit of this season of hope—or HELP so much.

For every Red Cross Christmas Seal you buy carries into the life of some sufferer from consumption a gift of hope, relief, perhaps even of life itself. And helping to wipe out consumption in your community protects your health—and your city's health as well.

It is your fight. Red Cross Seals are your chance to help in the battle with the "white plague." Buy your share. Every one Seal will HELP.

APRONS FOR CHRISTMAS.

Practical Gifts That May Be Made by Home Needlewomen.

Aprons make nice Christmas gifts. When serving afternoon tea informally many women like to put on a dainty confection of fine lawn or dotted swiss bordered with rows of valenciennes or mechlin lace and edged all about with a little ruffle of the same. Sometimes the apron has a little bib decked out with knots or pale hued ribbons or rosettes of lace.

Then there is the apron designed for the women devoted to fancy work. It is cut very long, and the bottom is turned back to form a series of pockets to hold the varicolored crewels, the crochet or knitting needles and other essentials. It is best made of natural colored linen, with a bit of embroidery down the seams and across the front.

For the woman who must sometimes be her own maid the apron of daintily checked gingham or of white muslin is to be recommended.

The Cotton Trimmed Tree.

An artistic tree for adults is that decorated exclusively with white cotton batting, glass icicles and white electric bulbs. With the wadding intelligently distributed and liberally dusted with diamond powder—not the cheap, coarse and dingy article, but the clean, fine and much dearer sort—and with the icicles "invisibly" hung on fine black thead, such a tree looks as if it had been bodily transplanted from the wintry Christmas wildwoods. Avoid batting when candles are used on the tree.

SANTA MIKE THE CONVICT

A Pathetic Tale Of How A Soft Heart of An Escaped Convict Brought About His Pardon

As the December night closed across the desolate moor, the snow ceased falling, the clouds broke, and a brilliant moon shed its silver light across the wide stretches of rolling whiteness. With the change, it began to freeze fiercely, coating the sodden drifts with a crisp film of ice.

At every step Mike Dempsey's tired feet broke through this coating, and sank deep into the soft stuff beneath, making the traveling so terribly hard that, in spite of the bitter cold, perspiration stood in beads on his thin, brown face, and now and then he was forced to brush it away with the back of his toil worn hand.

He was breathing hard, and evidently desperately wearyr, yet he never stopped for a moment, though now and then, as he ploughed his way onwards, he would turn his head and cast an apprehensive glance back over his shoulder.

Had anyone been near enough to watch him, they would easily have understood his haste. The drab livery plentifully besprinkled with broad arrows marked him as one of the State's unwilling guests. As a matter of fact, Mike Dempsey had been for the last three years a prison inmate and it was with the intention of escaping another seven years of unappreciated hospitality that he had, a few hours previously, "done a bunk" under cover of the sudden snowstorm.

"I've puzzled thim screws. That's wan thing sure," he muttered to himself, and in spite of his fatigue a slight shuckle escaped his thin lips. "But faith, I've pussled meself, too, and I don't know where I am no more than Adam."

"If I cud only git a landmark of some sort!" he went on. "Eanst I cud find my road to the railway, I'd win clear. Mike Dempsey wasn't a navvy siven years for nothing."

He crunched his slow way across a flat valley, jumped a little brook, and pushed up the steep slope beyond. The top of the hill was crowned with a broken mass of huge granite boulders, looking like the ruins of some giant's castle. Mike reached them, and stopped at last to gain breath and survey the surroundings.

A gleam of light in the next valley attracted his attention. It came from a lighted window, and there was something comforting to the lonely fugitive in the red glow cast upon the glittering snow. Without hesitation, he started down hill towards it.

Presently he was cautiously approaching a small house, which stood in a tiny garden surrounded by a low dry-stone wall. There was a gate in front, but Mike preferred to approach from the back, and clambering gingerly over the wall crept up to the window from which the light came.

Raising himself till his head was on a level with the sill, he peered through the uncurtained window into a barely furnished livingroom, lighted by a freat fire of glowing turf.

A couch stood in one corner, on which lay a youngish man whose bandaged head showed him to be the victim of some accident. On a chair beside him sat a sweet-faced woman, and on the bare earthen floor played two children—a curley haired boy of about seven, and a chubby girl a year or so younger.

But what arrested Mike's attention was a little fir tree, not more than four feet high, which stood planted in an old bucket, on the table in the middle of the room.

For a moment it puzzled Mike. Then he gave a little gasp.

"Beggar, if it ain't a Christmas tree! Why, 'tis Christmas eve, I do belave, though, faith, I'd lost thrack of the date in the ould stone jug on the hill. But where's the presints? 'Tis as bare as me own pocket" he went on wonderingly.

At that moment the boy got up, and going forward to the woman, pulled at her dress to attract attention.

"Mother, isn't Santa Claus coming? He's awful late. He shan't have no Christmas tree if he doesn't come soon.

The little lad's tones came clearly to the listener's ears through the thin glass.

"It's the snow, dearie," explained the mother. "Such a bad storm that I expect he was late starting. But now it's cleared up, I daresay he'll be here soon.

Her words were cheery, but Mike caught the anxious glance she gave her husband.

"Go out and see if William's in sight yet, Alice," said the man. "He ought to have been here an hour ago. I only hope nothing's happened to the poor old fellow."

Mike dropped on hands and knees behind the angle of the wall as the door opened, and the woman stood on the threshold looking out down the empty snow-clad valley.

Somehow the pathos of the bare little Christmas tree and the anxious family appealed to his hardened old soul, and when the door closed again he rose to his feet, and instead of following out his first intention and entering the house to demand food and clothes, climbed the wall again and made off down the valley.

"If William's coming this way, there'll be a road of sorts," he said to himself.

And sure enough there was. Though covered deep in snow, he found that there was a path down the valley, which he had little doubt would lead eventually to the main road to Ashampton.

A bend in the valley took him out of sight of the cottage window and once more he was alone in the white frozen desolation. But the snow crust was beginning to bear his weight. Walking came easier, and in spite of hunger and fatigue he began to hope that he might make good his escape.

He had gone another mile when a dark patch in the snow straight ahead attracted his attention, and he caught his breath sharply as he stopped beside it.

For it was a man lying flat on his face, and, judging by the snow which almost covered his body, he had been there in the same position for some time. Beside him lay a half filled sack, also covered with snow.

Mike gave a sharp glance round. The moonlight horizon was still bare. He stooped and turned the man over.

"Dead!" he muttered. "Dead and cold!" as he laid his hand against the chill cheek.

For a moment he stood staring at the dead face, which was that of a little old man, wizened and bearded, and very much of Mike's own type and build.

Then, like a flash, it came to the convict that here at last was his chance, and a thrill shot through his weary frame.

"He'll not need thim duds any more," he muttered and, dropping on his knees in the snow, began with trembling fingers to strip the dead man of his clothes.

They were worn and old, but to Mike as precious as broadcloth, for once he was rid of his convict garb he had multiplied his chances of escape a hundredfold.

The gruesome task was soon completed, and the luckless stranger almost covered with snow. Then, reckless of the bitter frost, Mike stripped off his own slops, and in less than five minutes stood up to all outward appearance an elderly, harmless-looking laborer.

Not till he had completed the whole change of costume down to boots and hat, and had buried his broad arrows, deep in a neighboring drift, did Mike bethink himself of the sack.

He snatched it up eagerly, hoping it might contain food. His last meal had been eight ounces of prison bread and a pint of cocoa, and that nearly twelve hours ago. He was desperately hungry.

The mouth of the sack was tied with a string. Mike's fingers were so numb that he could not untie the knot. But there was a knife in the pocket of his stolen suit, and he quickly cut the cord, and turned the contents of the sack upon the snow.

A small drum, a bog of lead soldiers, a cheap doll, a box of wax tapers, and one of crackers, and a couple of packets of sweets. Not an article of the lot which had cost twenty-five cents and the value of the whole not $5.00.

Mike stood and stared at them. The box of soldiers had fallen open. He stooped and picked up the little painted figures, and replaced them carefully.

"So 'twas poor ould Santy Claus," he muttered. "And the children will be waiting on him. 'Twas bad luck intoirely."

Again he bent down, and quickly bundled everything back into the sack. He laid this by the dead body, and turning on his heel walked rapidly away.

The last fragment of cloud had blown away over the Southern hills and the moon made the snow-clad moor almost as light as day. But the crust was now hard enough to bear the convict's weight, and he traveled quickly across the frozen surface, casting sharp glances to right and left as he went. He was going down hill now, and the further he went the thinner grew the depth of snow, and the plainer was the path. He felt sure that he was nearing the main road to Ashampton. He could not be more than four or five miles from the town now, and with his knowledge of railway matters it would be easy enough to stow away in a truck, and lying under a tarpaulin he carried carried scores of miles away from the hated prison. Besides there was money in his trouser pockets. Only a little, but plenty to buy food and drink, a clay pipe, and a plug of tobacco.

He tried to keep his thoughts n the prospect of these almost forgotten luxuries, yet, somehow it was difficult. The picture seen through the cottage window kept rising before his mind, and though he did his best to thrust it aside, the effort was unavailing.

The other children watching their bare little Christmas tree and waiting for the presents that would never come. Like all Irish people Mike was gifted or cursed with a lively imagination, an he thought of the little ones at last giving up hope, and crying themselves to sleep in their attic under the snow clad roof.

Long years ago Mike had a home of his own, a wife, and a baby. Wife and baby both had died, swept away in a week by an epidemic of diptheria and that had been the beginning of the Irish navy's downfall. But he had never forgotten them, and to-night they seemed strangely near him.

A sound between a grunt and a groan burst from his lips; he stopped and looked back.

Behind was the Arctic desolation of the moor lying ridge upon ridge against the twinkling stars, and back of those hills the grim, granite, prisonhouse. In front were valleys and fields, and the warm lights of the town, the hope of liberty.

"'Tis a fool ye are, Mike Dempsey!" he exclaimed aloud. "Git along wid ye, and don't be delaying for the screws to nah ye!"

Again he started forward, but more slowly than before, and he had not gone a hundred yards before once more he came to a dead stop.

"'Tis no use," he groaned. "I'll just run back an' lave thim things at the dure. There'll be time to reach Ashampton midnight."

The bitter wind was in his face as he turned, back up the hill, but now Mike did not hesitate for a moment. Head down, he hurried onwards, and presently was again beside the corpse of Santa Clause's frozen messenger. Without a glance at the body he snatched up the sack, flung it over his shoulder, and continued his way up the valley.

The glow from the lighted window threw its red beam across the snow as he rounded the curve and came within sight of the lonely cottage, and a corresponding glow warmed Mike's heart as he thought of the pleasure of the children when they found their long-delayed Christmas gifts.

Seeing no sign of life, he slipped in at the front gate, and, stepping very quietly up the path, gained the door, drooped his sack, and giving one sharp tap, turned the bolt.

But he had not counted on the eager children, and before he could get around the angle of the house, curly locks came flying after him.

"William, where is Santy Claus?" piped the childish treble.

"It ain't William, sonny. Tell your mammy as William's got lost, and I brought the things instead. Now I've got to go, for I'm in a mighty hurry."

"I expect you are! came a jeering voice, and a blue-uniformed man carrying a carbine stepped out from the dark shadow round the corner, followed instantly by a second.

Mike gave one glance around. But he was cornered. The wall cut off escape.

"All right," he said sullenly. "I'll come quiet." "You'd better," retorted the warder, whose temper long hours in the snows had not improved, "Mammy, the policemen have took Stanty Clause," cried the little lad.

"What does this mean?" she cried. "Is it William?"

"Not unless he's changed his name since morning, missus," replied the warder. "He was Michael Dempsey when he bunked from Moorlands just afore dinner."

"But I don't understand. He's got William Croker's clothes on and he's brought the things from Ashampton that William went to fetch."

The other warder—a grizzled man shook his head.

"You've got me missus. I don't know what his little game is no more than you."

"Most like he has murdered William," put in the younger warder, sourly.

"He said William was lost Mammy," explained the boy, "so he brought the things instead. And here they is all safe."

"Best make a clean breast of it Dempsey," suggested the elder warder.

"Go and find out yourself, flashed the old convict. "William's down in the valley there.

"You take the chap into the house, George, said the older warder. "I'll go down and see."

Half an hour later he returned.

"I've found William," he said briefly. "He's froze to death. Dempsey took his clothes, but he didn't have no hand in killing him."

"Then, in the name of sense what did he come back here for instead of skimming out?" inquired the younger warder, in blank surprise.

"He came to bring our Kismas presents," explained curly-locks.

"He told me so."

"Well, of all the ever lasting fools!" gasped the junior warder.

His senior wheeled on him sharply.

"A good thing if there were a few more fools of that kind in Moorlands. Ay, and outside, too!"

He turned to Mike:

"Come along, Dempsey," he said in a more kindly tone. "I'll see as the governor knows how it was we come to take you. And I reckon your playing Santy Claus won't do you no harm in his eyes, any more than it has in mine!"

Allies Shell Roulers; Germans Lose 200,000

Germans Batter At Warsaw's Gate; Zeppelen Bomard City and Forty-two Persons Are Injured

Paris, Dec. 21.—French and British are within range of Roulers in West Flanders and are shelling that city. Supreme efforts have been made on the Ypres-Werziek line to get long range guns within range of Courtri, but this has been hindered by swampy ground.

The Hague, Dec. 21.—Latest casualty list issued in Berlin increase the Germans losses in killed, wounded and missing to 200,000 in both Eastern and Western theaters of the war.

These lists cover only part of Nov. and give no figures for Dec. The people of Germany are anxiously awaiting details of the victory said to have been won by Field Marshal Von Hindenburg in Poland. In view of the fact that the Russians have not suffered any great decrease the Kaiser's subjects are beginning to feel uncertain as to exactly what has transpired in Poland.

Petrograd, Dec. 21.—Great Germany guns are trying to batter a way through the Russian offensive position west of Warsaw to open a route for an advance on the capital of Poland. The sounds of the cannonade can be heard in Warsaw, but it is officially asserted here that the Germany advance upon that city is so seriously checked that it cannot be resumed for some time. The people of Warsaw are suffering as the result of the battle raging at its doors. German aviators have bombarded the city three times during the week, killing forty-two persons and injuring many more. Supplies of fo d are giving out.

According to a report from Warsaw, that city was bombarded yesterday by a Zeppelin. Eighteen bombs were dropped, demolishing two houses and killing a number of people and injuring others.

Later six bombs also were dropped from a German aeroplane, but small damage was done in this supplementary bombardment.

A heavy mist was hanging over the city when the Zeppelin approached. Owing to the heavy atmosphere the presence of the giant airship was not detected until it was about a mile from the city.

Warsaw had been on the outlook for just such an invasion and preparations had been made for repelling aerial raiders, following the two previous attacks on the city by German aeroplanes which dropped bombs, one of which landed in front of the United States consulate.

A minute after the Zeppelin was sighted no less than forty high angle guns mounted on house tops and at street corners were raining a fusillade of shells about the flyer, but the raider seemed to bear a charmed life. It swooped across the city, letting go highly explosive projectiles as it passed on an unswerving course.

[redacted]out ten bombs fell in the vicinity of the railway station, where great holes were torn in the ground and the streets were blastd by the forces of the explosions.

A number of women and children were among the dead.

After completing a circuit above the city the airship turned leisurely in the direction of the German lines and apparently unhindered by the terrific fire of the Russian guns, disappeared in the mist.

Berlin, Dec. 21.—(Via Amsterdam).—The capture of Skierniewic, an important railroad center of Poland, forty miles from Warsaw by Germany troops is reported in a dispatch received here to-day. This town is a junction point for the railways. The capture shows that the Germans advanced thirty miles in taking Lodz. As a result of losing control of this place the Russians will be unable to send reinforcements direct to the troops in the Piotskow region. They can only send them in a round about way.

Paris, Dec. 21.—The assaults maintained by the Allies in Flanders is resulting in further raids, according to an official statement issued here this afternoon. It also accuses the Germans of [redacted] the hospital at Ypres. They are also shelling Arras.

The official statement follows:

"During the day of Dec. 20th we made progress in the region of Lombardzyde, St. George's and to the southwest of Korcekerinn, with the occupation of some houses at Sewartelem, and the bombardment by the enemy of the hospital at Ypres.

Between Lyes and the Aisne we captured a forest and occupied also all the first line of the German trenches. Between that road and the first houses of Notre Dame southwest of Lois are heavy artillery battered the enemy in severe combats. To the north of Carney we wrecked the German trenches and overthrew two pieces of a battery placed near Hom. It likewise gained advantage on the Aisne and in the section of Rheims. We made gains in our whole front in the Champagne district, the region of Peronne, Perthes and Beausejour, and also in the Argonne district between the Argon and the Meuse we have made progress on all the fronts, notably in the region of Varcennes where we have advanced 500 meters beyond the heights, and in the region of Gercourt-Bethincourt. In conclusion we have made slight progress on the heights of Mute and in the forest of Chevalliers to the northeast of Fort de Clyon."

Vienna, Dec. 21.—(Via Berlin and Amsterdam)—The fiercest battle that has developed in the Carpathian mountains is raging near Lupkow pass. Austrian forces [redacted] to the relief of Przemysl were met at the Galicia end of the pass by two Russian corps and the fighting has been in progress for two days. The valleys are filled with snow and the wounded perish from cold. It is impossible for the opposing forces to find them after they have been buried beneath the drifts.

BIRTHS MUST BE REPORTED

New Health Law Will Be Enforced After Jan. 1

According to the new law under instructions from the Department at Albany all births must be reported by physicians to the registrar within five days. Anything over five days shall be reported to the proper authorities at Albany.

This rule of the local board of health will take effect Jan. 1st, and all Fulton physicians are urged to comply with the law in order to avoid trouble.

Although this law has been in effect for some time there has been no attempt made on the part of the health officials to enforce it and the majority of the physicians have been a little remiss about observing the rule.

Copies of the law can be secured from the City Clerk.

City Clerk Leon Scudder informed a Times reporter this morning that the local Board of Health intends to stringently enforce a new law adopted by the State during the past year in regard to registering births.

No Provision Made for a Larger Army

Washington, Dec. 21.—Carrying practically everything the War department asked, the Army appropriation bill was agreed upon by the House military committee. No provision was made for a larger army or reserve.

Around $2,000,000 was provided for ammunition in line with the department's policy of bringing its reserve up to 100 per cent.

The committee agreed to hear Representative Gardner Monday. His insistence on an investigation of Na[redacted] the committee was voted on to-day, after the bill was agreed on and when his statement could have no effect in altering it.

The bill carries $101,000,000, a cut of $3,000,000, but practically the same amount appropriated last year.

Lee M'Clung, Former U. S. Treasurer, Dead

Knoxville, Tenn., Dec. 21.—Lee McClung, former treasurer of the United States, died Saturday in a hospital in London after a three months' illness of typhoid fever. Relatives here received information of his death by cablegram from his brother.

Mr. McClung was a former treasurer of Yale university and had held executive positions with the Saint Paul & Duluth Railroad Co. and the Southern Railway Co. The body will be brought to Knoxville for interment.

SEMI-PROFESSIONAL LEAGUE

Matt Fernan, former manager of the Geneva baseball club, who is now associated with the Clark House, this city, is promoting a semi-professional baseball league for next summer. Fulton, Oswego, Oneida, Watertown, Syracuse and other cities in this section of the State will be in the circuit. A meeting will be held next week.

PAVEMENT IN THE SPRING

"The members of the Fulton Chamber of Commerce need not worry about the proposed E. 1st St. pavement as the work on this improvement will be started as soon as the weather conditions will permit in the spring," said City Clerk Scudder this morning.

ATTEND AGENTS' BANQUET

Over twoscore persons were killed and many more injured, probably 110 in all, in the sudden attack of German [redacted] Whitby and Hartlepool, well known places on the North sea coast of England, about 390 [redacted] It was supposed that the Germans ships took a daring chance and crossed the sea in the fog, evading British warships and mines. They poured hundreds of shells into the three towns, only one of which, Hartlepool, was fortified. Several soldiers were killed there, but most of the victims were citizens, including women and children. Several churches were damaged, and the famous old cathedral at Whitby, dating back to the seventh century, was partly wrecked. Here are pictured scenes at Scarborough and Whitby and a map showing the location of the three communities bombarded.

HEAVY SNOW STORM SWEEPING STATE

Twenty Inches of the Beautiful Covers Saratoga; New York City Suffers

Utica, Dec. 21.—A blizzard swept through the Mohawk valley to-day depositing seven inches of snow and tying up traffic on the electric roads and interfering to some extent with telephone and telegraphic communication.

Saratoga Springs, Dec. 21.—Up to 9 o'clock eight inches of snow has fallen here, without no indications of ceasing. Snow is 20 inches deep.

Glenns Falls, Dec. 21.—Northern New York is to-day in the grip of the first storm of the season. A 11 o'clock more than 12 inches of snow had fallen. Reports from northern towns say that the snow fall there is even heavier. Steam and trolley traffic is badly crippled and there is no indication of the storm abating.

New York, Dec. 21.—A heavy sleet storm in New York and Pennsylvania crippled railroad traffic, demoralizing telegraph, telephon and railway service to-day. Every train entering New York was late. The surface and elevated transpociation was maintained with great difficulty. Only a few wires were working between New York and Chicago.

THAW'S EXTRADITION FIGHT

Federal Tribunal Decrees That New York State's Claim Is Valed; Must Return

Washington, Dec. 21.—Harry Thaws long fight to avoid extradition to New York State from New Hampshire where he is now in custody, has ended in a failure. The Supreme Court of the United States decided to-day that the extradition proceedings which New York State instituted to bring about Thaw's return are valid and that legal proceedings in Federal courts to prevent his return must no longer stand in the way. A writ of habeas corpus granted him at Concord, N. H., by Federal Judge Aldrich of New Hampshire was dismissed.

HIGHWAY TAX NEXT MONTH

FIRST INSTALLMENT WILL BE DUE ON JAN. 7; OVER $83,000 DUE

Fulton taxpayers who live along the streets which have been improved during the past year should prepare to meet the tax which will be due upon Jan. 7th.

City Clerk Scudder announced this morning that $83,756 will be due the city for approximately a mile of improved highway consumated during the past summer. The pavements were of bituminous macadam and brick.

The Common Council will hold a special meeting Monday evening, Dec. 28th, when they will convene as a grievance committee to hold a public hearing on all complaints the taxpayers wish to register.

This evening Mayor Fox and the aldermanic board will regulate the terms for collecting the tax by installments.

Those who wish can pay their taxes in one payment thus obviating an annual 6 per cent interest rate which will be levied on the installment collections.

It is said that the entire tax will be collected within six years. It is further believed that no "kicks" will be registered at the public hearing although some taxpayers may appear before the board for information.

FRANK DENIED WRIT

Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 21.—Attorneys for Leo M. Frank under death sentence for the murder of Mary Phagan, to-day made a second effort to bring his conviction before the United States Supreme Court for review. Federal Judge W. T. Newman denied a petition for Frank's release on a habeas corpus writ, and a petition for an appeal immediately was presented. It will be passed on by Judge Newman.

Congratulations

(Palladium)

Oswego, Dec. 19.—The Evening Times, Fulton's new daily paper, made its bow to the public yesterday. The paper is a credit to Editor G. W. Braun and City Editor Raymond J. O'Sullivan, containing a large amount of local news and the telegraph service of the International News association. Fulton should support its new daily and the Palladium welcomes it to the field with the hope that it will prove a great success.

OPINIONS

Municipal Christmas Tree Idea Indorsed by President Wilson.

President Wilson indorsed the community Christmas tree idea, started as 1912 in New York, when a huge fir tree, standing in the center of Madison Square Garden and throwing its light for many blocks, was a gift given to hundreds in the city. The plan was so successful that fourteen of the larger cities of the United States, including Washington, had the same sort of celebration on December of 1913, and the number of 1914 municipal Christmas trees was planned to be still larger.

A copy of the statement issued by the president when his patronage was asked, for the community tree in Washington was made public by the persons who were responsible for the tree in Madison Square Garden. The community idea, said the President in this statement, has in it great possibilities for good. If the plan involved pity or patronage it would fail; if it would not be a community affair. But a tree for all the people would help them realize the things which bind them together as people.

Many beautiful legends are connected with such a municipal Christmas tree as it is proposed to have in this city.

According to an old German tradition, St. Wilfred gets the credit of transforming the tree worship of the savage Teutons to a Christian ceremony. It was about the year 725 that he led a party of priests into central Germany for the conversion of the worshipers of the god Thor. Prince Gregor, the grandson of a king, was with him, having been intrusted to his care by the abbess of the cloister Phazel. On Christmas eve they were fighting their way through the snow of the forest when they came upon the heathen tribe at Geismar. They were assembled under the thunder oak, symbolic of the power of Thor, and were prepared to offer up sacrifice. The white haired priest of the heathens had chosen the young son of the chief as the fairest possession of the tribe, and he was to be offered, for the god was very angry and needed the utmost atonement.

As the venerable priest raised his stone hatchet on high and brought it down to kill the boy, who was ready and prepared for the stroke, Wilfred appeared and warded off the blow with his staff. The people were gratified at his saving their favorite and allowed him speech, and he gave them the creed of the Christians. Then he and Prince Gregor took their axes and cut down the thunder oak. As it was ready to fall the lightning came and split it in many parts, and it fell asunder. The waiting tribe then beheld in its place a slender fir tree, green and sparkling and odorous. Wilfred bade the tribesmen to bear this tree to the hall of Grundhar, the chieftain, to there assemble about it and make merry. About this first Christmas tree the wild men of the woods first heard the tale of the shepherd boy and the fields of Judah, and it gripped their sturdy hearts. The tribes became Christian and ever after used the fir tree as a token of the day of Christ's birth.

Mr. Whitman's Look Ahead.

Mr. Whitman's speech at the Republican dinner was admirable. He does not "misinterpret the people's message" when he believes that the public has trusted itself to "the pledges made by our party and by its candidates." He is equally accurate in saying that "the party is on trial in this state before the whole nation." The Republicans in the Empire State swept back into power in a fashion to compel the country's attention. The political happenings of the next two years in this state may easily determine the party's future in the nation, with a state administration of promise about to begin and a constitutional convention to indicate the party's attitude on the great questions of industrial control, political reform and social service. It is no wonder that the Governor-elect says solemnly that there is no hope for the future of the party if its performances do not measure up to its promises.

Though long years of control made the Republicans believe they were ordained to be blessed in New York State, more recent years have shaken that notion. The Whitman administration will be judged on its performances, just as the Glynn administration was. The Democrats were turned out because, speaking fair, they lived foul. They fostered a period of graft, corruption, waste and inefficiency. They governed the state for what there was in it for them.

The state is sick of that kind of hypocrisy, from any political organization. Mr. Whitman and his associates will go into office pledged to a real reorganization of the state's business for efficiency and saving, no matter whose pocket is hit. The state will expect of them a full measure of realization of the need for political and social reform such as the Democrats showed when they passed the direct primary law and the workmen's compensation law. Mr. Whitman's manifest understanding of this spirit on the part of the public speaks eloquently for the likelihood of his party's making its performances harmonize with its promises.—New York Tribune.

Wait for Her, Boys!

The girl who is unkind to her mother isn't worth a tinker's doggone. This isn't written in any part of the Bible, but it's written in the history of thousands and thousands of misfit homes. If one of you boys ever run across a girl with her face full of roses; with eyes that would dim the lustre of a Colorado sky and with a voice that would make the song of an angel seem discordant, and she says, as she comes to the door:

"I can't go for a few minutes, I've got to help mother with the dishes," don't give her up. Stick to her like a burr to a mule's tail. Just sit down on the door-step and wait. If she joins you in two or three minutes, so much the better; but if you have to stay there on the door-step for a half hour, or an hour, you just wait for her. If YOU don't somebody else WILL and in time you'll be sorry. For you'll realize what you have lost. Wait for her, boys. She's worth it.

Turks Yield To Demand of U. S.

THE CITY MARKET.

The prospect of a city market for Fulton is being urged by all who are desirous for the growth and prosperity of our city and its surrounding territory. The question has been asked by those who have the interest of our merchants at heart if the market would not injure the trade of these merchants. The answer comes on authority from merchants in business in cities where public markets have been established making a direct denial to this; rather, it is stated that their sale of the goods, the staple articles, not handled at the markets increased in proportion to more than overbalance the effect. Fruits and green goods are perishable and the dealer handling them must stand losses. The successful farmer who has disposed of his goods gladly takes home a goodly supply of other articles in their place.

It is a matter, not alone of local but, of national interest that the present high cost of living may be lowered by the opening of free markets, markets that will bring farmer and housekeeper into direct relation. The plan has already been tested in a number of places, the most notable among them being established in New York. Their reception has been enthusiastic and their success proven.

That the housekeepers of Fulton would appreciate the opportunity to lower the cost of living is not to be questioned. That the farmers within trading distance would find the open market a bond of interest, uniting the city and country, is an assured truth.

Let us have the market.

GERMAN RIFLES SPREAD TERROR

Writer in the Trenches Says Bacon, Marmalade and Tea for British

(By John C. Foster.)

London, Dec. 21.—"The music of an approaching 'Jack Johnson' (a heavy German shell) is not exactly pleasant, but we soon get used to it," says Private Cyril White of the London Rifle Brigade, who has been fighting in the trenches in West Flanders in a letter to a friend in letter.

"One hears the report of the big gun, followed immediately afterward by a whistle which rises rapidly to the crescendo of a shriek. Suddenly it pauses and then stops. A moment afterwards there is a terrific explosion, the ground shakes and the dirt flies upwards in a gigantic shower mingling with a tower of black, greasy smoke. Then those of our men who were not buried by earth, or torn by a fragment of the shell inwardly thank their lucky stars and wait for the next one.

Imagine what it has been recently around Ypres when the German's big guns were in constant action and shells were falling every minute. Many of the poor fellows in the trenches were stricken deaf by the uproar.

"The weather is warmer, but it has been bitterly cold. If we had had a thermometer it would probably have registered zero.

"The Germans have trained some of their cannoneers into sharpshooters and their accuracy at a mile or two is positively uncanny. They bombard everything in sight—huts, bits of woodland, hayricks, stonewalls and even suspicious looking mounds of earth, which often are the graves of dead soldiers.

Here is the description, taken from a letter of a private in the London Scottish regiment, of a day spent behind the British lines: "Up at daybreak, just as the sky over the bleak fields to the east is getting gray. Before breakfast we are ordered to take picks and shovels to do some trench work. Away off to the southeast we can hear the mutter of the German artillery. The sound grows louder and louder as more batteries come into action. 'Somebody is getting hell,' we think as we spade up the frozen ground. Then come rations of bread, marmalade and tea with maybe a bit of salt pork or bacon. Then we are detailed off to some trench in front of Ypres 'to lay in the cold mud with nothing to eat till dark when we are relieved. Some times we are ordered against a house from which German snipers have been firing during the day and then followers fighting in the darkness. We get into our blankets tired out and always hungry."

The Y. M. C. A. is collecting money for the erection of comfortable buildings behind the British lines in which the soldiers can gather for amusement during the winter evenings. Dowager Queen Alexandra is supporting this movement.

BRITISH DESTROY TURKISH BARRACKS.

Paris, Dec. 21.—A Havas Agency dispatch from Athens quotes a message from the Island of Tenedoes saying that the recent bombardment by a British fleet in the Gulf of Saros, immediately north of the Dardanelles, destroyed the Turkish barracks on shore and seriously damaged the fortifications. The Turks fled to the interior.

Australian Troops Sailed Sunday

Melbourne, Australia, Nov. 21. (By mail to New York)—Australia's expeditionary Force has lately sailed to play its part in opposing the enemies of Great Britain in Europe. With it also went New Zealand's expeditionary force. The Australians number 25,000 and the New Zealanders 6,000. They will probably be followed by additional contingents.

The Australians are under command of Major-General Godley, horse, foot and guns are in the forces and it is quite a source of pride to the Commonwealth and the Dominion that the troops are virtually as well equipped in every detail as they would have been had they been a part of Sir John French's army when it left England at the outset of the war.

As to the personnel and morale of the Antipodeans it could not be better. In the ranks are athletes by the score, and "rough-riders" from the Australian back-blocks and New Zealand farmers—a hardy lot who are used to rough work and outdoor life. Every stratum of life is represented—members of parliament, professional men, shearers from the sheep—stations which have made Australia famous, horse-breakers, clerks and what not.

The athletes include foot-ball players, swimmers and cyclists, in particular. The fame which Australians and New Zealanders won in the Boer was as cunning and desperate fighters, who instinctively know the value of cover and can kill on foot or mounted with equal facility is likely to be enhanced if the two forces are given a chance in Belgium, France or Germany.

Among the troops are cadets from the Commonwealth Military College at Duntroon, which is modelled after West Point, and also the French aviator Guillaux who had been giving exhibition flights in Australia, but is now on his way to join the military aerial service of his country.

Just when the forces left Australian shores is not publicly stated. A censorship as well as to the transports and the convoy still prevails, but when the flagship of the fleet and other troopships left here there were scenes of great enthusiasm and a big crowd bade the packed steamers farewell.

A month or two ago there were parades of the Australian Forces which at that time divided among the several states at concentration camps and there were accompanying demonstrations of patriotism.

In Melbourne, Sidney Adelaide and Brisbane.

In New Zealand much the same scenes were enacted and it is probable that no finer body of men—not even at the height of the African war—was ever gathered for military ends in any part of the modern British Empire, as is now on its way from that Dominion to the battlefields on the Continent. Nor is this in any way disparaging the Australian force. Both contingents will give excellent accounts of themselves ere a great many months.

Emden's Crew Captured.

Paris, Dec. 21.—The ministry of marine has announced that the British auxiliary cruiser Empress of Japan had captured the collier Exford, having on board three officers and 40 men from the German cruiser Emden, sunk Nov. 10 by the Australian cruiser Sydney. These are the 40 men who escaped to Cocos Island and subsequently sailed away in a commandeered schooner.

DIAMOND DUST

In Cleveland they are of the opinion that it doesn't make much difference whether the Naps begin training March 1, February 1 or not at all.

If Ban Johnson is as successful in selling the Yankees as he was in killing the Federal league Jake Ruppert will devote his attention exclusively to beer.

Betcha Garry Herrman never will boom Sec. Josephus Daniels for the presidency of the National league.

HOT LINERS

The Windy City's Pride.

The wedding guests had gathered;
There was chatter in the church,
(The villain, Charley Murphy had been left far in the lurch)
Charles Weegham as a bridegroom
Was about to take for a bride,
The baseball club known as the Cubs.

The bridegroom waved aloft a roll—
A dower for the bride,
"If any one objects, speak out,"
The dashing bridegroom cried.
Then up bobbed Charley Murphy,
From underneath a pew,
He shook with rage, his eyes flashing fire
As options sometime do.

"Hold on, the dower ain't enough;
This wedding can't go on"
Cried Charley Murphy from a nook,
Where he had hid since dawn,
The guests sat in amazement,
The bridegroom couldn't think,
But Garry Herrmann saved the day;
He said: "Let's get a drink."

FEDS TAKING CARE OF FEDS

Comiskey Paid Well for Collins; He Remains Tied to a Job

New York, Dec. 21.—Ban Johnson and his organized pals who are bellowing about the Feds committing financial suicide by paying huge salaries to such men as Walter Johnson, Joe Tinker, et al, might take a squint at the hari-kari doings of themselves.

The Walter Johnson and Eddie Collins cases furnish an excellent instance of why the Feds are able to give the organized folks the hoarse horse laugh.

Johnson and Collins ranked as among the most valuable men in organized baseball. Both were leaders in their respective positions. Both had about the same money value if placed on the market.

Well—Charles Comiskey, "the brains of the American League" and the owner of the White Sox wanted Collins. He got him—at a price. Press agents of the American League say Comiskey paid $50,000 for Collins. We doubt the figures. About $25,000 was more like it. But let us take the word of the press agent for it. Collins cost Comiskey $50,000 in cash at the outset.

After paying $50,000 for Collins, the White Sox owner bound himself to pay to Collins for a term of five years an annual salary said to be $15,000. So it will be seen that to get and keep Collins Comiskey had to part with $50,000 and bind himself to pay another $75,000.

And now as to Johnson:

If Collins was worth $50,000 so was Johnson. The Washington club in an effort to keep Johnson offered him $16,000 a year for three years, according to reports. Had Johnson signed the club would have been bound to pay him $48,000 during a three year period.

This total added to the $50,000 value of Johnson as a pitcher would have made the cost of Johnson just $98,000 for any organized club that might have wanted to buy him.

The Feds got Johnson without paying a dollar in purchase money and they got him at a total cost to them of $36,000—Johnson's two year salary at $18,000 a year.

Comiskey is a part and parcel of organized baseball. There was so much "advantage" in that fact that he had to guarantee a payment of $125,000 to get a ball player of no greater worth than the Feds, the enemy of organized baseball, got for a guarantee of $36,000.

If it is "financial sucide" for the Feds to pay $36,000 for a player that would have cost an organized magnate $98,000, what do you call business genius?

It is any wonder that the Feds aren't overly anxious at this time to get under the wing of organized baseball? What's the advantage just now? At present they can get $98,000 worth of baseball value for $36,000. If they joined hands with O. B. they couldn't get bargain rates. They would have to pay the regular price, as Comiskey did.

In a year or so when the bargain counter offers no more inducements the Feds may join organized baseball. And they may not. Maybe at that time even if organized baseball waves a supporting hand, the Feds may ignore it and decide to go on alone and unaided.

Sometimes, y're infants grow so rapidly that they are able to get along without any outside help, especially if during their early days they are compelled to shift for themselves and thereby are forced to develop at an early age their own resourcefulness.

What Is Done In the Overland Plant

In the Toledo plant of The Willys-Overland Co., utilization of sawdust and scrap from the wood working departments alone saves $40,000 per year in the coal bill. Not only is the fact of this large saving by utilizing an otherwise waste product of interest, but the mechanism by which it is accomplished is an excellent example of the usefulness to which automatic processes have been developed.

To operate the Wyllis-Overland drop forge plant, and to heat the 25 acres of new buildings just completed, requires 10 huge boilers of a total of 3,800 horsepower capacity. These boilers would consume 200 tons of coal for every winter day if it were necessary to use coal. The use of the waste from the wood working shops saves almost 1-3 of this, and practically eliminates need for coal in summer.

Large tubes lead from the point on every machine where waste drops to a central point beneath the floor and to which all the waste wood products are drawn by a strong forced current of air. The scrap is taken from this point by an endless leather belt to a powerful wood grinder which completely pulverizes the entire mass.

This crushed wood is blown by electric fans into huge bins, located above the furnaces; chutes from these bins lead directly to the fire pots into which at stated intervals a fixed quantity is released by automatic means.

The coal cars run on tracks located alongside the power house, from which the coal is automatically dumped into a large receiving bin. This coal is picked up by an endless chain of automatic hoppers that carry it up into compartments above the furnaces. As the fuel is consumed the ashes are automatically separated and dropped below the grates into another endless chain of moving buckets. These buckets carry the ashes outside the furnace room and empty automatically into the unloaded coal cars. The arrangement of the mechanism is a marvel of accessibility. Monstrous as is the physical size and capacity of the equipment, every part can be reached for inspection and necessary repair work quickly and conveniently. The pipe in which the steam is conducted from the boilers to the buildings where it is to be used are located in concrete trenches. These pipes which at the source are 20 inches in diameter are large as sewer pipes in average size cities. Because of the way in which they are piped through the trenches every section, joint and fitting is accessible. Should difficulty of any kind arise the time and cost necessary to correct it is thus cut to a minimum.

This case, where neither the wood, coal nor ashes are handled during the entire process. Shows how thoroughly John N. Willys, President of The Willys-Overland Co., has provided superior facilities for the manufacture of the Overland.

EFFICIENT AERIAL FORCE.

London, Dec. 21.—During raids by French aviators into Alsace and Lorraine are demonstrating that the confidence as to the efficiency of the aerial force has not been misplaced.

A Berlin dispatch today says that aeroplanes flying over Saarburg, a Lorraine town, bombarded the place with bombs, killing two German soldiers and causing heavy damage. The same aviator, says the Berlin dispatch dropped bombs upon the Rieding railroad station and upon the village of Heming.

Reports from Paris yesterday that Metz and Strassburg, both German strongholds, had been attacked by French aviators. The Berlin message makes no mention of any bombardment of these fortresses, but Saarburg lies almost midway between Metz and Strassburg. Like Rieding, it is on the railroad line connecting them.

The People's Column

An Open Letter to Hon. Geo. M. Fanning, City Attorney.

In publishing this letter to you it is not my purpose nor desire to in any way do an injustice to you and I would very willingly pass this occasion by in silence were it not for the fact that the lawsuit against me as city chamberlain and recently "settled on its merits" bears every evidence of having been conceived and prosecuted in a spirit of unfairness and falsehood.

In the summer of 1913 in conversation with a friend you stated that "you did not believe that Mr. Deuel wrongfully took one cent of the city's money," and when he asked "why, then, do you sue him?" you replied, "Well, I had to." If I could I would be very glad to believe that such was your conviction, and that you were unwillingly executing the command of your superior in office, but, when I recall that you contemptuously brushed aside, as of no value whatever, everything I had to say by way of explanation or defense, and also when I come to look analyically into the "brief" you submitted to the court arguing against a "Bill of particulars" it completely undermines my faith in your honesty of purpose in this matter. It is no doubt true that this suit against me would never have been brought had you not advised it and no degree of professional courtesy can excuse the course taken by you.

Money Wanted.

Now, I call upon you to explain through the public press your reasons for advising this prosecution. The taxpayers have a right to know this because you received a large sum of money as attorney's fees in addition to your regular salary, which would of course, have been impossible had there been no lawsuit. It is impossible at this time to give a detailed analysis of your "brief." A few quotations are sufficient to impeach your truth and sincerity in this matter. Thus, on page 9, "The complaint is not based upon the report of F. M. Hart, so far as is shown on its face," but you sue for the "deficit" he names without ever having made any independent effort so far as we know to determine the accuracy of his findings.

It is repugnant to every fair-minded citizen to have the public funds wasted in litigation without reason when no evidence whatever can be found of any wrongdoing. In "Point I" you admit that "It is not possible for the respondent to provide such a bill of particulars as is asked for," when it is pertinent that any graduate from the eighth grade of our public schools could very easily find such "particulars" if they existed, by tracing the payments from the tax warrants into the cash book.

Could Detect Error.

Again, on page 6 you say that "There is, of course, no source of revenue to the city except from the collection of taxes assessed and levied against the property within its corporate limits!" Is it possible! Our people, then, live under the delusion that we receive income from such sources as school monies from the State, and from tuitions, license fees, excise, tax fees, interest on deposits, fines in the police court, for water, and other sources?

Again, on page 7, "and it is perfectly apparent that the chamberlain, if his funds balance, should have in cash the difference between the amount which he certifies from the entries in his warrant he has collected and the amount shown to have been disbursed from the various funds." This is a wrong conclusion because the premise is false. It takes no cognizance of any "source of revenue" other than "from the entries in his warrant he has collected." The chamberlain should naturally leave much more in cash than this "difference."

Again on page 7, "but it is not possible for the respondent to go back to his warrant and say to him you have neglected to turn over the money paid by John Doe or Richard Rowe of such and such a date, because there is no way to ascertain what particular sum he has not accounted for." Wrong. If a payment on the tax of John Doe or of Richard Rowe was recorded in the tax warrant and not in the cash book this fact would be very easy to determine and anyone above the grammar department, except possibly the respondent, could readily detect the error. If no "bill of particulars" could be discovered I ask in all candor why "this action" should not be defeated"—or better still, killed "in the bornin'?"

Again, on page 10, "The respondent bases its action upon the amount certified to by Mr. Deuel as being the amount he collected, can the "tax rolls and warrants") and insist that he shall account for that amount, less his disbursements." Here the same bogie is again introduced to befog the issue. The man is not living who could take the balance in any fund, or all of the funds, and say that such and such per cent of the amount collected on the "tax rolls and warrants" remains unexpended for money received from other sources is constantly being credited to and disbursed from these funds.

An Insult.

Again on page 11, "They (the appellants) will know that the city cannot by any possible means ascertain the names of the taxpayers, the amounts which each taxpayer paid and the dates when paid," and again on page 13, "The only evidence of the receipt of the money the city has is the entries made in the tax roll and warrant by the appellant Deuel." These statements are an insult to common intelligence. No one believes that the "city" is unable to do what seems to be above indicated.

Again in point 2 you say that "A bill of particulars should not be ordered which will in fact defeat this action." Or in other words—if it please the court, the charge of conversion, has been made against the appellant without any foundation in fact, the "city" has no evidence to sustain the charge, and we admit that it is utterly impossible for us to find any evidence, therefore the court should not order us to prove our case! You owe it to yourself, as a public official, that you give through the public press a statement justifying the part you have taken in this matter. It is for you to state whether it was your purpose to perform a public service in prosecuting a charge which you must have known, or could have known was false. Our citizens, I am sure, will give a righteous judgment in the case.

Respect, etc.,
GEO B. DEUEL,
City Chamberlain 1910-11.

Recover $8,160 Of Bandit's Loot

Cincinnati, Dec. 21.—Detectives late to-day recovered $8,160 of the $12,660 obtained by Frank G. Hohl, the automobile bandit, who was killed following his raid on two banks last Thursday. The remaining $4,500 is believed to have been mailed by Hohl to a man in Louisville, Ky. All efforts to locate the package of money through the postoffices, however, have so far proved unavailing.

The money recovered to-day was found in a room which Hohl rented last Wednesday. Becoming suspicious because his tenant did not reappear the landlord to-day notified the police, who searched the room and found money hidden in many places. A valise and a revolver also were found.

It was believed that Hohl had obtained $13,100 from the two banks, but a final check-up to-day revealed that the West End branch of the Provident Savings Bank and Trust Co. had lost $7,100 and the Library Banking and Savings Co., $5,560.

The Current Events club meets this evening with Mr. and Mrs. John Hunter, Highland St.

A LETTER TO SANTA CLAUS:

Dear Santa:

Mamma has been trying to decide what she wanted for Christmas and the other day we went by the Electric Light Co.'s office. In the window we saw some of the finest electric appliances ever exhibited.

She expressed her desire for one of the Electric Toasters or Coffee Percolators, so we asked the price and were very much surprised to learn how cheap they are.

I know Papa would also be much pleased with a Coffee Percolators because he finds fault now with the coffee mamma makes.

Please bring her a Coffee Percolator or Toaster for Xmas.

Lovingly yours,

MISS FULTON.

OUR IDEA of Service to Patrons is to have everybody feel welcome in our store, that we want their trade and are willing to show them new styles at all times, whether they buy or not. Many people are hard to fit, but we would rather lose a sale than let a customer go out with an ill-fitting shoe. When you are shopping around town, use our store for your headquarters. We will be glad to care for your parcels while you shop elsewhere.

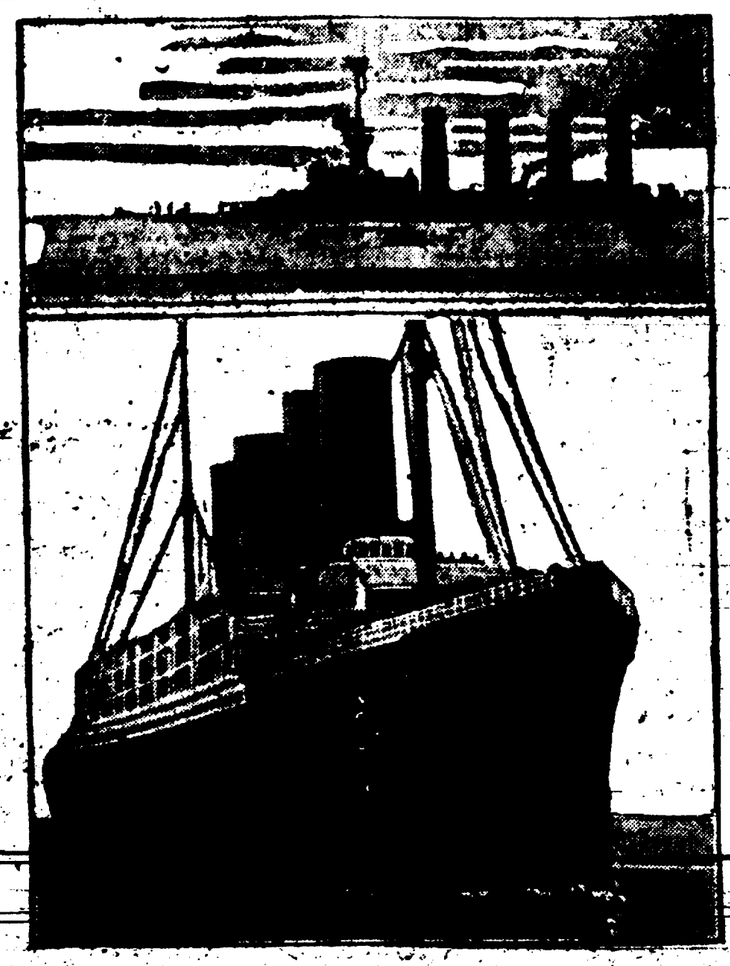
NEW CARS COMING



Traffic manager Gonzanbach of the Empire United Railways, Oswego-Syracuse division, announces that very soon this city shall have a service from the East to West Sides that will make the public sit up a bit. New cars have been ordered and when placed on local rails the people of this city can truly say, "Well done."

The traffic manager has not yet replied to complaints relative to closing the local station and waiting room at an early hour. This practice of early closing causes a lot of suffering and the hope is indulged that the complaint will receive attention.

13 PERSONS OVERCOME

New York, Dec. 21.—Thirteen persons were overcome by gas following an explosion of a gas main at No. 154 Bedford Ave., Williamsburg. All were rescued but are in critical condition.

Two German Commerce Destroyers Sought by the English Squadron.

Photos by American Press Association.

After the English fleet under Admiral Sturdee had destroyed four of Admiral von Spee's German warships in the south Atlantic and had run the fifth, the Dresden, to port a search was immediately begun by the British ships for the German cruiser Karlsruhe and the converted liner Crown Prinz Wilhelm. Both these ships were supposed to be somewhere in the Atlantic. The Karlsruhe had from the first been a close second to the Emden as a commerce destroyer, though not in so spectacular a way. The Crown Prinz Wilhelm slipped out of New York at the start of the war loaded with coal and presumably arms. Very little has been heard from her since.

GILFILLAN ESTATE $1,944.44

The difficulties of the estate of Esington Gilfillan, the inventor of an egg carton, were settled in Syracuse Friday, when his daughter withdrew objections to the claim of Martin F. Dillon for $733.19 for legal services. The account filed shows that but $1,944.44 remains of the $10,000 received for the egg carton. John Hunter of this city was financially interested in the invention.

OBSERVE THE HOLIDAYS

Washington, Dec. 21.—"It is impossible to keep members of Congress in Washington over the holidays," today asserted former Speaker Cannon. He added that the plan of the leaders to recess only for a few days at Xmas "will not work."

"In the 38 years I have served I can recall only once when Congress failed to adjourn over the holidays," said the veteran legisator. "That was the Forty-seventh Congress, I think. Grover Cleveland was about to come up as President and the Republicans wanted to clean up a lot of legislation and they refused to recess, but the members absolutely refused to sit in their seats."

SYRACUSE MAN BUYS FARM

Annie M. Church of Syracuse has sold a large farm in the town of Parish to Arthur Biggs.

The farm is ready stocked and is in good condition. The farmhouse is an eight-room affair. Barns are three in number, two of them of modern construction. General farming has been the practice on the farm in the past; there being room for stock, fruit, vegetables, berries and grain crops.

Fred Martin is the world's champion speed roller skater. He holds the record for twenty-four hours, having covered 258 miles, 1,027 yards during that time. This record was made in Milwaukee in 1913.

COSTLY BLAZE

Parkers Landing, Pa., Dec. 21.—Many daring rescues by volunteer firemen were effected when two hotels were burned to the ground early Saturday. Two stores, a livery stable and the telephone exchange were also destroyed. The loss is estimated at $75,000.

Fashionable Fixings for Presents

New Veils—Pierrott Sets—Lingerie Clasps Sealing Wax Ornaments.

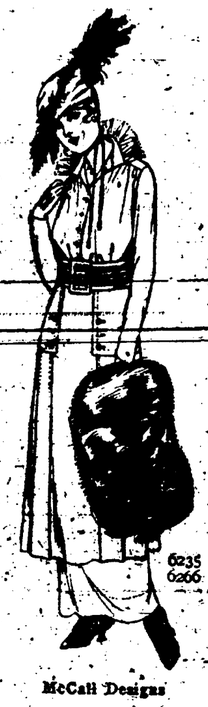
New York.—It is nearly always safe to give a woman something to wear, as a present, and the field for choice is so large that something acceptable is not difficult to find even if strict economy is necessary. Veils are in favor with the fashionable set, and loose hanging styles lie with masque effects. It is all a question of liking, and you can spend a pretty penny on hand wrought lace, or turn out a dainty veil for a trifle if you will buy the plain net and stitch on an edge of matching velvet ribbon, though if you buy this made up it costs a lot more.

Very fashionable are the Pierrot sets of velvet, with a neck piece consisting of a small fitted yoke, and an upstanding collar that comes to the chin. The muff is a long puff of the same material finishing in frills that slip up over the sleeve when the muff is carried. Linings may match in color, or contrast and it is pretty to have a lingerie ruche inside the velvet collar. A touch of fur adds very much but is not at all necessary.

Neck Wear.

Smart neckpieces, with or without matching cuffs, were never more in demand, and no one has too many of them. These can be picked up in the shops or made at home from odd bits of lace and organdie, and from linen handkerchiefs, their hemstitched finishes serving admirably for dainty accessories quickly made.

Tulle scarfs ending in silk rings that slip over the finger are new and desirable additions for evening wear. Butterfly bows of tulle on small straps of the same that have a ribbon flower at the centre are very pretty when adjusted, the butterfly at the left side and rose at the right.



Neck bands of velvet ribbon ornamented with pretty slides, designs done in crystal or pearl or jet nail heads, or with fine head embroideries, are likely to be appreciated, now that so many ruches and neck fixings are held in place by hands.

Lingerie Clasps.

Little straps of ribbon, embroidered prettily that hold the lingerie in place on the shoulders, are rather preferred to the metal ornaments for the same purpose. These fasten with snaps or with loops and button if preferred.

Fancy bows in sets with a tiny sachet, concealed in their loops somewhere, make another dainty gift.

Girdles and sashes offer the widest variety of suggestions, and need little making now that such articles are so loosely adjusted, that they practically shape themselves on the wearer.

An old time fad has been received in making of sealing wax ornaments. Hat pins, belt-buckles, beads, slides, combs and fancy hairpins are a few of the articles made attractive by being overlaid with sealing wax in various pure colors and combinations. The easiest and most successful way to do this form of enamelling, is to use old trinkets, or cheap ornaments as a foundation, simply covering them with the melted wax. Combinations of green and blue—the peacock colors—are especially modish.

Lucy Carter.

Eagle Looks Like Crow.

Uncle Joe Cannon is in Washington for a visit. He brought with him a few comments on Democratic economy, the administration and Secretary Bryan.

"Democratic economy is like that of the new clerk in the country store who carefully watched the spigots, but carelessly knocked out the plug from the bunghole," said the former speaker. "The President is mighty good at composition writing and his messages are fine examples of literature. But the people want results.

"Mr. Bryan has been preaching 'from the text 'be good and you'll be happy' for nearly twenty years, but when he took charge of our foreign relations he made the American Eagle look like a crow on the other side of the Rio Grande."

Would Serve Her Brother's Time

Madison, Wis., Dec. 21.—Gov. McGovern received a letter from Miss Louise Kester of Chicago, in which she asks to be allowed to serve out the five years remaining of her brother's term in the Wisconsin prison at Waupun. She writes in part:

"I believe my brother, M. R. Kester, innocent of the murder charged against him and as has people deagainst him and as he has people dependent upon him and I am fifty years old, a Christian and a college graduate with a certain calmness of spirit and have no one dependent upon me, I ask your honor to let me substitute for my brother, if some one must be punished to satisfy seeming justice."

IRELAND A CLERIC FIFTY YEARS AGO

St. Paul, Dec. 21.—Archbishop Ireland observed to-day the fifty-second anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood. No formal ceremony was held, but the day was observed quietly. The passing of this anniversary leaves Archbishop Ireland the third oldest bishop in the United States in point of service. The other old members are Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop Ryan and Bishop Hogan.

Suggestions That May Make Holiday Shopping Easy.

DAINTY TRIFLES FOR MILADY.

Beautiful and Practical Tokens Which May Be Purchased in the Stores or Which May Be Duplicated by the Clever Woman at Home.

The shops are full of attractive novelties for the Christmas shopper. The difficulty is usually in the abundance of the display. For shoppers who have difficulty in making up their minds the list given here may serve as an inspiration.

Among the most attractive souvenirs are the leather novelties, decorated with stamped or hand tinted work. The bag illustrated here is a handsome specimen of this work.

Beaded shell pins are for the hair.

The latest earrings extend up on the ear instead of down on the lobe.

Massive necklaces of cut jet are very striking.

A heart shaped hand bag for evening is favored by debutantes.

Small neckwear of marten and lynx, also ermine and white coney, is much in demand.

The cameo brooch is much worn.

Some of the newest sweaters have leather collars and cuffs.

There are dainty slipper buckles in square or oval shapes made of the tiniest flowers in colors to harmonize with the gown.

A new veil is caught into a velvet

HANDSOME LEATHER BAG.

neckband decorated with rhinestones or cut steel.

Very lovely is a blouse made of white voile, with a broad collar of pale pink voile embroidered with white.

New umbrella handles have a watch in them. The watch key or winder, when not in use, is folded into the end of the handle.

Colored stitching to match the suit or gown is the latest cry for gloves. The stitching is very broad and heavy on the backs, the seams are sewed as usual with white.

Black and white neckwear is fashion's whim. Charming chemisettes in black and white to wear with the coat and suit are obtainable.

There are hand bags of silk with a little flounce of plaited silk or crape about the top, quite like a diminutive overskirt.

White silk stockings are worn with bronze buttoned strap slippers of very fanciful cut for afternoon dancing. These creamy or pale ecru toned stockings are much richer in effect with black footwear also than the pure white silk hose.

A blue silk hand bag is made with plaits running across, not up and down, as they often run. It is a novelty and therefore will probably be the object of a good deal of attention. It is finished with a strap handle of the silk.

GLOVES FOR GIFTS.

They Always Make Safe and Sane Presents For the Holidays.

Some of the new gloves have seed pearl embroideries on the back and over the wrist, and others are embroidered in colored threads interspersed with beads—rather a fad notion, but one that will appeal doubtless to women who are ever on the lookout for something absolutely different from things that other women are wearing.

Black gloves with white stitching and white gloves with black stitching are fancied by those who make something of a fetish of the white and black combination in every department of outer apparel. Women with large hands should beware of adopting such gloves, because the contrast stitching serves to call attention to the hand. The all white and the black glove are best for such women.

* * *

For wear with the tailored suit gloves of mastic colored suede have been revived. As a matter of fact, the Frenchwomen have been wearing such gloves with their walking suits for the last several seasons; but somehow the American woman cannot bring herself to give up the white glove, no matter what the time of day or the occasion on which she wears them.

MINCE PIES.

Allow one tablespoonful of shortening (lard or butter) to each cup of flour. Sift flour and put in a pinch of salt. Do not rub shortening in flour; chop in with a knife. Work in as much cold water as will make dough soft enough to roll easily in your hands. Now cut it in as many pieces as you need tops and bottoms for pies and take each piece and roll out on board separately, large enough to cover pie plates neatly.

Grease your pie plates and place a little flour on them and then knock it all off again. Now place your dough on bottom and wet the edges with cold water. Fill in with mince meat. Now when you roll your top fold it over and cut three slits in it and gently cover your pie. Press edges down with top of a spoon all around and mix one egg with a little milk and brush this mixture carefully over your pie. Don't be afraid to wet it evenly all over and bake in a good hot oven.

Mince pies should be thoroughly baked on the bottom as well as the top.

NEGLIGEES FOR CHRISTMAS.

Elegant and Comfortable Models That May Be Made For Gifts.

Bath gowns of elderdown flannel and leopard cloth, bound at the edge with silk, make welcome gifts for elderly folk. They may be obtained at such reasonable price that it hardly pays to make this sort of negligee at home, but when it comes to peignoirs of soft albatross lined throughout with silk—the ideal cool weather garments which are both warm and dainty—many dollars may often be saved by purchasing the materials by the yard and doing the work in one's own sewing room.

A negligee is very easy to make, provided one has a good pattern, for there is no necessity for careful fitting or draping. Four yards of double width albatross or cashmere, with an equal amount of india silk or the lovely pongee silk, which is soft and clinging in texture, will make a luxurious peignoir. White albatross lined with pale blue or pink and trimmed with ribbons to match is the usual choice for my lady's boudoir.

GIFTS FOR BABY.

Dainty articles of wearing apparel, toys designed to please his tiny majesty or dainty articles for his personal use make the most suitable gifts for baby. Whether it be cap, bootees, bib or dress, handmade articles are the most desirable. Fancy pins are useful.

A silver cup or spoon or a bread and milk set is nice for the youngster who has reached the high chair stage. If you give baby a toy select something unbreakable.

Illustrated here are some gift suggestions. The fancy set for baby consists of brush, comb and safety pin ring, together with a small doll. The

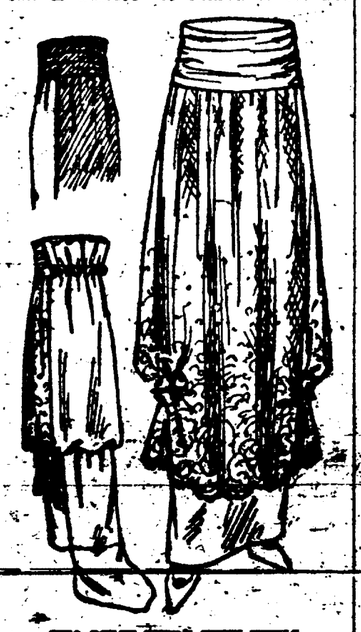
The baby bootees are of pale pink silk, quilted, with tiny flowers and leaves embroidered in pastel shades. The tops are edged with white eiderdown and finished with bows of pink baby ribbon.

Trees For the Birds.



After your Christmas tree has lived its little day and has been stripped don't throw it out on the ash heap or make a bonfire of it. Plant it in your back yard, hang upon it small shallow cornucopias made of stout pasteboard filled with cracked corn, breadcrumbs or bird seed, and to its topmost branches tie a juicy boiled beef bone and a good sized chunk of suet. You'll find that the birds will appreciate their Christmas tree almost as much as did your children.

FASHION HINT

By JUDIC CHOLLET

Here is a skirt that can be made with or without a tunic and finished with or without the girdle at the upper edge, so that it becomes adapted to a great many occasions and a great many materials.

The draped apron tunic is especially pretty made from flouncing, but it can be utilized for chiffon or for net or for crepe de chine or for any other thin material that can be treated in such ways.

For the afternoon dance a pretty effect could be obtained by using chiffon in place of lace flouncing and finishing with a picot edge.

For the medium size the plain skirt will require two and five-eighths yards of material thirty-six inches wide, the tunic two yards of flouncing thirty-six if the deep girdle is used, forty-one inches wide for high waist line without girdle, and the draped back two yards with train or one and three-eighths yards for walking length.

This May Manton pattern is cut in sizes from 24 to 32 inches waist measure. Send 10 cents to this office, giving number, 8422, and it will be promptly forwarded to you by mail. If in haste send an additional two cent stamp for letter postage. When ordering use coupon.

GIFTS FOR GIRLS.

For the debutante or the young girl who has almost reached the stage of womanhood the buying of gifts is a delight. So many dainty trifles are available, and youth has not lost its capacity for the enjoyment of these. One is always reasonably sure, except in the case of those incredibly pampered, to be rewarded by real appreciation.

In deciding upon her gift it is well to bear in mind that the ornamental makes a particular appeal to her. For example, she would like satin slippers with rhinestone buckles and silk stockings to match—or any one of the three would please her thoroughly. An empire fan with carved sticks, a short string of pearls and bar pins never come amiss.

If she has a watch a set of jeweled slides on ribbon will make a most acceptable gift. Then there are silver mesh purses and the silver purse and carcase combinations so much in vogue just now. Odd rings are dear to the heart of most girls, and novelties in the way of dressing table accessories are usually welcome.

PLUM PUDDING.

Take one cupful of soft bread crumbs, a cupful and a half of chopped suet, some seeded raisins, one cupful of sugar, two cupfuls of flour, half a cupful each of molasses and citron (chopped very fine), two apples chopped fine, three beaten eggs and one teaspoonfuls each of soda, cloves, cinnamon and salt. Fill a large mold only half full, cover tightly and steam continuously for three hours. The apples give a softness to the pudding, which makes it keep a long time in good condition. Chopped figs may be substituted. Note.—When making the plum pudding it takes but a little longer to make two or more. These make charming and practical gifts, correctly wrapped, tied in holly ribbon or the new gold or silver cord, and a spray of holly attached. Individual puddings are also fine.

CHRISTMAS PARCELS.

Should Go Forth Gayly Encased In Holiday Wrappings.

The humblest gift should go forth on its Christmas travels in decorative dress. No one should think of sending a Christmas package in ordinary wrappings, and each season there are fascinating adornments for the inside and outside of a package.

Gifts that are to be sent by mail or express are put in boxes or heavy wrapping paper, as well as the decorated tissue paper. These are fastened with heavy red cord, carry a gummed label for address and a Christmas seal in addition. Those sold for the benefit of the Red Cross society are in favor.

The forehanded one who gets off her packages early uses a "Do Not Open Until Christmas" label to stave off the inquisitive. These are bought in packages ready gummed.

If your list is large lay in a supply of Christmas boxes in a variety of sizes. They are adorned with holly paper or embossed red and white top and made suitable for small or large gifts. There is a special holly box to pack a book, others for candy and attractive ones to fit gloves, handkerchiefs, neckties or men's suspenders.

HANDMADE LINGERIE.

Handmade lingerie is expensive in the shops. The clever needlewoman will therefore find a dainty brassiere a welcome gift for women friends.

An especially good contour is given by a brassiere that is of fine eyelet embroidery with a closed front and crossed adjustable back with elastic at waist and shoulders to keep it in perfect shape. The front has a V

Another design of hexagon net, reenforced hooks in front, has a V neck, back and front, dress shields, val edging and no boning.

Especially suitable for chiffon, net and lace blouses is this model. It is of shadow lace attached to almost invisible sleeves of net, in which dress shields may be sewed. The brassiere is drawn up at the top with ribbon.

Cord and Tassel.

The cord and tassel promises to prove an important trimming accessory. In Paris the pearl tassel has already made its appearance, and later on there will be seen tassels in jewels of varied hues and also in silk in matching tone with the frock. This sort of garniture is particularly effective with the velvet costume.

MOUNTING THE TREE.

The strongest iron or wooden Christmas tree foot is not so safe and not nearly so ornamental for the small tree as planting it in a large sized flowerpot or jardiniere, weighted with the family flatirons and filled full of moist sea sand, packed firmly and solidly round the tree trunk and the weighters.

CHARMINGLY CHIC AS WELL AS USEFUL IS COAT OF COVERT.

Automobile coat of sand colored covert cloth, with loose sleeves, ending in a deep cuff of sealskin, with band of seal extending to the elbow. A collar of sealskin is buttoned across with a large tab of seal, finished with two large velvet covered buttons. Slightly above the waist line a twisted tab of covert fastens the coat, being held in place by large buttons of seal. A wide band of seal edges the front of the coat.

Principal Points of Freight Rate Increase.

Uniform advance allowed on all roads in official classification territory.

Roads to which part increase was allowed last August authorized to advance rates allowed them until 5 per cent is reached.

Roads whose plea for increase was refused last May to advance rates to 5 per cent.

Request of railroads would have increased their revenue $50,000,000. Increase granted by Interstate Commerce Commission will increase revenues $30,000,000.

Lake and rail traffic, coal, coke, iron ore and certain other commodities are not included in the increase.

MICHAEL LOUISE BANKRUPTCY SALE

The Michael Louise bankruptcy sale was held at the store at 10 o'clock this morning. About fifty persons attended. James W. Bogue acted as trustee and Attorney A. T. Jennings rrepresented the trustee.

The stock was bid in by Chris Morgan, Fulton, for $400, and the outstanding accounts were sold to Michael Louise for $5. The fixtures, etc., were bid in by Patsey Bianchi for $8 above the amount of encumberances.

The sale for confirmation came on this afternoon at 2 p. m., before Referee in Bankruptcy Avery S. Wright, Oswego when the final meeting of the creditors was held and the estate closed. A small dividend was declared the creditors.

FIREMEN BUSY

Immediately following a useless run into the outskirts of the city, the Fulton Fire department was forced to answer another call on the West Side yesterday afternoon.

The first call was a false alarm and the second fire was on Whitcomb street.

A Polish resident attempted to sleep with a lighted cigar in his mouth and the result was that he was aroused from his slumbers by blazing bed clothing. Firemen threw the bedding out a window, saving the house from destruction. The damage was slight.

CLEARY ACQUITTED; DAUGHTER AIDED HIM

William V. Cleary, town clerk of Haverstraw and Democratic leader in Rockland county, was acquitted on Saturday by a jury in Supreme Court in the first degree on which he was tried for killing Eugene M. Newman, his son-in-law.

When the announcement was made by Frank Heddy, foreman of the jury, of "Not guilty," Cleary exclaimed: "Thank God for Anna!" Later he shook hands with the twelve men, saying:

"Gentlemen, I thank you for your merciful and righteous verdict."

Cleary immediately afterward hurried out of the court room and joined his wife, who had already been apprised of the verdict. They embraced and each wept silently for a moment.

Friends of the politician made a big demonstration over the outcome of the affair. The daughter's story on the stand, in which she laid bare her relations with Newman, it is believed, swayed the jury in the verdict as given.

In summing up, District Attorney Gagan said that the law did not take refuge behind passion and use it as an excuse for taking the law into his own hands. In answerr to this Attorney Comisky said:

Any man who would not do what Cleary did would not have a just appreciation of his daughter's virtue.

MEMBERS OF GLEE CLUB

OBITUARY

Frances Patrick Galvin

At an early hour this morning occurred the death of Francis Patrick Galvin at the home of his mother, Mrs. Ellen Galvin, No. 361 Broadwell St., after a lingering illness.

The deceased was in his twentieth year and was a communicant of the Church of the Immaculate Conception. No arrangements for the funeral have been made.

SOUTH AMERICAN TRADE BOOMERS MEET TO-DAY

St. Louis, Dec. 21.—With eight hundred delegates representing all sections of the United States and all interested in the extension of American trade to foreign countries, particularly South America and the West Indies in attendance, the St. Louis Foreign Trade convention designed to boom South American trade was called to order here to-day.

Recognition of the European war as a barrier to commercial intercourse was made when the delegates confined their attention almost wholly to the countries beyond the Gulg of Mexico. Middle-western commercial houses and organizations which recently held a convention in Memphis to discuss means of utilizing the Mississippi as an artery of commerce to the Southern nations were represented.

The convention is being held under the auspices of the National Foreign Trade Council of which James A. Farrell, president of the United States Steel Corporation, is president. The plan and scope committee of the convention includes Sam D. Capen of St. Louis; E. A. S. Clarke, president of the Lackawanna Steel Co. of New York; F. A. S. Franklin, president of the International Merchantile Marine, New York; Fairfax Marrison, president Southern Railway, Washington, D. C., and John D. Ryan, president Algamated Copper Co., New York. The convention will be in session two days.

Submarine Attack Near Hattaras

Bulgaria Promises Not to Interfere if Her Balkan Neighbors Attack Turkey

Paris, Dec. 22.—It is reported by the French Ministry of Marine that a German submarine is helping to attack a British troop transport off Hatteras that has been sunk. No official announcement has been made but the rumor states that the submarine was sunk by destroyers after it had fired a torpedo at the transport.

London, Dec. 22.—Bulgaria will maintain a hands-off policy if her Balkan neighbors attack Turkey. No assurance to this effect were given at the same time at Paris, Petrograd and London. Official notification of this act was sent to the Greek and Roumanian governments and a dispatch received at Athens to-day stating that the confederate action against Turkey was being termed in messages exchanged between Athens and Bucharest was taken here to indicate that the two countries would enter the war on the side of the allies.

Paris, Dec. 22.—The French government has only one policy, that is the prosecution of the war against Germany until absolute victory has been won, Europe liberated and peace guaranteed.

Paris, Dec. 22.—Repulse of German attacks and the capture of German trenches are the outstanding features set forth in the official statement issued here this afternoon. It says at Perches-Les-Hurlus, the French have captured earthen works representing 1,500 yards of trenches.

Both sides are taking the offensive along the battle front.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Lima, Peru, Dec. 22.—The Japanese cruiser Idzumo sailed from Callao shortly after midnight. She proceeded south along the Peruvian coast.

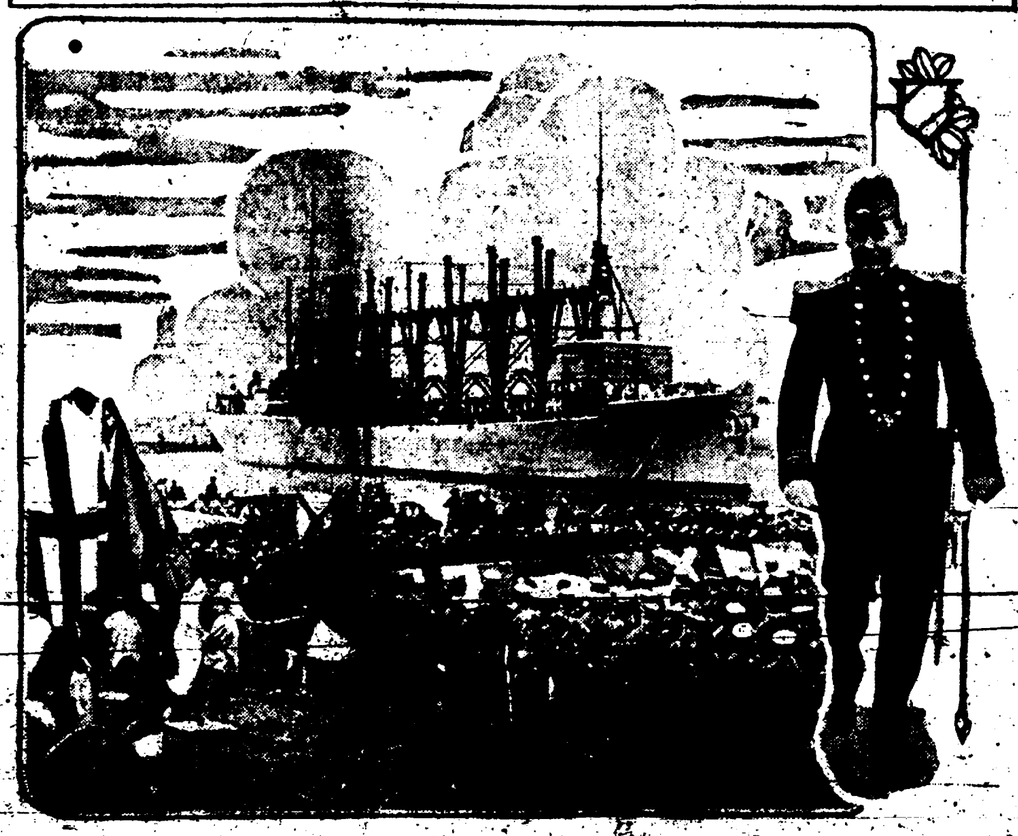
It is believed the Idzumo's commander expects to intercept the German cruiser Dresden, which, according to latest reports, was not sunk by the British cruiser Bristol, but escaped and joined the German transport Prinz Eitel Friedrich west of Chili.

Bremen, Via Amsterdam, Dec. 22.—The North German Lloyd liner Aachen has been converted into a cruiser and is now engaged in very hazardous work, it is announced. Thhe Aachen is a vessel of 2,447 tons. She formerly plied between Bremen and Baltimore.

Bombay, India, Dec. 22.—The British expeditionary force which invaded Turkey by way of the Persian Gulf, is making progress against the Turks, who are trying to impede their progress up the Tigris Valley. This information is contained in dispatches from Basra, the British base of operations.

Rotterdam, Dec. 22.—British warships have been keeping up a bombardment of German positions along the Belgian coast for thirty-six hours. At the outset of the bombardment German batteries replied briskly, but their fire had slackened to-day, according to advices from Sluis, and it is believed that most of them have been silenced.

Aviators of the allies are resuming their activities and it is reported here that they have bombarded and burned the Zeppelin sheds erected by these Germans at Etterbeek, a suburb of Brussels. They flew from Dunkirk and dropped twelve bombs upon the sheds, escaping without damage. On their return journey the aerial raiders also dropped bombs upon Thielt, but with what success is not known.



The first accounts published in Germany of the British bombardment of Zeebrugge reached here to-day. They quote a German officer as saying:

"The arrival of 200 shells was like hell let loose. For hours the trench groaned and trembled as the warships kept up their attack. It seemed as if hell was trying to force itself into the North sea. There were veritable fountains of fire."

CATHOLIC CHURCH BURNS; $10,000 LOSS

Rochester, Dec. 22.—A fuel among residents of the Polish section was responsible for the attempt early this morning to destroy the property of St. Stanislaus church in Hudson Ave. The school hall adjoining the church was "touched off" about midnight and the flames fanned by high wind threatened the school, rectory and church. A second alarm calling additional fire companies was necessary before the fire was under control. The loss is placed at $10,000.

Arrival of America's Christmas Ship, Jason, In England With Presents For Europe's Poor Tots.

Photos copyright, 1914, by American Press Association.

The United States official Christmas ship to the poor children of war stricken Europe was greeted with honors when she arrived at Portsmouth, England, on her first stop. The illustration shows the Jason, which is a United States naval collier, arriving at the dock. British soldiers are on the wharf to welcome her. Lieutenant Commander Charles E. Courtney, in charge of the Christmas ship, is also shown as he was snapped while landing at the dock. The Jason took thousands of Christmas presents to Europe, mostly donated by the children of America through the efforts of several metropolitan newspapers and encouraged by the government.

FRENCH PARLIAMENT IS IN SESSION

Premier Viviani left this port in emphatic fashion to-day when the French Senate and Chamber of Deputies sat in extraordinary session for the successful waging of the war. The speech of the Premier was interrupted many times by cheers. Among the senators and deputies were men who had returned from the front and attended the session in their uniforms. "Full responsibility for the war was placed upon Germany by the Premier and he declared this was clear to the world.

By FRANKLIN P. MERRICK

Paris, Dec. 22.—With battles raging over ten of the northeastern provinces, the French parliament met in extraordinary session here to-day. The chief object of the present session is to adopt war measures and to discuss the future financial policy of the government. Throughout the session, which is expected to be brief, the proposals of the government will be adopted without opposition.

New confidence was inspired by the gathering of the senators and deputies in this city for it seemed to emphasize the fact that, while the German invaders are still on French soil, the dangers which confronted Paris at the outbreak of the war have now been all but eliminated.

Among the members of the Senate and Chamber of Deputies there was a feeling of confidence. Predictions were made on all sides now that the Germans would be driven back, notwithstanding the fact that their retirement may be stubborn and the allies' advance slow.

Paul Deschanel presided in the Chamber of Deputies and Antoine Dubohl presided over the Senate. A number of seats were vacant and some of them were draped in black in memory of legislators who were killed in battle. Not a few of the members were in uniform.

It is reported that Ostend is being bombarded by the Anglo-French artillery, but there is no confirmation of the rumor that the allies have entered the city. Ostend was strongly fortified by the Germans and the Teutons have massed a great quantity of artillery to defend the city.

British troops have been flung forward to the firing line between Albert and the Oise to reinforce the French. This is made known in official dispatches. From Peronne to Nesle the British had to stand the brunt of six German attacks, but the invaders were unable to win back the trenches they had lost. The fighting has been especially severe in thhe region of Libons, fifty miles south of Armentieres. All along the line from Noyon to Bapaume the attacks and counter attacks are getting more violent as a result of the increased pressure of the allies' offensive.

Favorable reports have also been received from the Aisne, the Champagne district, the Argonne forest, German airmen have made another raid over Dunkirk, dropping twelve the heights of the Meuse and Alsace.
bombs. A number of persons are reported to have been killed. A Calais dispatch says that French and British aviators flew over Brussels, dropping bombs which set the Zeppelin sheds on fire.

Germans Make Russians Retire

By FREDERICK WERNER

Berlin, via Amsterdam, Dec. 22.—Withdrawal of Russian forces from their positions before Piotrokow to Opozno, a distance of 24 miles, is the chief news of importance receive from the eastern theater of war to-day. Opozno being east of the Pilica river, the German military experts believe that the Russians intend to make another stand behind that stream as they have farther north behind behind the Bzura.

Opozno is a branch of the railroad running from Ivanorod through southern Poland. This is the only line still held by the Russians and if the Germans succeed in cutting it they will trap the great forces that have been operating against Cracow north of the Upper Vistula and against the Germans' intrenched front from Cracow to Czechstowa.

The military experts believe that the next sanguinary battle in Poland will be in the vicinity of Opozno, but their interest centered to-day in the western theater of war, though the situation there is discussed only in guarded fashion. The announcement that Emperor William has gone to the western front is the cause of the renewal of interest in the fighting in France and Flanders.

That the allies would take the offensive in the west as soon as they thought the Germans were having a difficult time in the east was generally recognized here. That they waited too long, however, is the declaration of Major Mohrat in the Tageblatt.

"When the allies got started it was too late for them to pres their attacks to a conclusion," he says. "We had already won our victory in Poland, removing any further menace there, and were able to take the proper steps to defend our positions in the west.

It will be noted that the French claim to have taken many trenches. If their statements are true—in some instances we know they are not—they have suffered losses disproportionate to advantage they have gained.

"Where the conflict has reached conditions of a siege in the west we have avoided these attacks on trenches in order to conserve our forces. If the French continue their reckless assaults their numerical superiority will not last."

A large increase in the number of prisoners taken by the Germans has compelled the opening of two prison camps, Chemnitz, Saxony and Ebersdorf, Silesia. On Saturday alone 4,000 French and Russian prisoners arrived at Chemnitz.

KAISER CHECKED IN POLAND

Russians Slowly But Surely Rolling German Legions Back

By FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY

Petrograd, Dec. 22.—Russia's hosts are moving forward again. They have taken the offensive west of Warsaw and have driven the Germans back over the Bzura river. Once more they have straightened their line and despite hard counter-attacks by the Germans are slowly but surely rolling back the Kaiser's legions.

Almost daily for three weeks there has been terrific fighting along the Bzura river from Kamion, where it flows into the Vistula, southwest to Lowiecz. The fighting has been no less along the Bzura's tributaries, the Utrata, Ruwaka, Pisia and Skierniewka rivers. There have been occasional lulls in the fighting, but these have been only brief.

At one stage the right flank of the Russians swung back from Kamion along the Vistula to Kazunpolski, only 16 miles from Warsaw, but this was only until reinforcements were brought up. Then it swung back again like a huge pendulum, striking the Germans who had crossed the Bzura and dealing them smashing blows until they had to withdraw to their original positions west of the stream.

For 72 hours Russians and Germans fought a hand-to-hand battle for the possession of the ruins of Teserin. This was a flourishing little town until the Germans made their first attempt to take Warsaw. Since then it has been captured and recaptured six times. It has been wrecked by the shells of the opposing armies who have fought for its wreckage as dogs fight for a bone.

The 72-hour fight resulted in a reverse for the Germans. They had to withdraw, and the crazed inhabitants of Teserin emerged once more from their burrows. In giving up Teserin the Germans also abandoned Szymanow, another little town a few miles to the south. This town also is a wreck. More than 100 civilians were killed there when the church in which they had taken refuge was literally blown to pieces by artillery.

Further to the south the Russians have swung their line in a board curve, running through Opoezno and thence shooting out toward Czestochowa in a wedge-shaped position, the south side of which lies along the upper Vistula. In this formation they are well placed to repulse any attempt of the Germans to advance from Lodz toward Ivanorod and at the same time consitute a continual menace to the Germans if they at any time leave any gap in their line.

Gigantic Struggle In Galicia

Lemberg, Galicia, via Petrograd, Dec. 22.—More than 800,000 Russian and Austro-German troops are engaged in a great conflict over a battle front about 125 miles long in Galicia. The battle line forms almost at right angle, extending from Bircza, a few miles west of Przmysl, southwest to Lupkow and thence northwest to Zakliczyn, on the Dunajec river south of Tarnow.

The general battle was precipated by the energetic efforts of the Austro-German troops to raise the siege of Przemysl. Only the barest details of the battle are reaching here, but these indicate that the conflict is sanguinary, most of the fighting being done by the infantry.

The nature of the country makes the movements of cavalry and artillery most difficult.

OPINIONS

The truth of the matter is that when 342 non-combatants in three coast towns are killed and wounded in a bombardment by German cruisers that eluded a patrol by an armada of warships supposed to be under way every hour in the 24, and when the enemy's ships are allowed to escape back to their base, something must be wrong in the execution of the "general naval policy." At least, that is the view that the people of England will be disposed to take.—New York Sun.

A man 73 years of age, who lives in Stuttgart, has written to his son in Brooklyn that things are going along very well in Germany. Certainly the price of board has not advanced, for the writer says the Government has quartered on him eight prisoners of war, seven of whom he has boarded out for 3 marks 45 pfennigs (about 87 cents of our money) per day for the whole seven. After the war he will receive from the German Government a rebate of 1 mark 25 pfennings. In 1870, he says, the rebate was twice that sum. Of course, there were fewer prisoners at that time and rebates were ruling higher.

A British protectorate was formally proclaimed throughout Egypt yesterday. Prince Hussein Kemal has been appointed Khedive, to succeed Abbas Hilmi, who is now in Vienna. He will take the title of Sultan. He is an uncle of the deposed Khedive, and the eldest living prince of the family of Mahomet Ali, former Khedive.

The loss of Egypt to Turkey is not only the stoppage of an annual tribute. It marks the end of Turkish sovereignty in Africa. What Italy began at Tripoli England completes on the Nile. So far as Egypt itself goes, the transfer in authority is largely in name. The British financial adviser to the Khedive grew in power until every activity of the Egyptian Government stood under his hand. The Egyptian army is English trained and English equipped. Protectorate is a mild word for the sort of rule which England has for years imposed on Egypt. The present change gives final dignity and permanency to an occupation that could hardly have any greatly different ending, so long as the British Empire had the ships and men to stand its ground. Turkey will be the only loser by the change.Utica Dispatch.

The Black Cross Society for the neglected destitute of the United States, held an organization and propaganda meeting in the east room of the Hotel Astor recently. Miss. Florence Gurnsey, president of the Civic Federation of Women's Clubs, presided at the meeting, which was addressed by the following speakers: Mrs. William Grant Brown, Drr. Royal S. Copeland, Mrs. Elmer Black, the Rev. James B. Wasson and Mrs. John Francis Yawger. It was decided that the Black Cross Society would give a "feed America first" ball at the Hotel McAlpin, January 14.—Utica Dispatch.

According to a Milan despatch Prince von Buelow, who arrived at Rome Thursday in his new ambassadorial capacity, is said in political circles to be intent on frustrating Italy's threatened entry into the European struggle against her imperial allies by inducing the Italian Government to assume the role of the world's peacemaker on the basis of "neither victor nor vanquished." The Kaiser, it is said, deems the present time opportune, because of the persistent deadlock on the Belgian-French front and the decided check all along the eastern line to the Russian advance.—The Press.

SEASON'S MUSIC

The merry tinkle of the sleigh bells and the big "bob" sled in the city's streets have added to the festive spirit of the season. From the big, comfortable farms in the surrounding county "mother" has been brought in to do the Christmas shopping. This means supplying the family larder with many goodies that will find their way into special holiday dishes and gifts from Santa's pack.

By the time "Mother" is ready for the homeward trip, baskets and boxes are piled high with something for everybody, and the little folks waiting at home with their noses pressed flat against the window panes and their eyes on the "bend in the road," know Old Chris has been interviewed.

Christmases may come and go, but so long as the war cloud does not hang low about us our voices should rise in a paen of thankfulness toward the Giver of All Good. May peace and plenty, tinkling sleigh bells with "Father" bringing "Mother" in to Santa, be with us, not with us alone for this season, but for all seasons to come.

On Christmas eve many little faces in the far off lands will be pressed against the pane and their eyes on the "bend in the road," while "Father" may be lying with face upturned on the battlefield, counting the cold stars and praying for a better understanding.

COMMODITY MARKETS STRONGER

Numerous Leading Articles of Consumption Display at Notable Upward Tendency.

Dun's Review says:

"Increased activity and a generally improved tone was noted in the commodity markets this week, there being 67 alterations in the 318 quotations received by Dun's Review, of which 30 were advances and 37 declines. Higher prices were obtained for butter, with most strength evidenced in the medium grades, and cheese held steady. More liberal receipts of nearby fancy eggs forced a sharp reduction in quotations, but other choice and good quality stock continued scarce and sold at another moderate advance. Active foreign buying was the feature in the grain markets and forced substantial improvements in wheat, corn, oats and some grades of flour. In live meats, beef was weak, but hogs and sheep were steadq, Provisions, however, were somewhat irregular, although generally inclined upward. Trading in hides was unusually inactive, and while one or two varieties fully maintained their strength, the market, as a whole, was rather easier than for a considerable period. Some grades of leather were also inclined to yield, but no important changes occurred. Sentiment continued to improve in the iron and steel markets, and while slight concessions were still available on derisable business, they were the exception, rather than the rule. In minor metals improving conditions were indicated by advances in copper, tin and spelter, and pronounced firmness in lead. Cotton was steady and a much stronger tone appeared in coffee, rubber and silk. Some reduction was made in sugar, but the market displayed a decidedly upward tendency before the end of the week on active buying from abroad. Wool was firm, but oils, spices and a number of drugs and chemicals were easy.—"

Afraid of Whitman.

Albany, Dec. 22.—Hoping to secure a pardon for William J. Cummins, now serving time for his connection with the failed Carnegie Trust company, Governor Rye of Tennessee, Senator Lee and Judge Allison also of that State, will urge Governor Glynn tomorrow to use his power of clemency in behalf of the convicted banker.

Andrew Carnegie has written the Governor asking for Cummins' release from Sing Sing and recently a large delegation from Tennessee visited the capitol and informed the executive that they believed Cummins, himself a Southerner,r an honest man.

Cummins' friends are fearful that Governor-elect Whitman will not pardon Cummins, since he convicted him while district attorney. They will use every argument to convince Governor Glynn that Cummins is innocent and has been wrongfully imprisoned.

TRAVELING POSTOFFICE

One of the greatest advances ever made in the postal service was the origination of the traveling postoffice. This was started in 1862, and has developed and grown into the modern railway mail service. Instead of transporting the mails in bulk and assembling them in large distributing post-offices for separation and dispatch, they are sent directly to the railway post-office to be distributed on their way to destination. This post-office is a car or cars, operated in trains between important terminals, fitted up and furnished with distributing cases and sack racks, in which railway postal clerks distribute and handle the mails carried. Here the mails are made up for local delivery en route, and for dispatch to connecting lines.

This railway mail service directs the dispatch of all mails, determines the routes over which they shall be carried, and distributes them en route, so they are ready for delivery to offices along the line, and in some cases making separations for city delivery upon arrival at large terminals. To conduct this service there are 15,205 officers and clerks employed in it at a cost of over $18,300,000 a year. The railway post-office lines cover 208,481 miles of steam, electric and steamboat routes.

The training of the railway postal clerk is acquired by constant study of the names and locations of postoffices and the schemes of distribution and by the performance of his duties. His vocation is a hazardous one. Last year six clerks were killed, 104 seriously and 536 slightly injured in 405 railroad accidents.

Where this distribution space needed exceeds 30 feet of a car, the office authorizes the company to furnish a specially built railway post-office car and allows additional pay for it. The cost of this car service is over $4,600,000.

GREAT RUSSIA

Washington, D. C.—Showing how Russia is larger than the entire continent of North America, with the islands of the Caribbean thrown in; how it occupies three fifths of Europe and two-fifths of Asia; how its Asiatic possessions are one and a half times as great as those of China and three times as great as those of Great Britain; how it comprises one-sixth of the landed area of the globe and one-tenth of the world's population, Gilbert H. Grosvenor, director and editor of the National Geographic Society, has just furnished the nearly 250,000 members of that organization with a striking pen picture of "Young Russia—A Land of Unlimited Poesibilities."

After giving an impression of the diversity of the origin of its peoples, who come from the Orient and the Occident, the frigid north and the tropic south: of its range of elimate which gives the Palm Beach touch to its Crimea and the breath of the north to its White Sea region; of its vast agricultural wealth: of the widely varying aspirations of its peoples, which differ as greatly as those of the Poles and the Mongols, as those of the Confucians and the Jews, as those of the Tatars and the Lapps; and of the vastness of the geographic limits of the Empire, Mr. Grosvenor says:

"But with all its geopraphic greatness Russia is about as poor in natural outlets to the world as the smallest of the countries of the earth. Holland could be hidden in the vast reaches of the Russian plain, almost as a needle in a haystack, yet Amsterdam does more international business than all the ports of Russia together. Not one free outlet to the open sea does European Russia possess except on the icebound shores of the Arctic Ocean. The path from the Black Sea to the Mediterranean leads through the Bosphorus and the Dardanelles held by alien hands."

Mr. Grosvenor next shows how there lives within the boundaries of the Russian Empire enough people to duplicate the population of Germany, Great Britain and France combined, with enough left over to duplicate half the population of Austria-Hungary. Furthermore, if Russia grows from 1913 to 2000 as she grew from 1872 to 1912 her population then will be upward of six hundred million.

He then continues: "From such a record of size, of bigness in everything, we should expect Russia to be an old nation, like Great Britain; with perhaps a thousand years of unhindered growth behind her. But as a matter of fact, Russia is a youth among the nations compared with England, a stripling whose full stature and breadth is still a subject of conjecture and speculation.

"Russia is young because she never has had a chance to grow until recent years. Her geographical shape or condition was such that for centuries her people were constantly being enslaved or despoiled by stronger neighbors."

OSWEGO CANAL TONNAGE 55,705

State Canal System In Excellent Condition. Year's Business Shows an Increase

Albany, Dec. 22.—According to figures relating to canal tonnage compiled by Duncan Peck, State superintendent of Public Works, there were carried on the canals of the State during the navigation season of 1914, a total of 2,080,850 tons. This total is distributed between the different canals as follows:

Erie canal 1,361,764 tons; Champlain canal 492,014 tons; Oswego canal 55,705 tons, Cayuga and Seneca canal 128,698 tons; Black River canal 42,669 tons.

The total value of all shipments as estimated in dollars and cents was $28,277,991.00.

The tonnage on the Erie canal was made up of 892,676 tons, way freight east and 280,096 tons way freight west, a total of 1,172,772 tons both ways.

Superintendent Peck reports the canal system to be in excellent condition. During the season just past with the exception of two small leaks, resulting in a few hours' delay, there has been no serious interference to traffic and the record of the year 1913 for an almost unbroken season of navigation has been excelled in the year just past.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING

A Talk Recently Given at a Parent-Teachers' Meeting at Solvay

The following explanation of the work of Solvay Vocational schools' course in "home-making" was given by Miss Haley, head of that department, at a parent-teachers' meeting held at the Solvay schools last week:

Upon the privacy and sanctity of the home rests the strength of our nation. The words of house and home are often confused; home expresses family life, which is lived within the house. House is the place where the home maker surrounds herself with artistic and harmonious furnishings and where she tries to work out the ideals and standards of living that will create the real home atmosphere of the household.

The home stands for rest, for peace, for comfort, for health and inspiration. Homemaking is a profession and women should be educated as if they had elected teaching or any other trained profession or as men are trained for factory or any other skilled worker. This education or training will enable her to manage her home as though it were a business institution managed most systematically. Health is the first and most necessary consideration or requisite, sympathy in trials or sorrows (our own or our neighbors) foresight in managing, or planning, self control at all times and common sense helps many a woman to adjust the most trying of difficulties.

The ideal home-maker is thoughtful, polite and hospitable. Ever neat and tidy whether in negligee or at work washing dishes or cleaning floors. Simplicity, orderliness and cleanliness will lead to harmony and make us realize we have other needs than food, clothing and shelter. The home properly developed works for good and is uplifting. Children should be taught that each must have an aim and that it is not for personal gratification. Each and every one owes a duty to the community in which he lives. To our future generation the children of our homes we look for the professional men and women and to the trades of people of every class.

The educators of the world are deeply interested in a few schools who began before our rise to solve the problems of making home-makers of our girls. All eyes are turned on these institutions or school systems where their superintendent is alive and has taken time by the fore lock and will have his successes assured before the others who have rested on their laurels have awakened from their beauty sleep, and so it is in Solvay schools.

The vocational course in homemaking is on in full swing and we want you to know what all this talk means.

Sewing commences in our schools in the fifth year and at the end of the sixth year all of the elementary work has been finished. At 14 years of age and having completed the sixth year, the girls are eligible for the pre-vocational work.

The State requires for this course six hours per day for two years of general industrial training. This does not finish a girl's education by any means providing it is possible for her to continue, when she finds herself capable of choosing the work for in which she cares to specialize in or to make her life's work. The classes of the pre-vocational work are divided into cooking, sewing, costume design, arithmetic, English, textiles, industrial geography, spelling and writing, house furnishing and decoration, music, physical training, citizenship and hygiene, household science.

A simple analysis of these various subjects is very interesting and worthy of your consideration.

Cooking.—The definition of food is anything which is nourishing to the body. Foods are classified as to their nutritive value whether for heat, energy or building of tissues.

As for example in the winter we use potatoes for heat. For energy or starchy foods, cereals, yolks of eggs, macaroni and spaghetti. Whites of eggs, meats and fish for tissue building.

Laundering.—Making of soaps from greases.

Making of starch, the correct degree and kind of bluing, removal of stains, tea, coffee, or fruit or grass, mildew, or rust stains, setting of colors in wash materials.

Household Science.—What soil is best to build on. The prevailing winds, southern or eastern exposure preferred, location whether convenient to business and schools, environment or neighborhood suitable to family.

House Construction.—Simple planning no waste or extra rooms, saving of steps, large and well ventilated sleeping rooms, doors to swing out in case of fire, simple but durable plumbing; no chance for germs or dirt to settle.

Heating.—Furnace, steam or hot water. The advantages or disadvantages for these for home purposes.

Coal stoves are used but an uneven heat is the result.

For the less fortunate, who cannot build their homes but are forced to rent, have to consider the question of rent, surroundings, according to their incomes, quiet streets, suitable neighborhood, avoid shop districts that give off disagreeable orders and high buildings that cut off the sunlight and air. Decoration according to income.

Simple harmonious artistic development.

Household Management.—Division of the income according to the size of family. What percent for food, for clothing, for general expenses, recreation and savings.

Costume Design.—Scalloping of the caps when in the cooking class, embroidering of initials on aprons, appliquing of letters of constarsting materials on middy blouses. Monograms on guest towels, drawing of the full figure developing the lines of the various garments and showing the correct position of the hat placed on the head.

Textiles a practical knowledge of cotton. We all know the origin, but do we fully understand what mill or brand we should use for sheeting, for undergarments, when to use bleached or unbleached, what pique or galatea is used for?

The difference between calico and gingham. Wool and its bi-products.

The fundamental weaves that never vary. Names of material may change according to the ingenuity or ambition of the manufacturer.

We have cabinets showing the different stages of wool and cotton in the various processes of manufacture in preparation for the market.

Sewing caps and aprons worn in the cooking classes, middies and bloomers in the gymnasium, holders used while cooking, hemming of dish and hand towels, table cloth and napkins; curtains, in fact, any and all sewings belonging to the household.

The physical training under the direction of Miss Hutchinson, where they enjoy folk dancing, singing while they dance and a rollicking game of hand ball that brings roses to their cheeks and the sight of them at their play thrills you with the desire to join them in their sport.

The care and feeding of children and care of the sick is one of the most important features in this course. First aid to the injured, the applying of bandages in cases of need are tried out on one another for demonstration.

All the sewing work will not be confined purely to the members of the class or their personal use. We aim to be helpful to others, the members of our household and to be important factors in the community. At this time all the world is interested in the warfare carried on in the European countries. Material has been sent to us to make into garments of any description the amount of material will permit, for tse Belgian sufferers.

As soon as the wants of these peo are satisfied or filled we will take up work for the various hospitals. Where sheets, pillow cases and simple garments are always needed and the institutions will be pleased to furnish the material for this work.

The honors of community helpfulness does not belong to the homemaking girls at this particular trial but to the household arts and to the college preparatory or normal girls of the high school. Their school spirit is most commendable and I am sure most unusual and if the mothers will call for their help they will be as delighted with their ready response as we have been especially in times of need. Curtains, pillows for the rest room, in fact any or all wants of the school system have easily and quickly been filled by the hearty co-operation of these students.

Give the girl a home duty, a cupboard to clean, her own stockings to mend, it will be of inestimable value to her. Not necessarily an irksome or disagreeable task but something that each day or at least once a week—that is her particular duty to her mother and to her home.

Last Week in Business.

The improving tendencies in trade become more distinct and general and the favorable decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission in granting, with a few exceptions, the application of the eastern railroads for a five per cent, incdease in freight rates is a constructive development of much importance. Confidence is also strengthened by more liberal credits, the cheapness of money for short terms, better collections, and still more by the further progress of financial recuperation. The opening of the Stock Exchange to stock dealings proved so successful that all restrictions were removed, except that of minimum prices, which was not required so far as there was any evidence of extensive liquidation.

You will do well to call on Morton & Shuttuck and see the bargains they are giving.—Adv.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Albring held a reception in honor of their golden wedding anniversary, Dec. 19. Many relatives and friends were with them on this happy occasion, and many letters and telephone calls were received from those who could not congratulate them in person. Pieces of gold coin were among the gifts. Their pleasant home was appropriately decorated for the occasion and Christmas season with Killarney roses, evergreens, holly branches, wreaths of princess pine, poinsettas, Christmas bells, and garlands. The reception lasted until late in the evening when the happy party left wishing this estimable couple many happy returns of the day.

BARGEY ESTATE OVER $4,000

Contractor's Widow Looking for Compensation. Case Being Investigated. Goodrowe Estate

Petition for the probate of the will of Lyman D. Bargey, the local contractor, who was killed in the collapse and fire that destroyed the Peter Massaro macaroni factory here on December 3, was filed by his widow at the Surrogate's office in Oswego yesterday.

No mention was made as to a right of action for Mr. Bargey's death. It is said that it is a matter of compensation and is now being investigated by Deputy Compensation Commissioner John Fitzgibbons. The question to decide is whether the deceased was employed as a contractor or as a journeyman carpenter.

A petition for letters of administration on the estate of Cornelia Goodroe, late of this city, has been filed by Elizabeth B. Damm, as guardian of Cornelia Goodroe, an adopted daughter, and sole legatee. The Goodroe estate is valued at $1,240 personal and $2,000 real.

This exceedingly short basque or bodice that extends just a little over the skirt is one of the newest and prettiest for evening wear.

This season all the lovely soft satins and soft silks are fashionable, and the drapery suits them perfectly well. In the illustration white charmeuse satin is finished with lace at the neck edge and with cut crystal buttons.

The upper edges are straight. Consequently flouncing can be used with perfect success, and lace flouncing

THE QUIRK VAUDEVILLE

It was some bill of vaudeville that opened at the Quirk theater this afternoon to one of the largest matinee audiences of the season. It pleased everyone that saw it. The first on the bill was Bounding Johnson who is a wonder on the bounding wire, as he does many difficult feats. Then came the Evans sisters, as the two colleens, singing all the latest Irish songs and making a fine hit. Following them came Lee Chandler Co., novelty entertainers and gloom chasers, presenting an original comedy, singing, talking and dancing novelty, entitled "The Ragtime Circus," with special scenery and mechanical effects. Fred and Bess Lucier offered a clever conceit entitled, "Love Powders," during which they both sing some clever songs and give some clever imitations on the violin. The act is fine, the comedy good, and the gowns worn by Miss Lucier are really stunning. Regal and Bender, comedy acrobats, close this great bill and the acrobatic stunts that those two fellows pull are great and the comedy in their cat kept the audience in a constant uproar. There will also be some good comedy reels of photplay. This same bill will be seen to-night at 7:30 o'clock.

BAN WAS TAUGHT HIS GOOD LESSON

New York, Dec. 22.—Once upon a time there was a fellow named Ban Johnson who was booming a baseball league. Those were parlous times. Money was tight. Ban was leading a new organization against a powerful foe and pretty nearly everybody who was approached by Ban on the subject of money said watcha think I am a boob to sink my money in a baseball league, that ain't got no more show than a rabbit of living?

Well, in due course of time, Ban got enough fellows excited about the baseball proposition to form an eight club outlaw league. Ban placed teams in all the big cities except New York. He tried in every way to interest capital in New York but it was a tough job. Nobody wanted to risk kale that way. The National league club was so strongly entrenched in that big city that it seemed like financial suicide for anyone to put up a wad of money to start a club to compete against the Giants.

Just as Ban was near despair—just when he thought that never will I be able to interest capital in the big city along came Frank Farrell and "Big Bil" Devery. They said to Ban:

We will take a chance.

And they did. They put up a large amount of lucre. A large amount was necessary as it costs money to buy ball players and to pay their salaries and to get grounds and hire ground keepers and secretaries and pay hotel bills and other things. But Frank and Bill were game. They were good sports. They came through to the limit of their wads.

That made the American league. Ever since the entry of the American league into New York it has been quite as much in the baseball world. If it had not horned into the big city it might never have amounted to a darn. But Frank and Bill took a chance and they made the American league what it is today. But Ban wasn't satisfied. Not him.

It cost Frank and Bill quite a lot of money to establish a team in the big city and each year thereafter it cost them more and more. They just about sunk their rolls in baseball. Somehow or other they just couldn't get together a pennant winning ball team, no matter how hard they tried. Money was no object with them. They spent lavishly. They did every darned thing they could to make a winner in the big city, but they just couldn't.

Well, in due course of time Frank and Bill who once were rich men became poor men. They had fought a game fight. They had put nearly every dollar into baseball, but they simply couldn't make money.

The reason that Frank and Bill couldn't make money on their ball club was largely because the opposition club, known as the Giants, were winning pennants quite regularly and were a big drawing card. But in 1914, the Giants failed to win the pennant. Another team that came from a town where Beans are eaten won.

Things looked pretty rosy for Frank and Bill for the 1915 season. The Giants had ceased to be a drawing card. The team that Frank and Bill had assembled looked pretty good on paper and it looked pretty much as if Frank and Bill might get back some of the money that they sunk in the other years.

And then Ban came along and ordered that the club that Frank and Bill owned should be sold. Frank and Bill objected. They asserted that "We've been losing money all these years, now is our chance to get some of it back. But Ban said nothing doing, I'm going to sell that club to Jake Ruppert who is a Brewer. You fellows were all right as far as starting the club was concerned, but now you've gotta get out and let another fellow have a chance.

Frank and Bill said "Well, how about this gratitude stuff? We came through with the wad when no one else would take a chance. We've sunk our rolls and we'd like to have a chance now to get part of it back." But Ban was Adamant (Not quite the same as concrete).

Ban, in Wrath, said "I say unto you fellows that you've gotta get out and you will get out, for I'm going to sell your club." Frank and Bill begged and pleaded for a square deal and they implored for another chance, but Ban said nothing doing.

And so the Yankees were sold.

Moral: If you want to see a demonstration of gratitude never look to Ban Johnson for it.

Western Millionaire Shot By Thug

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 22.—W. M. Alexander, a milionaire retired attorney of this city, was shot and killed by a burglar early to-day in his palatial home in Wilshire Place. In the revolver duel is the dark between the burglar and the capitalist's son, W. M. Alexander, jr., immediately after the murder of the father, the son received two bullet wounds.

Mex. Alexander's youngest daughter, Penelope, went to her brother's assistance and the two fought with the thug as he fled down the stirs and escaped, leaving a trail of blood.

Mr. Alexander came from Washington, D. C., where his daughters attended school.

SALE OF YANKEES

Chicago, Dec. 22.—The final details of the sale of the New York Yankees probably will be perfected this afternoon. According to a prominent baseball man who is in close touch with the situation. "Wild Bill" Donovan, the former Detroit pitcher who led the Providence Grays to the International league championship in 1914, will be the next manager of the Yankees.

STEAMER ASHORE

South Yarmouth, Mass., Dec. 22.—An unknown steamer, believed to be a coastwise vessel, is ashore off Bass river. Efforts are being made to rescue her crew. The steamer blew distress signals all night long. The revenue cutter Acushnet and wrecking tug Tasco were to-day rushed to her assistance.

DIED LIKE PREDECESSOR

Valdosta, Ga., Dec. 22.—United States Senator W. S. West died suddenly to-day of heart failure. Senator West was appointed by Governor Slaton to fill the unexpired term of the late A. O. Bacon when the latter died last year. Senator West's term would have expired March 4th next.

Millbury, Mass., Dec. 22.—Joseph S. Goldberg, a well-to-do Worcester clothing peddler, was stabbed through the heart, then rolled up in a basket and thrown over the seat of his wagon and his horse started for home, early to-day. Robbery is believed by the police to have been the motive for the murder.

Photos copyright, 1914, by American Press Association.

When the situation at Naco, in Arizona and Sonora, became so serious that about 4,000 American troops were sent there under General Tasker H. Bliss the government at Washington feared that another crisis had arisen that might mean armed intervention in Mexico. Bullets from the battle between the Carranza and Villa forces took effect in the America half of the border town. General Bliss notified the Mexicans that if they did not restrict their fire he would open up on them with his artillery and infantry. This brought the Mexicans to their senses, and orders were issued by their leaders not to shoot so that the Americans would be molested. The upper picture shows United States artillery on the border. The lower one shows field observers watching the Mexicans. A photo of General Bliss is also shown. General Bliss acted under the direct and personal command of General Scott, the new chief of staff of the United States army, who was sent to Naco to act in a quasi-diplomatic capacity because of his personal friendship with Villa and Carranza and their generals now fighting in the state of Sonora.

BLACK AND WHITE GOWN

Black and white were the chief colors worn by the fashionable folk who filled the gilded curve of boxes while society showed itself in elegant attire at the opening of the opera season in New York. This was natural since only subdued colors are being worn abroad

The gown pictured here is suitable for theater or dinner wear at the Christmas season. It is of white satin veiled with embroidered silk net. The tunic and surplice are banded with skunk fur. The wide crush girdle is embroidered in gold.

Close Surveilance Over Thaw

Manchester, N. H., Dec. 22.—Special guards were assigned to-day to watch Harry K. Thaw to prevent another spectacular attempt to escape, pending the proceedings which William Jravis Jerome, the Nemesis of the fugitive, says will eventually land the slayer of Stanford White back in Matteawan.

From now on there will be a constant watch over him and any attempt to leave his present abiding place at Manchester will be checked. To all intents and purposes he is as much a prisoner as through he was back in the asylum, surrounded by attendants.

The law which sends Thaw batk to to the cheerless institution for the criminal insane gives Thaw thirty days of nominal liberty under the jurisdiction of New Hampshire. There is a probability that this time may be extended.

In the long battle with Jerome, Thaw seems to have absorbed some of his prosecutor's grim determination. And he has become something more than an amateur in the legal game of chess which is being played with his liberty as the prize.

The fact that Thaw brought a high power automobile upon his arrival here and that he has become an expert at driving, is believed to have been one of the reasons for the increased vigilance of his guards. It is just the sort of vehicle which would be useful if the fugative contemplated another spectacular dash similar to the one which ended in New Hampshire.

News Oddities

New York.—Mrs. Alice Bennett will celebrate her 103d birthday on Christmas day by cooking a dinner and dancing an Irish jig.

Jersey City.—Mrs. Lucy Rubinette asks a divorce, saying her husband's relatives called frequently and treated her as a servant.

Caldwell, N. J.—When rats became numerous at the Essex county penitentiary Warden George Watts trapped several, tied small-bells to their necks and released them. Watts says the bells are better than poison, but the convicts declare that the sound of the bells keeps them awake nights.

New York.—In her suit for divorce Mrs. George F. Leavitt declares her husband asked that she leave him for six months in order to allow him to "sow his wild oats" and overcome his infatuation for another woman. His "leave of absence" availed nothing, she says.

WAR DOGS OF BELGIUM

They Take the Place of Army Mules, Giving Stoical Service

Northern France, Dec. 23.—Furnes has become one of the busiest towns in the whole theatre of war. Its well-built houses and orderly streets are full of the brave sons of Belgium and France. Furnes is the advance sentinel in whose ear the unceasing and not far distant sound of cannon is ever present. The eyes of suffering Belgium are turned in hope towards her.

Here, in the centre of the town, are many trophies of war drawn up upon the "place," for here are some seven or eight of the heavy German mortars abandoned by the enemy in the flooded districts round Dixmude. These engines, which did serious damage amongst the Allies' trenches, are cumbrous, unwierdly, and thick-set.

Suddenly one's attention is diverted from these spoils of war. A regiment marches by. It is not at first so easy to recognize it, so mud-stained are the men, so few are the distinguishing marks and numbers left amongst its ranks. Then, in a moment, no doubt is left. It is the gallant 7th of the Belgian line. This is the regiment that fought so well at Liege in the early days of August, when, in a few hours, they lost half their number, putting up a stubborn and glorious resistance against overwhelming odds between the forts of that town under the very eye of its heroic defender. General Leman. They have been in the field ever since then, and only a few days ago their colors were decorated by King Albert in recognition of the valour displayed by the regiment at Pervyse, where they defiled under a murderous fire from the enemy between two hedges to the relief of their comrades in the trenches.

The 7th are followed by their dog transport. Harnessed two by two, these wonderfully trained animals draw their lightly-built carts. Perfect order prevails amongst these sagacious "friends of man." Without guides they keep their distance, one team from the other, following the column with never an attempt at breaking away. They know their work well and perform it with, one is inclined to believe, a sense of duty. They seem to have thoroughly entered into the important role confided to them.

In one of the teams the dog on the right attracts much attention. He has been wounded. A big bandage envelopes his head, and many are the words of encouragement shouted to him as he passes sedately by, straining at his traces made of cord, his stump of a tail wagging furiously the while. In no other way does he seem in the slightest degree impressed. His attitude is energetic, but grave. The regiment passes on, the dogs follow, and again the gallant 7th has gone forward to help in the deliverance of its beloved country.

At one time their trenches were so close to those of the enemy that during an occasional lull in the fighting they threw beetroot into the German lines, into which they stuck messages announcing the name of their regiment and their intentions towards their antagonists, which, I am told, were anything but reassuring.

MULLEN'S STICK WON THE COIN

New York, Dec. 23.—A fluke single made by Charles Mullen, first baseman, of the Yankees, in the last game of the 1914 season, cost Frank Farrell, owner of the Yankees, exactly $1,000. And earned $500 for Mullen.

Mullen was purchased by the Yankees from the Lincoln, Neb., team in the western league early in the summer. Mullen ranked as one of the best first sackers in the minors. When Farrell got him there arose a difference in the price that Farrell was willing to pay and the amount that Owner Jones, of the Lincoln club wanted.

"Well, here's a compromise offer" said Farrell to Jones. "If Mullen finishes the season with my club and has a batting average of .260 or better I'll give you that extra thousand dollars. Otherwise, I won't."

Jones accepted the offer, and when the official averages were given out the other day it was seen that Mullen had batted exactly .260. He made 84 hits in 323 strips to the plate.

Mullen made the hit that shot his average up to .260 in the last game of the year, when the Yankees played the Athletics. It was a puny grounder that Mullen beat to the bag because the Athletics, taking things easy, did not overly exert themselves going after it. Without that hit Mullen's average would have been only .257.

When Mullen was about to leave Lincoln, Jones told him about that $1,000 that Farrell was to give if Mullen hit .260, or better.

"If you deliver, Charley, and the $1,000 comes to me, I'll give you half," said Jones. And Jones will keep his promise.

County Court Stenographer.

County Judge-elect Henry D. Coville announced yesterday that he would appoint John C. Henry of Oswego as court stenographer. Mr. Henry is a lawyer. He has had much experience as a stenographer in United States Bankruptcy Court and has also acted as reporter in Supreme Court.

Judge Coville has appointed the following terms of court for next year:

Second Monday in February, Court House at Oswego.

First Monday in June, Court House at Pulaski.

Third Monday in September, Court House at Pulaski.

Second Monday in November, Court House at Oswego.

Judge Coville will hold motion terms Monday of each week except August.

CHARGES DISMISSED

Albany, Dec. 21.—Henry J. Bigham, special commissioner appointed by Governor Glynn to consider the charges made against Matthew J. Smith, district attorney of Queens county, today made public his report recommending that the charges should be dismissed.

The charges were filed last August and were to the effect that Smith had failed to investigate the statement of Clara Ellert, a 17-year-old girl, who claimed that she had been inveigled from the county courthouse in the borough of Queens, to a clubhouse opposite and there assaulted by two young men. It was also charged that District Attorney Smith had allowed his office to be used in an attempt to suppress the affair and to prevent the men involved from being indicted and brought to trial.

A. R. Kiviat is the holder of the world's indoor track record for a mile. He recently covered the distance in 3 minutes, 15 1-5 seconds. This is one-fifth of a second longer than the record made by Tom Halpin, but Halpin ran on a track measured under the old rules, which made the "mile" at least sixteen feet shorter than the track measured according to the new requirements of the International Athletic Federation. This difference in the length of the track makes Kiviat's time faster than Halpin's, and it will go on the books, as it is the first time the distance has been run on a track that complies with the present regulations. Under the old rules the track was measured eighteen inches from the border, while the new rules require that it be measured twelve inches from the border.

Cotton Market.

Washington, Dec. 22.—A report issued to-day by the census bureau shows 13,977,189 bales counting round as half bales ginned from the cotton growth of 1914 to December 13, compared with 12,927,428 for 1913 and 12,439,036 for 1912. Round bales included this year are 42,796 compared with 91,686 for 1913, and 75,772, for 1912. Sea Island included 71,488 for 1914; 69,520 for 1913, and 60,445 for 1912.

Appeal from Verdict on Dog.

Papers on appeal from the judgment of the City Court of Fulton to Oswego County Court have been filed in the action of W. W. Gorman vs. Syracuse, Lakeshore & Northern Railroad Company to recover $150 damages for the death of a dog struck by a trolley car on the bridge at Fulton. The judgment amounts to $96.40 for the plaintiff. It was claimed that the dog was valuable for hunting.

COLLINS' PLEA WON THE DAY

Reports that Jimmy Collins, the greatest third baseman that ever played the game, is dying in Buffalo, recalls the greatest chapter in American League history.

Back in 1903 Collins led his Red Sox into the world series battles with the Pirates. The Pirates took the first three games of the series in such easy fashion that it seemed nothing but a miracle could win the world championship for them. To win, the Red Sox had to take the four remaining games. And they did because Collins, game to the core, begged and pleaded with his men to "come back."

After the third straight beating, Ban Johnson and the club owners quit cold. They left town that night. To them it seemed a hopeless fight. And then it was that Collins gathered his men around him, and with tears in his eyes, said:

"They've quit us, boys—all of them. They think we're beaten. But there's a chance yet. There's hope. So let us pull together. Let's get to going tomorrow and we'll beat 'em yet. Will you do this for me, boys?"

History shows that the "boys" delivered. They went in and beat the Pirates the next day. That gave them the necessary confidence and they took the next three and won the championship."

It was the wonderful Collins courage that saved the day for the Red Sox.

Hot Liners.

"I've got the finest mascot
That was ever in a park
The baseball magnate cried in glee,
But then his face dark
He's very fond of Browning
"And all he eats is beans
But cuss, the luck, I've just found out
His lamps are minus screens.
Now my pitchers and my catchers
And my shortstop may be wrecks,
But when it comes to mascots
Why, they surely must wear specs."

Burns to Play at Third Sack

John McGraw has decided to give George Burns, his great outfielder a try at the third basing job this spring. Burns used to play infield and he played it in great style. That was in the minors. When he went to the Giants McGraw needed an outfielder more than he did an infielder. So he put Burns to work in the outfield and Burns at once developed into the greatest outfielder in the National League.

"Some people may think it foolish for me to play Burns at third" said McGraw, "but some people thought the Pirates were foolish when they transferred Honus Wagner from the outfield to shortstop.

"I've got more outfielders than I need. And I haven't a real third baseman. If Burns shows he can play the bag he'll be the regular third baseman next year. And I think he can play that bag as well as any man in the game. He's a natural born all around baseball player."

Frank Chance, a veteran ball player, has grabbed unto himself a job of writing sporting articles for a Chicago paper.

Missing

A Story of the Pan-European War.

By F. A. MITCHEL

It was during the furious attacks on Ypres. Hundreds of thousands of Germans met hundreds of thousands of French, English and Belgians; tens of thousands of men in both armies were killed or mutilated, and there was nothing gained or lost. Whatever of romance there may have been in war during past ages was denied those who participated in this latter day struggle. The leader, instead of waving his sword and calling on his men to follow him, either marched doggedly against the machinery of death that had been perfected under the influence of a developed civilization or stood waiting to be cut down by the same marvelous contrivances.

Curious, is it not, that the same ingenuity which produced the printing press brought forth the rapid fire gun?

For weeks Lieutenant Adolph Trelawney, a young Englishman who had left home to enter the great contest as a soldier, faced death, not in a battle, but in a succession of battles, the one following the other in rapid succession. It had become simply an active waiting for death. Why the bolts had not already taken him he did not know.

There was one reason why Trelawney did not cling to life with the tenacity of other men. The younger son of a British peer, a match had been made for him with a girl of his own social standing. He had but just returned from the honeymoon when the war broke out. At the same time a secret had been imparted to him. A woman who had wanted but had lost him took revenge upon him by telling him that his bride, at the instigation of her parents, had broken with a man whom she loved to marry him.

Trelawney was in London at the time, and, holding a commission in the army, he joined his regiment without seeing his bride before leaving for France. Several weeks passed, during which the letters he received from her were all that a husband could wish. But they were turned to bitterness by the belief that they were forgeries of feeling. The young officer glanced through them, then tore them into bits.

After one of the unsuccessful attempts of the Germans to break the British lines a force sallied forth in pursuit. A number of jackies from the fleet had been landed and took part in the fight, occupying a position on the flank of Trelawney's regiment. The enemy were followed for awhile; then they turned and drove back the allies. It was during this struggle that the missile fate had prepared for Trelawney struck him. He was left on a field where neither allies nor Germans could give him succor, for by this time both sides were back in their trenches and any one standing on the field would be a target for a thousand rifles.

Trelawney was knocked senseless. When he came to himself he lay in a pool of his own blood. His head rested on the dead body of a sergeant of his regiment, and a leg of a midshipman was thrown over his own person. His head being thus raised, the lieutenant could see the heaps of dead and dying about him. They reminded him of swaths of grain that had been cut by a scythe.

Feeling something tickling the back of his hand, he looked and saw an ant crawling over it.

"Singular!" he muttered. "This insect with a brain to plan, inhabiting the same world as humans, but a far different sphere, is no more concerned in this death storm which has passed over it than that dead leaf blown along by the wind."

The leg of the midshipman was burdensome, and Trelawney made a move to get rid of it. He was unable to do so, but his effort brought a low moan from the sailor. Then he opened his eyes and looked Trelawney in the face.

"Where are you hit?" asked Trelawney.

The sailor put his hand to his right side.

"Luckily it's not the left. You'll probably come out all right. I think I'm done for."

The two lay there near each other for a period which seemed to both interminable. The midshipman held his own while the lieutenant grew weaker.

"I say," said the latter, "I'm Trelawney of the —th infantry. If you get out of this and back to England find my wife and tell her about me. I shall probably be buried, and she won't know what has become of me. You can say positively that I'm dead, for I know I shall be dead pretty soon, and say that if there is any man who will make her happy as her husband it is my wish that she marry him without waiting for proof that she is a widow."

"I'll do it if I get back," was the reply, "but neither of us will do that."

This brief dialogue was spoken with difficulty, especially by Trelawney. After the midshipman had made the promise, with much effort he raised himself on an elbow to get a view of the surroundings.

"There's a truce," he said. "They're coming with spades and I'm to bury us."

He glanced at Trelawney and saw that he had closed his eyes and gave no sign of life.

"He was right," mused the sailor. "He'll either be burned or buried and that pretty soon. Not much time to spare for the dead. There'll be a new crop before long. Hope they won't begin before they get me. Here comes a Red Cross man."

* * * * * * *

At a country place in England a bride whose husband was fighting in France sat trying to pass the hours embroidering. She had tried reading, but though her eyes passed over the words, her mind refused to receive them. She had therefore resorted to working with her hands while her thoughts were with the dreadful slaughter going on in France. While thus occupied the butler entered with the morning mail, including newspapers from London.

The lady seized both and, glancing hastily at the superscription of the letters, tossed them on a table, then tore off the covering of one of the newspapers. Turning over the pages, she came to one, every column of which was filled with names. With wildly beating heart she ran her eye down the column till she came to a list under the caption of "—th infantry." Among the officers reported missing she saw the name of Trelawney.

While to learn that a soldier was missing left room for a ray of hope, the inference was that he had been buried or burned as unknown. Mrs. Trelawney had read of the fight during which her husband had disappeared, but had not learned that prisoners were taken on either side. Now with the list of casualties before her she knew that there were many chances that her husband had been killed and his body had received no more individual treatment than a spear of wheat cut down.

A month passed, when one day a card was handed to Mrs. Trelawney bearing the name of Edgar Furniss, royal navy. A young man was received breathlessly. He told the widow that he had seen her husband dead or dying, that a detachment approached for burial purposes and Red Cross workers at the same time. If Trelawney had not died he would have been taken in by the Red Cross men. Having destroyed all hope, the sailor gave the widow her husband's dying message, intimating that she should take another husband if there was any man who would make her happy.

Trelawney when the burial and the rescue parties came along was left by the latter for dead, and before there was time for the former to attend to him the truce ended. He lay where he was till midnight, when the spirit of evil again swept the field on which he lay under the direction of powerful searchlights. This time the Germans held the field long enough to take in the wounded, and Trelawney, whom a surgeon pronounced to be still alive, was removed to the rear.

The record of the next few weeks in the officer's case was, except for frequent removals, one continuous dull life in hospitals, during which he was slowly recovering from his wound. Long before he was supposed to be well enough to be transferred to a concentration camp for prisoners of war, tired of the life he led, one evening under cover of the darkness he walked away.

A few days later Trelawney reached England, but there was little likelihood of his being recognized, for he was the shadow of his former self. His hair had considerably whitened, and a long beard had grown on his formerly clean shaven face. Clad in khaki he appeared in the region of his former home as an invalid soldier on leave recovering from wounds. No one guessed that he was the young soldier who had so proudly marched away some months before.

Supported by a stout cane, he was walking along a road leading toward his former residence when who should drive by in a dogcart but the man whom he had been told his wife had formerly refused to marry, and Trelawney saw the vehicle stop before the door where his wife was living.

The soldier had come home incognito to prove the truth or falsity of what had been told him before going to the war. On seeing what he considered a confirmation of the story he paused. Should he go away and continue dead to the world, leaving the woman he loved to be happy with the man who could best make her happy?

A man came trudging along the road whom Trelawney recognized as an old tenant of his father's. But the man did not recognize Trelawney, who entered into conversation with him, Trelawney leading him to speak of the subject nearest his heart.

"They say," said the soldier, "that the young widow who lived down the road and who lost her husband in the war in France is going to take another husband."

"Who says that?" asked the man, fighting.

"Isn't it true?"

"True? There's a man been trying to get her, and he tried to get her before she was married. But she never will marry, because her heart is with the soldier who was killed in France. She has put up a headstone on her grounds with the word 'Unknown' on it, she keeps it covered with flowers."

When Trelawney walked on he stood up straighter and made his way with less difficulty than before. The next day he sought the place where the headstone to his memory stood. While there his wife, seeing an invalid near it, came out to talk to him. She looked into his face and despite his altered appearance knew him at once.

IN THE KITCHEN AND PANTRY

Systematic Arrangement of Drawers That Will Economize Space and Save Steps and Time For the Busy Housewife.

Prepared by the United States department of agriculture.

IN planning the storage places in the kitchen and pantry, such as shelves, closets and table drawers, the housewife will save much energy in the long run if she will keep each article near the place where it is most frequently used, as this saves many steps. She should have the storage places located where they are easily accessible and easily kept clean. To insure cleanliness closets, shelves and table or cabinet drawers should be made of good wood, free from holes, knots or other roughness likely to catch dirt and offer shelter to insects. If a space of about half an inch between the back edge of each shelf and the wall is left the shelves will be more easily cleaned.

For general use in the kitchen drawers are less convenient than shelves, because more work is required to open and shut and to clean them. They are also more expensive than open shelves. For towels and cloths, however, a few are almost indispensable. A chest of drawers on casters or a small bureau is often more convenient than built in drawers. For most kitchen purposes shallow drawers are better than deep ones because the contents require less handling.

Narrow shelves sometimes economize space better than wide ones, for all the articles on them can be easily reached, whereas on the wide ones either part of the shelf room is wasted or the things in front must be moved to get at those behind. A shelf not more than four inches wide will conveniently hold spices, flavoring extracts, baking powder and materials of this kind.

Fitting deep shelves with shallow boxes or "trays" (light wooden boxes with sides about four inches high and with a knob or handle on the front end so they can be conveniently moved) is often worth while. These shallow boxes can be filled with bottles, cans and other small articles neatly arranged. To take out the "tray," select the article one wishes and replace the "tray" is much more convenient than moving about on a shelf a large number of things until one finds something which may be at the back of the shelf, and leaves the articles in much better order.

It is often poor economy of space to put shelves all the way up the wall of a high room, for even with a step-ladder considerable effort is required to reach the things at the top. Certainly no articles which are used at all frequently should be kept on high shelves. Practical housekeepers usually keep on open shelves dishes and supplies which are frequently used or from which any dust can be readily removed, and in closed cupboards those which are seldom used or which dust might injure.

SEEKS A DIVORCE

Alleging that her husband, John Pearson, now residing in Syracuse, has been guilty of various indiscretions with several unknown women during the past six months, Mrs. Catherine Pearson, a former resident of West Broadway, through her attorney, John F. Cullen, has instituted an action in the Onondaga county Supreme Court for an absolute divorce.

I AM QUITE WELL—"RON"

THE ONLY INFORMATION RECEIVED BY AN ANXIOUS FULTON MOTHER FROM HER SOLDIER SON

Among the young English boys who are fighting with King George's army on the continent endeavoring to stem the German advance, is a son of Mrs. Rachel Turner of this city, who is at the home of David Kafz, the clothing store proprietor.

A card received from the young man by his mother illustrates the strict censorship maintained by the army.

The postal is an official form adopted by the English for use while in the field. On the front of the card is the mother's address over which is stamped a French postoffice address, "Carmy, Deotz." The only other inscription on the front of the card is "Field Service Post Card," and the English coat of arms.

On the side for correspondence the card reads, "Nothing is to be written on this except the date and signature of the sender. Sentences not required may be erased. If anything else is added the post card will be destroyed."

Following is the regulation form:

I am quite well.

I have been admitted into hospital. (Sick) and am going on well. (Wounded) and hope to be discharged soon.

I have received your (letter) (parcel)

Letter follows at first opportunity.

I have received no letter from you. (lately)

(for a long time)

Signature only.

Everything was stricken from the card by the young English soldier with the exception of the first sentence: "I am quite well." He signed his name, Ron, and that is the extent of the information received by the anxious mother from her only son whose life is daily in peril.

Young Turner left England for the theater of war two weeks ago, and his mother believes that he is now on the firing line.

The young man dated his card the 4th and the postal mark is stamped the 5th, evidencing the fact that it took a day to mail the card.

MELBOURNE INMAN IS WORLD'S CHAMPION AT ENGLISH BILLIARDS.

The English do many things differently and playing billiards is one of them. They play the game on a big table with small pockets, and when you pocket the cue ball it is a point instead of a scratch. Melbourne Inman is the champion at this back action game. He is trying to teach it to Willie Hoppe, who is returning the favor by giving him lessons in the balk line game. The returns indicate that Hoppe is learning faster than Inman, and some day the American may be able to defeat the Britisher.

WAS IT FOOT AND MOUTH?

Disease Similar to This Malady Kills Two Head of Cattle in North Volney

The foot and mouth disease is believed to have been discovered on a farm in North Volney yesterday and when two valuable cattle were stricken.

One of the head, a bull, was valued at $300. This is the first appearance of this malady in Oswego county.

The disease was in quite an advanced state; the cattle's hoofs putrifying and the sores appearing around the mouth.

Every precaution is being taken by the farmers in that vicinity to stop the spread of the disease.

State authorities and specialists will be rushed to that section to treat other cattle which have become infected. A thorough investigation will be made.

Although this disease was quite prevalent several weeks ago and many of the large stock yards of the United States under quaranting it was believed that it had been eradicated.

The discovery of this horrible disease so near our city is enough to strike terror in our hearts.

The local Meat and Market Inspector should make a careful inspection of all meats brought into this city by the farmers and sold in the city streets.

Residents of Fulton are warned not to buy an ounce of meat until they are sure that it has been carefully scrutinized and examined by our local inspector.

A veterinary that attended the cattle for several weeks claims that it was "Blackleg" but the dead cattle show that other symptoms such as the cankerous sores about the mouth which lead to believe that it is the foot and mouth disease.

The only preventive is by inoculating the cattle. An inspection will be made into the case to discover the nature of the disease.

TREES WERE DAMAGED

An action has been started in City Court by Fred Bache of this city against the Postal Telegraph Co. for $300 damages. The suit was brought about through use and occupation of plaintiff's land. The trial will come up before Judge Wilson on January 9th.

FULTON DIVORCE CASE SETTLED

Referee Guile Files a Report in the Bennett Divorce Action

Claude E. Guile, as referee, has handed down a decision recommending that an absolute decree of divorce be granted Ernest E. Bennett from his wife, Lena Bennett Hall, now the wife of Dr. A. L. Hall of this city. The report is being formulated and will be presented to Supreme Court in a few days for confirmation by Attorney John R. Pidgeon, of Oswego, who represents the plaintiff.

Evidence in the case was takep before Attorney Guile last week. It was proven that Mrs. Hall in 1911 secured a divorce from Mr. Bennett in Reno, Nev., on the ground that he had failed to provide for her.

Subsequently, she married Dr. Hall. The decree provided that she could resume her maiden name, Howell. She and Bennett were married in this city on August 26th, 1903, and Bennett in his suit contended that the Reno divorce was illegal and of no effect in this State.

In his decision Referee Guile takes the position that the Reno divorce is invalid on account of the fact that the complaint was not served within the State of Nevada and that there was no appearance on the part of the defendant.

TANGO CONTEST AT QUIRK

The Quirk theater to-morrow evening will be the scene of the greatest tango contest ever attempted in this part of the State. A rehearsal of the contestants has been held and they have shown more real class than even the most sanguine enthusiast believed possible. So far there are eight people entered in the contest and each couple will produce different steps so the program is certain to be a varied one. The orchestra has rehearsed with the dancers and has prepared a special musical program so it will be one of the best entertainments presented in this city for some time. Besides the contest there will be some feature motion pictures, making a program which cannot be equaled.

CULKIN RENDERS ANNUAL REPORT

Commercial Vice in Oswego Conuty a Thing of the Past

The annual report of the District Attorney filed with the Board of Supervisors last night shows that 136 indictments were found by the grand jury. Seventy-two persons were convicted and only one was acquitted.

The fines collected amounted to $1,300. The report states:

"The policy of this office as to law enforcement has remained the same in the matter of gambling, liquor tax violations and complaints on disorderly houses. During the past year I have had detectives check up the local situation on vice and other matters and their reports indicate that commercial vice is a thing of the past in Oswego."

District Attorney Culkin has accomplished some wonderful work during his term of office. Among the most important convictions was that of George H. Williamson and Dr. Elmer L. Hinman.

AN ENLISHMAN'S IMAGINATIVE MIND

London, Dec. 22.—(By Mail to New York December 21.)—The true story of the delay in sending three 42-centimeter German guns to the Belgian coast has just leaked out.

It is certainly one of the most startling developments in the repertoire of the German Emperor's recent doings that has yet come to light and fully explains his quarrel with the Krupps.

An English army officer who arrived today in charge of German prisoners ascertained from one of them that the distinguished Krupp engineer, Herr Blesner was specially sent by the Krupps to take charge of the fixing and transportation of the monster guns.

On arriving at Antwerp the engineer had a dispute with the Grand Duke of Wuerttemberg as to the manner in which the guns were to be placed upon the coast. Herr Blesner appealed in a personal interview to the Kaiser. The Emperor supported the view of the Grand Duke and told the engineer that in the future he must take orders without question. Herr Blesner replied in a manner the Kaiser regarded as disrespectable.

The Emperor, in his rage, struck Herr Blesner in the face. The engineer at once returned to Essen and handed in his resignation to the Krupp firm, declaring he would not resume his duties unless the Kaiser apologized.

The Krupps asked the Emperor to apologize, but he declined point blank and requested that another engineer should be sent to take charge of the transportation of the Howitzers. Up to the time of this writing no engineer has been found to take Herr Blesner's place with the result that the Germans are still powerless to reply to the fire of the British ships off Ostend. The three monster guns, meanwhile, are still cooling their heels in the Krupp factory.

WAR WILL NOT INTERFERE

Many farmers believe that there will be a shortage of potash during the ensuing year, which is one of their chief products for fertilizing.

It is said that an agreement has been reached with Germany, which supplies most of the world with potash, so that they will exchange for other necessities which they lack.

The only difficulty experienced in Germany is the lack of men to transport the potash from the mines to the coast.

Austro-German Offensive Broken; Warsaw Safe

Russians Report Great Battle Now Raging Along Pelica River Between Lodz and Opoczno

Special to The Evening Times

Petrograd, Dec. 23.—A great battle is raging to-day along the Pilica river between Lodz and Opoczno. The Germans are attempting to cross the river to gain possession of the railroad running from Ivanorod to southwestern Poland. There is a lull on the Bzūra river, on the western side of which the Germans are awaiting fresh troops to resume their efforts to reach Warsaw.

The German defeat at the Bzura is declared to have been much greater than the brief information reveals.

The Bourse Gazette's correspondent at Warsaw sends this dispatch: "The Germans suffered a heavy rreverse at the North end of the Bzura. Part of the German troops had crossed the river on pontoon bridges when the Russian batteries opened a furious cannonade on the dense masses of men struggling up the river bank. The Germans were mowed down by hundreds and those who escaped the artillery fire were driven back and drowned. The pontoons were smashed and burned. Later 2,000 bodies were found along the river's eastern bank. The Russians captured nine undamaged guns belonging to the regiment that first crossed the river."

Of the conflict along the Pilica river, the correspondent said:

"The first attack was made by the Germans' southern wing stretching along the left bank of the Pilica. This comprises troops from Lodz reinforced by corps from the west brought through on the lines of Lask and Piotrokow. The combined forces made repeated attacks on the Russian positions stretching northward from the Pilica.

"In general, the Germans were repulsed with great losses, but at a few points they gained a little ground eastward. The Russians maintained their lines practically unchanged."

"We are invading East Prussia from the east and from the south; we have driven the Germans back across the Bzura river; on the Pilica river we are repulsing the Germans trying to advance from Lodz; Warsaw is safe; in eastern Galicia and southern Poland we have broken the Austro-German offensive."

Minister of War Souckhomlinoff to-day summed up the military situation in these words. M. Souckhomlinoff, who has done more than any two men in Russia to make the army an effective organization made no flamboyant prediction that the German armies would be crushed immediately. He admitted frankly that the enemy had won some successes, but none that would seriously affect the result—the crushing of German militarism.

The minister of war just returned from the front and a conference with Emperor Nicholas at Miscow. He declared that the stories of great victories given out in Berlin were "lies designed to counteract the discontent caused by the failure of the German war machine to accomplish any of the magnificant deeds epected of it."

"We have given ground at some points on the great battle front," he said, "but we have gained more ground at other points which are of great importance. The Germans' gains have been made at the expense of terrible loss of life on their part.

"The German commanders have sacrificed tens of thousands of men to gain only a temporary advantage. It is possible to forsee the result of their strategy and of ours. We attack as soon as we find the enemy weakening. We sacrifice no soldiers needlessly. Our gains are permanent.

"It is the wish of the Emperor that the Russian soldiers shall not be used to feed the German cannon. His wish is echoed by our commanders and as a result the Russian army has a strength unequalled in the world's history."

Petrograd, Dec. 23.—The Persian legation to-day issued a denial of the reports that Persia will support Germany and Turkey in the war.

Petrograd, Dec. 23.—Russian warships in the Black sea have shelled the Turks advancing to the coast toward Batoum, it was announced at the admiralty to-day. The following statement was issued:

"On the Caucasian front Russian torpedo boats yesterday bombarded coast villages occupied by Turkish troop in the region of Chopau. In the direction of Van the Russians continue to press back considerable Turkish forces."

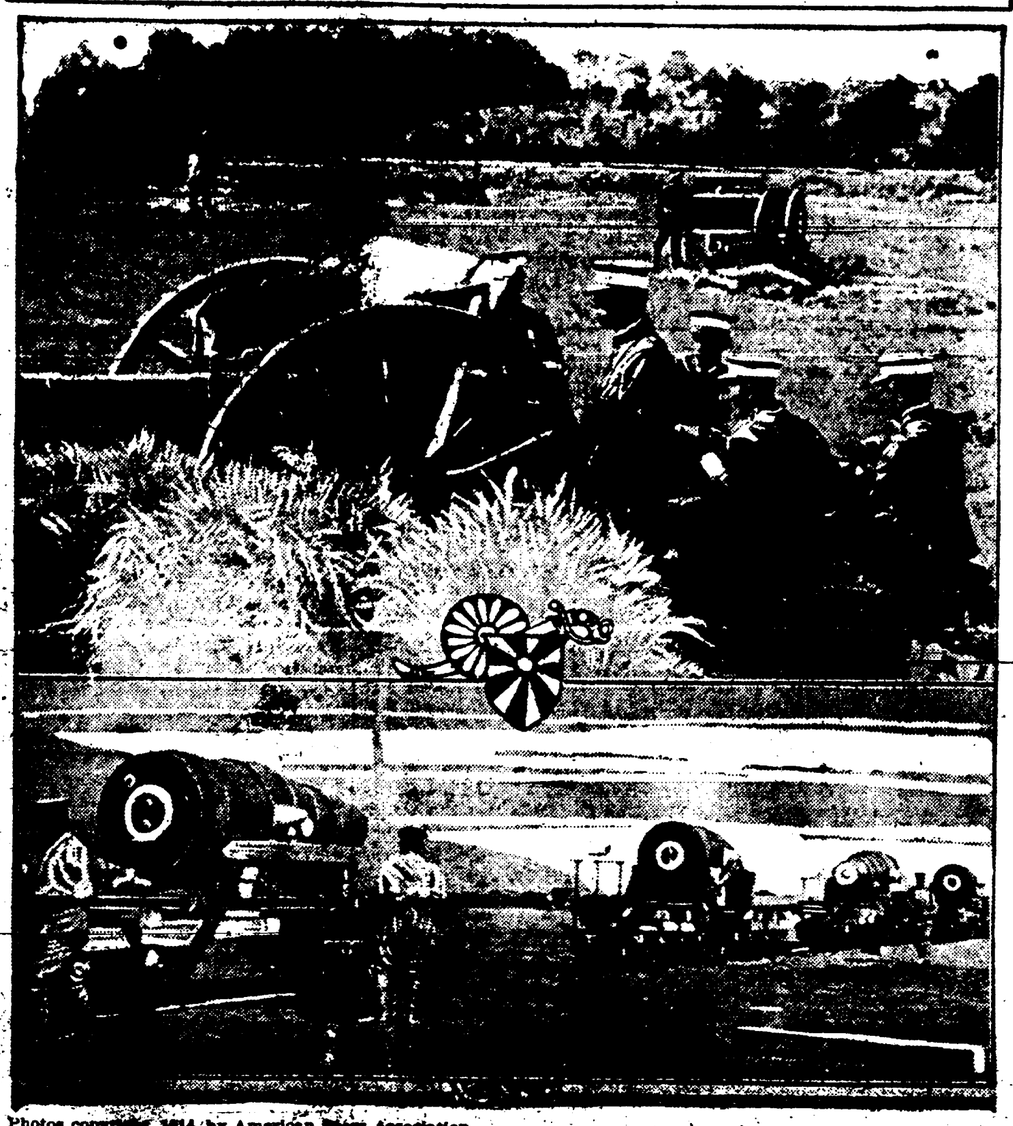
LATE WAR BULLETINS

Athens, Dec. 23.—A warship whose nationality is not known is reported in a dispatch from Mitylene to have been sunk off the coast of Syria with all on board.

French and British warships that have been off the coast of Syria for some time were recently joined by a Russian cruiser, Askold.

The U. S. cruiser Tennessee left Alexandria, Egypt, for Jaffa, yesterday.

Geneva, Switzerland, Dec. 23.—Flying at a height of 4,800 feet a French aviator dropped three bombs upon the main station of the German aviation squadron near Strassburg on Monday and caused heavy damage. The station is in the suburb of Illkirch-Grafenstaden, only two miles from the heart of Strassburg and well within the line of forts protecting the stronghold.



The attacking aviator was driven off by aerial guns before he could reach the main town, but when he sped back toward the French frontier the Illkirch-Grafenstaden station was burning.

Great activity is evident in the Zeppelin factory at Friedrichshafen. Another armored dirigible is being tried out.

WEATHER FORECAST

Partly cloudy to-night and Thursday. Probably snow flurries. Fresh west and northwest winds.

First Picture of Japanese Guns Used In Forcing the Surrender of Germans In China.

Photos copyrighted, 1914, by American Press Association.

These are some of the first actual war pictures to arrive from the far east, where the Japanese were successful in capturing Tsingtau, fortress of the German province of Kiaochau. The lower picture shows Japanese siege guns loaded on cars for transportation to the scene of battle. These big cannon are not half as destructive as the great 42 centimeter guns the Germans used in Belgium, but they proved effective in hammering some of the German forts to pieces. The top picture shows Japanese artillerymen in action with a field piece.

Allies' Offensive Weak; Joffre Is Dissatisfied

Special to The Evening Times

Paris, Dec. 23.—Since the allies resumed the offensive all along the battle front in France, Belgium and Alsace-Lorraine, they have made the following approximate gains:

On the Nieuport-St. Georges-Dixmude line the Franco-Belgian forces have advanced about four miles to apoint slightly east of Lombartzyde.

At Ypres, the Franco-British forces have gained between two and three miles on the Bixschoote-Passchendaele-Gheluvelt-Hollebeke line.

On the Arras-La Basse line, the Franco-British forces have advanced five miles, taking practically all of the German first line trenches.

In the Argonne and between the Argonne and the Meuse, the French have pushd forward their lines about three and one-quarter miles, taking a number of trenches and occupying strategic roadways.

West of Auelhausen, in Alsace, the French have advanced about ten miles.

Slight gains of less importance have been made by the allies on the Bapaume-Albert-Roye-Noyon line, at Tracy-le-Val and on the heights of the Meuse as well as in the Woevre district.

At only one point have the counter attacks of the Germans resulted in a gain for them. This is east of Rheims, between the Nesle and the Aisne rivers in the district near Bethenville and Suippes.

Although the allies have been pursuing their offensive for more than a fortnight, with varying degrees of pressure along the line, the German front at no point has suffered seriously. This can be attributed to the great strength of the Germans fortified positions. At points where they have fallen back they have retired to previously constructed trenches. The Germans hav lost but little artillery and the French war office has now got to the point where it credits officially the capture of such small batches of prisoners as 100 or 300.

That General Joffre, the French commander-in-chief, is not entirely satisfied with the way things have been going at some points on the 300-mile battle line, is shown by the fact that he has recently retired twenty-four French generals.

It is now reported from Furnes that several civilians were killed and that twenty-four women and children were wounded when the Germans shelled the civil hospital at Ypres on Monday. The dispatch did not say if any soldiers had been killed.

The German army in West Flanders is being reinforced again, and there are indications that the Germans there may try to resume the offensive in a third effort to cut their way through to Dunkirk.

BOMBS SET IN OCEAN LINERS

Conspiracy Unearthed by New Orleans Police; German Spy Under Arrest Reveals Plot

New Orleans, Dec. 23.—The New Orleans police to-day asked the New York authorities to investigate the New York ends of the conspiracy revealed here by Hans Halle, a German, to place bombs on board the French and British liners sailing for Europe. The police have in their possession a bomb of enormous power, which Halle said, was to have been sent to New York to-day to be placed on the French liner Chicago, which sails from that city on Saturday. The bomb was to have been timed to explode on Monday when the ship was well out to sea.

According to the police New Orleans is the headquarters of the conspiracy and that the bombs were to have been made here and then shipped by parcel post to New York and to the other ports from which French and British ships sailed.

When Halle was arrested he gave the name of Frank Hohn. Later he admitted his real identity. He said that he was born in Hamburg 35 years ago. As a result of the story he told Conrad Brinckman, another German and George Sommers have been arrested. Sommers is held as an accomplice; Brinckman as a material witness.

"We did not want to take human life; only stop the shipment of arms, ammunition and supplies to the armies whichare fighting against Germany," Halle said.

Halle was arrested after a police investigation of the disposition of a big quantity of dynamite which they learned had recently been purchased.

FULTON HIT BY BLIZZARD

Mountainous Drifts Line the Roadways; Traffic Hampered By Three Feet of Snow

Despite the heavy fall of snow during the past twenty-four hours the Empire United Railway made comparatively good time with their trolley service.

Last night when the storm first broke the traffic was slightly delayed. Fulton seemed to be the center of the storm belt. No less than twenty-four inches of the beautiful fell up until noon to-day and there was no sign of the storm abating. Observer Linsley at Oswego predicts snow flurries for Fulton and vicinity and we can expect about three feet of snow on the ground for Christmas.

The storm last night intereferred with the holiday shopping and the merchants look forward to a rush to-night.

The steam roads were handicapped throughout this section of the State and Richland the "Medicine Hat" of the East, was tied up with the flange and rotary plows working night and day.

Strenuous efforts are being made to keep the local street car service open, but as the small cars blocked the interurban cars yesterday no attempt was made to operate them during the heighth of the storm.

This is the worst storm of the season although the mercury remains above zero, which is one consolation.

Highway men in the outlaying districts are busily engaged in breaking roads so as the people from the rural districts can get in to do their Christmas shopping.

Oswego also suffered a heavy fall of snow and a stiff gale off the lake added to the discomfort.

THREE HOURS LATE

Train No. 1 on the New York, Ontario and Western, which passes through this city about 7:40 p. m. daily, was three hours late. The train crew reported that they encountered huge drifts between here and South Bay. The train is northbound.

CLEARING UP SNOW

Superintendent of Public Works, Frank Rumsey, has a large corp of men at work breaking the roads and clearing the sidewalks.

STORM NOTES

The interurban cars had to plough through a ten foot drift near the west approach of the lower bridge.

Trains coming up from Oswego on the Ontario & Western and the Central were from thirty to forty minutes late.

English Violated Quarantine Laws

New York, Dec. 23.—Col. George W. Goethals, governor of the Panama Canal Zone with Mrs. Goethals arrived to-day from Cristobal. Questioned as to his recent requests for torpedo boats destroyers on the subsequent report that foreign warships were violating the neptrality in the canal zone he says:

"Trouble about the British colliers about which so much violation of neutrality as it was a neglect to submit to the requirements of the quarantine regulations."

Col. Goethals will go immediately to Washington.

TURKS SURPRISE RUSSIANS

Constantinople, via Berlin and Amsterdam, Dec. 23.—It is officially announced that the Turkish army dispatched to Egypt began its forward march upon the Suez canal on Monday. It is under command of Djemal Pasha.

Another announcement by the war office says: "Turkish troops in the Caucasus made a surprise attack at night on the Russian positions at Elagnis-Mirlri, twenty miles east of Koprikoi. The Russians suffered heavy losses and fled."

OPINIONS

Civic Betterment.

In these days when selfishness and individualism are giving way before the demand of the civic conscience for better living conditions, the phrase "Civic Betterment" is almost a slogan in the ears of many whose desire is to be modern at the cost of anything save social ostracism, and whose minds are pleased with their ability to grasp this so righteous-sounding and so modern term.

But what does it mean, and has it any connection with anything save what one might call citified selfishness? Let us look into the thing and see.

What is civic betterment? Briefly, I take it to mean improved conditions of living in places where people have come together to live in groups large or small, for one reason or another. Better roads, better municipal sanitation, better police protection—all that and more would come under the head of civic betterment of the selfish kind, while playgrounds, public parks, cleaner streets, better lighting and more things along this same line might come under the head of civic altruism.

How many of these things have any connection whatsoever with the ballot? All. Why? Because none of these much-to-be-desired can be had unless appropriations be made by those men who are put in the position of representatives of the people. From what funds are the appropriations made? They are made from sums paid by the taxpayers. Who are taxpayers? They are the men and women who own taxable property. Are they, then, the "people" whom the "representatives," who have control over appropriations, represent? No—only part of them are; the women are not represented because they are women and have no vote, even though they pay taxes in good coin of the realm.

Are women not interested in civic betterment? They are not only interested in civic betterment, but they usually create the desire for civic improvements, because most of them are directly or indirectly connected with the welfare of the home and child, and these are—and always will be—pre-eminently the woman's care. If our suppositions are correct—and I think there can be no question that they are—it would seem as if the thing could be reduced to an algebraical equation:

Woman demands civic betterment. Civic betterment demands the vote. If things equal to the same thing are equal to each other, then woman demands the vote.—Woman's Journal.

Purgatory.

Mexico presents to the eye a perfect picture of purgatory—an outward conception of paradise. When you leave Vera Cruz, in a crude box of a wagon drawn by a dirty old mule, you plow your way through Arabian deserts of sand, until the heat and dust almost suffocate you. There is not a symptom of vegetation in sight. It is Dante's dumping ground—hot enough to melt the hinges on the furnace door of the old Puritanic conception of purgatory.

The first life you see as you approach vegetation is a snake. This is suggestive.

And all the while you can see, in the distance, the snow-capped mountains with their ice-mantled heads. In Mexico, real comfort, real pleasure, is like the mirage—it is always in the deceptive distance—always ahead. That is the purgatory part of Mexico.

Then there is the Paradise—lost.

What they call paradise, in Mexico, is the perfume of roses, and in every rose is coiled the fanged tongue. At night there are the sights of the lofty trees, the hills and the valleys, and the dark lanes, where every flower of every color and of every delicious fragrance combines to make an outward appearance of paradise. But you are a long ways from paradise.—Silent Partner.

Laughs.

I have heard of the father who told his son in a loud tone of voice, "I am still the boss of this house." And the son replied, "All right, dad; but you're a coward to make the boast behind mother's back." I have heard the story of the certain surly old Yankee who runs a small "summer hotel" on the coast, and who once received a letter from a prospective "guest," who wrote to engage two large sunny rooms, overlooking the ocean and connected with private bath. The old Yankee sent the following letter: "Dear Madam: All rooms face the ocean, and that's your bath." I once heard a shoe dealer ask an old miner how he liked the last pair of boots he sold him, and the miner replied, "The best I ever tasted." I asked an old farmer once to what he attributed his longevity, and he told me that he he never had one. But about the best story I have heard is on the Washington lawyer. It appears that at a trial in Baltimore he summoned as a witness a youthful physician, and naturally in the cross-examination he seized the occasion to be sarcastic. "Are you," demanded the lawyer, "entirely familiar with the symptoms of concussion of the brain?" The young physician replied, "Yes, sir, I am." Then the smart lawyer put a hypothetical case before the doctor, in this way: "If my learned friend, Mr. Reid, and myself should bang our heads together, would we get concussion of the brain?" The young physician calmly replied, "Mr. Reid might."—Silent Partner.

Wednesday Last Day.

Wednesday is the last day for filing notes of issue for the trial term of Supreme Court to open in Oswego on January 4th. A number have already been filed with Court Clerk Coulter, including two actions for personal injury brought by Frank Massaro of Fulton, against Kirk N. Sweet, of Phoenix, brother of the Speaker. Over half a dozen cases against the H. P. Burgard Co., are also noticed for trial indicating that it will be tough on the lawyers when the barge canal work ends.—Palladium.

The Income Tax.

Madison, Wis. Dec. 23.—The income tax will net this State $4,140,571 this year, according to a statement by the tax commission today. This is an increase of $56,074 over last year.

INTEREST GROWS

Realization is at all times the crystallization of thought plus effort. And in regard to successful community work S. C. Mead, secretary of the Merchants' association of New York, in a recent address said this consists in arousing in the minds of the business men, as in the minds of all others, the welfare and concern of one another.

It is necessary interest be manifest through expressed ideas. All too many good citizens are willing to express their ideas; i. e., by heaping indignations upon the head of some long suffering public official who is untrained in the work but is giving in a public spirited way "the best he has in him."

However, many cities have of late refused to stand in their own light and either by changing the city's form of government, or by placing efficient men at the heads of the various departments, they have established a true business concern where the taxpayers all get "value received" for money paid into the treasury.

Getting together and planning for the city's welfare is far more commendable than grumbling alone about the "high taxes." Whose business is the "high tax" rate if it isn't the taxpayers?

Concentrated interest is the best "booster" a community can have.

THE PRESIDENT'S HANDED-DOWN REFORM

President Wilson's scheme to kill Tammany before 1916 by refusing to give any federal patronage to persons allied with Murphy is beautiful—in theory. The only trouble with it is that it is reform superimposed, like so many of the President's business reforms, whereas the philosophers declare that true reform, in politics as elsewhere, must grow up, not be handed down by a superior being.

Tammany can't be starved off the face of the earth in the space of two years, even by a Republican state administration, an inimical Democratic federal administration and a fusion city administration. Neither is starving conducive to reform—that is, reform from the bottom up. Tammany is much more likely to conceive a violent and bitter antipathy to all that is pure and sweet and Wilsonian in Democratic politics. The President's scheme is slightly askew on facts and wabbly as to phychology. Otherwise it's beautiful.—New York Tribune.

UNDER ONE MAN'S RULE

Uncle Sam's One Man Court

"Let George Do It," and He Can

Washington, Dec. 23.—Uncle Sam's one man court is George E. Downey, comptroller of the United States treasury. Every day he passes on puzzling questions, which may involve any amount from "two bits" to millions. In his own sphere, he is supreme. Every government department that has tangled skeins of red tape, questions of procedure, troublesome expense accounts—in fact, almost any kind of a question under the sun—simply says "let George do it" And he does.

If Bill Smith, who travels for the department of agriculture, passes a tip to a barber and charges it on his expense account, Downey may have to decide if that is allowable. Of course, Bill is allowed a certain amount for tips but the one man court must decide whether the barber's fee was permissible under what Uncle Sam allows for gratuities.

Only a few days ago, the one man court had two cases involving Chinese. One was a customs matter involving thousands of dollars. The other was a bill against the government for 75 cents in a Chinese laundry.

And the court took just as much pains, and did just as much labor to solve the 75 cent case of the laundryman as he did with that of the big Chinese merchant.

Downey gets some strange ones in the course of a day's work, but he has the Fays backed off the map when it comes to answering questions. And the best part of it all is that what he says, goes. If he rules that a government department can't spend its money in a certain fashion, they simply can't do it.

For instance, a traveling man working for the government is supposed to take the shortest direct route without stopovers. This line may be a slow steamboat passage. The traveling man may decide that it will be just as cheap to go by rail, and a whole lot more expeditious. Right there is where the one man court comes in. He looks over the precedents, and the laws, and decides nothing doing—it must be the steamboat route. And thereafter, Mr. Traveling man, takes the old chug chug affair instead of the comfortable Pullman.

In the course of a year, Downey undoubtedly saves the government many hundred times what he gets in return for his service. Nobody ever figured out just what the saving was, but practically every decision he gives has the effect of economizing for the boss, Uncle Sam.

"Rum Row," just a couple of blocks away from the White House, is sad and shocked these days. One of its landmarks, Shoomaker's the birthplace of the ginrickey, is moving out of its dusty, dingy quarters into a new location on the Row. Many of its relics are going too, but the Row can't quite get used to the idea. The new place won't harbor the same old cobwebs; it can't accommodate all of the ancient lithographs, the souvenirs of the old time politicians, and the mementoes from the old gang that used to frequent the place back in Civil war days.

"Shoos" is perhaps the most famous dispensary of alcoholic refreshments in the country. Visitors from all over make it a mecca. They want to look at the quaintest, queerest barroom they ever saw. Its huge piles of box goods in the front end, stored in a musty room, hide from view the bar. The bar is cobwebby, fly-specked; everything smacks of age. There are no mirrors; no fancy cut glass. The wall back of the bar is literally overrun with souvenirs. It doesn't look very inviting, but its clientele is the best in the city.

The tired business man, the congressman with a thirst after his day's labor, the clubman, all find there a common meeting place and seem to gather from the dingy, dusty, musty surroundings an inspiration. And the place is moving now. So no wonder the Row is sad and shocked.

Then, too, the Row lost another of its gathering places when the new excise law limited the number of thirsteries that could occupy one city block. But the thirsty contingent isn't going dry, for the door of the corner bar facing on the Row was closed, an application was filed for a location around the corner and the place reopened with a door on the side.

COAST PORTS REMAIN IDLE

The Atlantic Coast Ports in Every Instance Contain One or More Idle Boat

New York, Dec. 23.—At least fifty gigantic liners representing a total value of a billion dollars are lying idle in American ports today as a result of the European war. The loss sustained each day by the various steamship companies through the idleness of their costly vessels is almost incalculable.

The Atlantic coast ports of the United States in nearly every instance contain one or more ships either interned or laid up through lack of trans-Atlantic travel. Boston and New York are harboring the greatest number.

When the war first broke out, many big German liners were forced to put back into American ports to avoid raiding by British cruisers. Others were ordered to disband crews and lay up in our ports until the end of hostilities.

The two great German liners, the North German Lloyd and the Hamburg-American own forty-three vessels now enforcedly idle in American ports. The White Star line was forced through lack of business to discontinue the sailings of the Cedric, the Celtic and the Cymric. The White Star Dominion Line discontinued the sailings of the Laurentic, Canada and Teutonic.

The big piers in Brooklyn present some disconsolate scenes of suspended activity. At one pier are tied three big ocean greyhounds, their sides dirty from lack of paint and with winches and brass work rusted from disuse. They are the Kaiser Wilhelm II, the Grosserr Kurfurst and the Freiderich Der Grosse. A small crew of men are kept aboard to guard the big liners and a wisp of smoke coming from one of the stacks on each vessel tells that fires are being kept to prevent freezing.

At another Brooklyn dock stands the mighty Vaterland of the Hamburg-American line. At the time of launching, the Vaterland was heralded as the last word in ocean liners. Her cost was estimated at over $6,000,000.—Her tonnage is greater than that of any liner afloat. Today she is worse than useless to the Hamburg-American line because every day of idleness is piling up huge costs on idle investments.

In one of the long warehouses at the Bush Terminal docks in Brooklyn, nearly one hundred sailors, members of the German vessels interned there are being housed. The Hamburg-American line and the North German Lloyd has fitted up the warehouse with bunks and small stoves and all day the men sit idle waiting for a chance to either work around the docks or smuggle themselves out of the country. They all want to fight for the Fatherland but the laws of neutrality prohibit them leaving the United States unless they are American citizens. To get around this law, a thriving trade has sprung up among naturalized foreigners who sell their naturalization papers for amounts up to $100. With these papers, the Germans pass the port authorities and reach the Fatherland as American citizens.

The fleet of the North German Lloyd line the proudest Trans-Atlantic fleet in history has been decimated by the war. Tied up at docks in the port of New York are six of the line's biggest vessels. They are the Kaiser Wilhelm II, the George Washington, the Grosser Kurfurst, Friederich Der Grosse, Barbarossa, and Princess Irene. Many of the North German Lloyd and Hamburg-American vessels have also been taken over by the German government and are converted into scouts and cruisers.

At Boston lies the Kronprinzessin Cecilie whose palatial equipment is known to thousands of Americans. Alongside her is the Wittekind, the Willehad and the Koln, vessels of lesser size.

The idleness of the big liners has increased the business of the smaller neutral lines tremendously. The freight departments of the Uranium line, the Russian Norwegian and the French line are working night and day handling their increased business.

England having control of the seas, her big Trans-Atlantic lines are still doing business but travel and trade have diminished to such an extent that all are suffering. The Cunard line is operating all of their vessels either in commercial business or for the Government of Great Britain. The White Star line is also operating all of its steamers.

Luxurious Auto Busses Commandeered In the Streets of Vienna for Their Use

On the Hungarian Frontier, Nov. 6. (By mail to New York.)—Luxurious auto-busses taken from the streets of Vienna are the truly excellent vehicles furnished the war correspondents by the Austro-Hungarian military authorities. Two auto-busses which had served but a short time before for the upper classes of that gay city were loaded onto freight cars. The freight cars were switched up to a newly painted first class passenger car, a box car with a straw covered floor was added, an engine was hooked, a soldier-conductor blew a whistle, the engine tooted and we were off to the front along the "great white way." But our progress was extremely slow. We stopped for an hour or more at every switch, to allow trains coming from the direction of the front to pass us. We spent most of our time at the windows.

First it would be a train load of wounded; then a train load of Russian prisoners; then a train of empties going back for supplies. We stopped opposite a train load of Russians. They were mad for cigarettes which we threw to them. One of them cut a button off his coat and gave it to me for a cigarette. Another Russian leaning from the box car door for a cigarette lost his balance and fell out on the ground, carrying with him a Hungarian sentry who stood at the doorway, rifle and all. The two enemies rubbed their shins, looked at each other and laughed and climbed back into the car. What would have been the good of the Russian running? What chance would he have had even had he escaped, in a country where his uniform would spell death for him? Wisely enough he crawled back into his box car prison and grinned his thanks as he took the first "pull" at the cigarette that had cost him a bruised shin. The sentry could not smoke, being on duty, but he grinned his thanks as he tucked his cigarette into his hat.

I slept on the straw in the box car the first night in my sleeping bag. The Italian and the Swiss did not want the window of our compartment opened and the only way to get fresh air was to take to the open car. The Italian, who is an officer in the Italian navy explained to me that "fresh air at sea was dry and healthful but on land he could not endure it because it was too damp." The second night I slept on a flat car because there were twelve men in the box car who insisted on keeping the door closed. At last I got enough fresh air, even though I had to dig myself out of a drift of black cinders in the morning. In thirty-six hours we had gone about sixty miles and Colonel Jolin, our escort decided to take to the high roads with the auto-busses. While the busses were being unloaded we took breakfast. Then a Red Cross doctor, who was a friend of the military doctor who had our respective healths in charge, showed us through a well appointed hospital train which was standing in the yards. I would just as lief have been ill in that train as in a hospital except, of course, for the rattle of the cars.

"Come with me," said the Red Cross doctor, after we had done the train. "There's a train coming in soon with a cholera suspect on it and you can see him."

The train was already in the station. In the last compartment of the last car, we saw a soldier leaning, sickly, against the wall. A stretcher was laid out on the platform, the doctor opened the compartment door; the soldier, obeying orders, staggered to the doorway and down the two car steps and sank onto the stretcher with a sigh of relief. He looked unspeakably ill and weak. A doctor wearing a long white robe and a white mask covered the sick soldier with a sheet. Other men in white robes slammed the car door closed and a man with a brush and paste like a bill poster deftly slapped a red sign over the car door, sealing it. The sign bore the word "cholera." The car would be immediately fumigated under the excellent precautionary system of the Austro-Hungarian army and it would not be used again until it was clear of all possible contagion.

On the Hungarian Frontier, Nov. 6.—Our little newspaper party, numbed with the cold, climbed out of the car today and were led by a sentinel through a great double door into the muddy passage way of a building. A side door opened and we entered a huge, long room, warm and well lighted with oil lamps. Three long tables ran the length of the room. There were the remnants of a giant dinner on them, which soldiers were clearing away. A piano was banging, a huge man with a jolly face was singing. Men sat about the tables in small groups drinking beer and listening. It was my introduction to the Austro-Hungarian press headquarters.

In this little town sixty newspapermen are lodged. It requires a small army of officers and soldiers to care for them. The town is set aside entirely for the press and every soldier to be seen, every horse, every one of the scores of supply wagons, every automobile, every officer—all have as their duty or purpose the convenience of the correspondents who are mostly Austrians and Hungarians. In addition to the comforts which the writing men have, there are two auto-busses at their disposal which make regular trips between this little town and headquarters. And, on the road, you often see a train of four or five small wagons carrying beer which will be consumed, in large part, by the newspapermen. The correspondents pay for their beer but their food is furnished them free. In this great room where I ate my hot, belated supper the correspondents do a great deal of their writing and here the censors, who are appointed to deal in various languages, talk over the copy of the journalists, read out news at mealtime and give instructions as to postal and telegraph arrangements.

An auto was waiting for me and I was whisked to a whitewashed house on the outskirts of the town where a room had been reserved for me. The family was Polish. All about the walls of the little room were pictures of the Christ and the Virgin Mary. It was the parlor, and three clocks were ticking away merrily. I have been in scores of such houses in America. I remembered that one time in a Massachusetts town during a strike, I had slept for four nights in just such a Polish home waiting for the deputy sheriff to come and put the family out into the street but the sheriff had not come and I had missed my story. There had been two clocks in my room in that house in America. Poles seem to run clocks. I locked two of

DON'T SEND COSTLY GIFTS, SAYS PASTOR

Battle Creek, Mich., Dec. 22.—"We are all caught up in the great Xmas machine. We send expensive gifts to our friends every year because we feel sure they are going to send us expensive gifts. We can't get out of it."

This is the statement made by the Rev. George E. Barnes, pastor of a local church, and he proposes that savings from a safe and sane Xmas shall be used to buy things for the needy at home and abroad. Cards are being sent out to-day, therefore, with the following inscription:

"My Christmas decision.—Every Christmas season makes you friendship and mine more precious and our love more tender. This year the thought of that love has been bringing to me a new consciousness of the needs of the whole world for Christmas cheer and love. Desolate homes, stricken countries and imperiled lives abroad; slackened industry and impending suffering at home, all are calling. I want you to know that my Christmas gift to you will be quite simple, but warmed with the fire of a new love, for I am going to give extra gift to the needs of all those whom I have never seen but whom I deeply love. My joy in this new service will be greater if you join me in its spirit that our Christmas celebration may be simple, filled with good will, winged with sacrifice, and devoted to peace."

FIRST OHIOAN IN 1915 TO GET MANY GIFTS

Lorain, O., Dec. 23.—The first baby born in Lorain after January 1, 1915, will come into the world in possession of the proverbial silver spoon. A Lorain newspaper to-day offered a prize of ten dollars for the first 1915 baby.

Lorain merchants are also to be asked to come forward with offers of go-carts, clothes and other articles necessary to the well-being of infants.

Relief for the Kidneys.

Mr. William J. Calkins, 242 Main street, Hartford, Conn., says:—"After having doctored for more than a year with best physicians in Hartford and getting no relief, I was advised by a druggist in Plainville, Ct., to try a bottle of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. I was very nervous and had a complication of diseases, especially kidney trouble. I started to use Favorite Remedy and the first bottle gave me great relief. CLEARY WIDOW WARNS GIRLS

Assumes Responsibility For Her Father's Crime. Should Have Made Mother Confidant

New York, Dec. 23.—Mrs. Anna Cleary Newman, the young widow who was a central figure in the trial of her father, William V. Cleary, at New York, for the murder of her husband, declared to-day that she considered herself to blame for the whole tragedy and warned other girls against marrying unworthy men.

She is still highly nervous at her home, No. 610 W. 152d St., and the doctor has prescribed absolute rest for her. It was only six weeks ago that she said she had a right to choose her own husband and her manner of living, and that "children often see things far more clearly than the parents and often know what is best for their own happiness.

But to-day she has changed her opinion, although she declared:

"I loved my husband with all my heart, and I assume responsibility for all my acts."

"I hope this may be an example to some other poor girl," she began in a monotone. "At least then some good will come of it all. I made the mistake of thinking I knew more than did my parents, but I have been punished for my mistake. I would like to send a warning to all girls to obey their parents and make confidents of them.

"Had I done so this awful thing would have been averted. That was my most terrible mistake. Who knows what good might have come of it if I had but made a confident of my mother. I might have been happily married now to Gene."

CONGRESS CLEARS DESKS FOR ARMY-NAVY FIGHT

Washington, Dec. 23.—When Congress to-day took a recess over the holidays, it had progressed well along the line toward disposition of at least two of its appropriation measures. The District of Columbia appropriations has already been passed and the legislative measure is about ready to go to the senate.

House members to-day were primed for the big fight anticipated on the army and navy appropriation. This should be in full blast soon after the legislators return for work on Jan. 4th. All indications to-day pointed to the bitterest contest of the short session, although administration supporters will endeavor to put a check on too much argument from the Republican side and from militaristic members of the Democratic side.

SHUGRUE MAY GET REVENGE ON LEWIS

New York, Dec. 22.—Young Shugrue of Jersey City will meet Kid Lewis of England to-night in a ten round bout at Madison Square Garden. This is the second meeting of the pair, Lewis having gained a decision over the Jersey man in a twenty-round scrap in Australia. The match scheduled for to-night was arranged by Matchmaker Jimmy Johnston immediately after the recent Shrugue-Welsh affair in which Shugrue was given a newspaper decision over the champion.

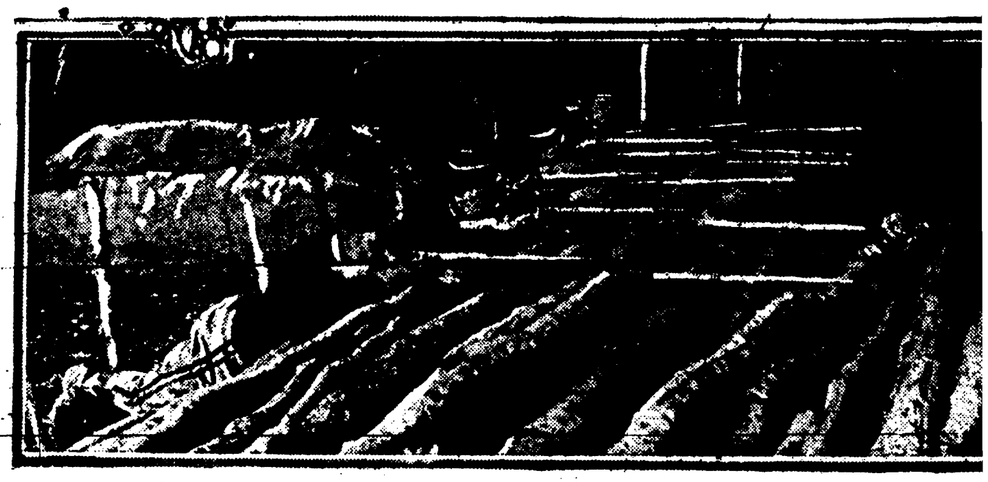
Utica Girl Follows Mother's Example in Not Changing Name



(Utica Herald Dispatch)

Miss Florence May Heath became the bride of Reginald Ivan Heath at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Heath, 506 Genesee street, yesterday. The officiating clergyman was the Rev. Ralph W. Brokaw, D. D., and there was no attending couple. The groom's home is Watton-Under-Edge, England, where Mr. and Mrs. Heath will live. Mr. Heath is engaged in the banking business in that place. An interesting fact relative to the wedding is that, in addition to marrying a man by the name of Heath, the bride's mother's name was Julia Heath before she was married. Miss Heath has many friends in this city, who will wish her happiness in her new home.

the clocks in my valise to muffle them and went to bed. It looked to me just as I was dropping off into slumber as if I had been pocketed by the Austro-Hungarian war department. Here I was in a small town, a hundred miles from the front and no way to get there except by army trains and the Polish woman rapped at my door to tell me it was 7 o'clock in the morning. At breakfast time in the big room I found that my status was absolutely military. I received instructions that I was to go to the headquarters town at 9 o'clock. I took the long ride over the hills in a coach in a wintery sunshine. I met Colonel Von Hoen, who has entire charge of all the field forces of correspondents and he had a pass ready for me. In German it is known as a "legitimation." It bears my photograph and my autograph and a careful description of my personal appearance.

"Tomorrow," Col. Hoen told me, "You are to be started for the front, but first you will be received by General Count von Hertzendorf, the chief of staff."

This was far more than an American or any other correspondent could have expected in the way of Austrian courtesy. The Archduke Frederich is the commander in chief of the entire Austro-Hungarian army and General von Hertzendorf is next in command as chief of staff. The next day Col. von Hoen escorted several correspondents including myself to the field headquarters and we were shown into a room which was entered shortly by a grey-haired quiet appearing gentleman of slender stature who greeted us with as much ease as if the occasion were a reception instead of an incident in the world's supreme war. He spoke to a German correspondent in German, to an Italian in Italian, to a Swiss in French and I do not know how many other tongues he commands. There was not even crepe on his arms for the son who was recently killed in battle. Another of his sons had just been wounded. He asked me about my country and its feelings toward Austria and I told him that what the United States wanted was the truth.

"We want you to have the truth," he replied. Then he told us—there were six of us—that we must be very careful of our health when we went to the front and carefully regard all the regulations and precautions that the doctors would impose on us. Then he went back to his maps and his duties of directing millions of men on his million mile chess board we went back over the hills to up.

DRYS LOST BY ONLY 8 VOTES

The Hobson Resolution Was Defeated in the House by Small Vote

Washington, Dec. 23.—The Hobson resolution to submit a constitutional amendment for national prohibition to the State Legislatures was defeated in the House last night, 197 members voting for and 189 against it. An affirmative vote of two-thirds was required to adopt the resolution.

Washington, Dec. 23.—The heaviest artillery that both the "wets" and the "drys" could unlimber was set and the gunners were at their posts for what was expected to be the biggest prohibition fight ever waged in the House of Rrepresentatives when that body met at 10 a. m. yesterday, two hours in advance of the regular time.

The galleries were thronged and the crowds with difficulty restrained their cheers as the champions and opponents of the Hobson resolution hurled forth their oratorical projectiles.

The resolution proposes an amendment to the federal constitution prohibiting the manufacture, exportation or importation for sale of intoxicating liquors.

Majority Leader Underwood Minority Leader Mann and Representatives Dupre of the judiciary committee and Henry of the rules' committee, each had an hour of time in the debate from the opposition side. Representative Richmond Pearson Hobson, author of the prohibition amendment, had the disposal of all the time allotted to the supporters of the amendment.

A two-thirds vote is required to adopt the resolution. Both sides were confident of victory at the opening of the battle to-day, but the impression among close observers of the situation was that the Hobson forces would be unable to muster the votes.

The initial move was to take up the resolution.

UNCLE SAM TAKES UP MUCH SPACE AT EXPOS.

San Francisco, Dec. 22.—With the insurance of a permit for 66,000 square feet of exhibit space in the Palace of Liberal Arts, negotiations for the United States government display at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition have just been completed here. This is the largest amount of exhibit space to be occupied by any governmental exhibit this or any other previous universal exposition.

The display will include exhibits of naval and military education, practice of military and naval medicine, office of Indian affairs, departments of Commerce and Labor, land department, which has the administration of all the public parks, reservations and other public lands; Federal department of Health, Reclamation Service, Government Printing office, census bureau, American Red Cross, Isthmian Canal commission and numerous others.

In additions to the displays in the Palace of Liberal Arts, the Federal government will be represented by exhibits in the Palace of Mines and Metallurgy, the Palace of Social Economy and Education, and elsewhere in the exposition.

Extreme Suffering Relieved.

Mr. C. T. Chamberlain, New Durham, N. H., writes: "I am a farmer by occupation and have worked very hard. In 1905, I was taken with inflammation of the bladder. I suffered for a few weeks and grew worse. The best doctors gave me no permanent relief. I was so discouraged that I thought I never would get well. About this time I met a man who had been greatly benefited by Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. I dropped my doctor's medicine and began taking it. I have taken over three bottles. I obtained relief soon after I began its use. It has also greatly helped my rheumatism with which I was troubled for years." Write Dr. David Kennedy Co., Rondout, N. Y., for a free sample. WOULD KILL CARRANZA

Washington, Dec. 23.— The trip of General Carranza from Vera Cruz to the Ithmus of Tehuantepec was interrupted by Zapata forces, who captured Soledad and from there sent a wild locomotive into his approaching train. Neither Carranza nor any of his party was injured.

These facts were reported to-night in a private dispatch from a point on the railroad on which Carranza was travelling.

Carranza, according to the private dispatch, returned to Vera Cruz after the incident at Soledad and has now gone to Cordoba to inspect his troops.

CHAMPION HIT AND RUN MAN

Benny Kauff, Diminutive Base Stealer and Clouter of the Gilmore Circuit. Other Dope

New York, Dec. 23.—Little Benny Kauff, dimiuutive in size but great in power and ability, stood out among the batters and base-runners in the Federal League last year even brighter than the famous Tyrus has appeared in American league surroundings for the past several seasons.

Kauff was the king bee in the Gilmore circuit with a vengeance. Not only did he show the way with his bludgeon, with which he clubbed out 210 hits, twenty-seven more than his nearest competitor, but he finished way ahead in the stolen base column. He pilfered seventy-five sacks in the 154 games he took part in.

Kauff's hitting was of the real kind, too—long distance stuff. He slammed out forty-five bingles that were good for two sacks each. Two base wallops seemed to be young Mr. Kauff's favorite kind of fruit for in getting triples and doubles several others passed him. Aleck Zwilling, of Joe Tinker's Chifeds who is sometimes known as "Dutch," had a penchant for home runs. The roly-poly outfielder hung up sixteen home runs during the season, which was the league's best record. Bill Kenworthy, of Kansas City, crowded him for the honors by bumping out fifteen.

Kauff showed his class in another division, also. In getting runs he had it on the flock of athletes who make up the Federal league roster. Benny chalked up 118 tallies during the season. Bill McKechnie a teammate of Kauff's and a former Yankee and Pirate, was second and was the only other player in the league who had more than one hundred runs to his credit. McKechnie also finished second in the base-swiping game, getting fifty-two.

Indianapolis probably will let Kauff name his own figures for his salary during the coming season. Several managers in organized ball have been after him after seeing his work in the Fed circuit. McGraw, of the Giants, is declared to be particularly sweet on the youngster.

What Chicago has done, dear old Boston may find possible to do. Having hogged all the championships and titles well-nigh possible Boston looks to be headed for both first and second places in the baseball world in 1915. It is far from being beyond the bounds of probability that the world series conflict will be staged altogether in The Hub.

The two Chicagos pulled the stunt of grabbing off the American and National league championships and therefore all the world series swag some years back. Bostonians are whooping it up just now for an emulation of the trick by their two ball teams. Of course, everyone knows how violently pro-Boston all Bostonians are, but even those persons who are not fortunate to live within the boundaries of this center of culture, football, baseball and rowing, mustadmit that this time the Boston argument is good.

With the old Athletics greatly weakened and nine-tenths of the Washington nine pitching for the Chicago Federals, Boston looks to be the one best net—on paper—for next year, in the American league struggle. As for the season's campaign in the National all the Braves have to do to repeat is to play throughout the summer months just seventy-five per cent. the quality of baseball they played in the closing weeks last year, and they'll canter home with a comfortable margin between them and the runner-up.

Harvard is said to be considering taking on the army for her 1915 football program. Such a game would make the schedule of the army team harder than it was last fall. The report recalls the terrific schedule which both army and navy used to arrange some years back. It has only been recent that the athletic authorities at the West Point and Naval Academies decided against the practice of taking on Harvard, Yale, Princeton or Cornell and Pennsylvania.

Going Into Bankruptcy.

The order to show cause why the Hunter Brothers' Paper Co., should not be thrown into bankruptcy was returnable before Judge Ray in United States Court today. At the office of Morehouse, Mizen & Morehouse, attorneys for the moving creditors, it was said no opposition had developed to the petition and that the case would probably be returned to Referee Wright in a few days.

HUNTER AFFAIRS ABOUT CLOSED

Receivers Discharged and Report Confirmed by Federal Judge Ray at Utica

Syracuse, Dec. 23.—(Special.)—Judge Ray, at Utica yesterday confirmed the report and discharged the receivers of the Battle Island Paper Co. Temporary Receivers Charles N. Bulger and David F. Costello filed a supplementary report with an expenditure of $308 for sulphite plant expenses since November 25th. The amount of property received by the receivers was $2,460215, including $36,706 cash balance in Oswego county property, Canadian lands and a million-dollar claim against the State for barge canal damages. The National Park Bank, New York, and Paul Bayne for certain creditors, opposed the confirmation. Judge Ray made these allowances: Special Master Stone, $300; Appraisers Foley, Stone and Salladin, $500 each and $14 per week for expenses, and Messrs. Bulger and Costello $1,000 each on account. The case was adjourned until January 11th.

F. B. Shepherd Discharged.

Attorney G. N. Burt today filed motion papers and an order of Justice Andrews discharging Frederick B. Shepherd as receiver in the voluntary bankruptcy proceedings of the Battle Island Paper Co. This action was started in the State courts.

The papers show that Mr. Shepherd received $41,881.87; that he turned over to the receivers in the Federal bankruptcy proceedings $36,485.78, and that $5,396.09 was paid out. The bond of Mr. Shepherd for $50,000 was also discharged by order of the court and the receiver was allowed $1,547.05 as his commission and $147.89 as disbursements. His attorney, G. N. Burt, was allowed $1,500 for legal fees and $237.92 for disbursements. The order further says that the services of said receiver and said attorney and their fees and disbursements were necessary to preserve the property of the corporation.

BAD POTATOES FIND A MARKET

Department at Washington Worried by Unscrupulous Dealers in Eggs

Washington, Dec. 23.—Bad eggs are worrying the Department of Agriculture. It has discovered a well orrganized traffic in rotten eggs centering in Chicago. It considers the situation so serious that it has inaugurated a vigorous campaign, aided by state and city authorities in all parts of the country, to break up the traffic and send the promoters to jail.

The common impression that rotten eggs are useful only in demonstration of disapproval is dispelled by the Department in an official statement. It admits that inedible eggs may be utilized "for technical purposes, such as tanning leather." The trouble is, it says, the rotten egg traffickers deceive the public into buying the product for food purposes.

From evidence already gathered, the department states there seems to be a definite market in Chicago for "rots and spots" at $2 a case of 30 dozen. In consequence, rots and spots from all parts of the country are being shipped into Chicago.

The department is going to get quick action in its campaign against the traffic, it states. The delay necessary to secure authorization from Washington to make seizures of unfit shipments has been eliminated through the co-operation of state authorities, who are acting with great promptness. The aid of the state authorities, not only makes immediate seizures possible but facilitates the gathering of evidence for criminal proceedings against the offenders.

"Most of the rots and spots that reach Chicago are first broken and frozen," the department says in its official statement. "They are then sold to bakers for use in cakes and other forms of food. In one instance, at least, a shipment of these eggs was traced to a firm which admitted that they had no use for them except in food.

"As a matter of fact, Federal inspectors have been able to secure ample evidence of the use of unfit eggs for this purpose. With state and federal authorities working together it is believed the traffic can be broken up very rapidly. In this connection it is pointed out that most of the firms using these unfit eggs probably do so reluctantly, believing that the competition of others forces them into the traffic. However, it has been amply demonstrated by the department that the frozen and dried eggs business is a successful and important industry only when based on the use of good eggs, handled under special conditions."

Because of the abundant supply of cotton seed meal that there is likely to be in this country this year, specialists in the Department of Agriculture believe that the farmer has a better opportunity to make money by feeding beef cattle than for some years past.

The department estimates that about 2,000,000 tons of cotton-seed meal will be available this year at prices ranging from $22 to $24 a ton as compared with $27 to $31 demanded last year. Expirements of the Department have proven that the substitution of cotton-seed meal for corn and clover hay results in great saving in the feeding of cattle.

While lilacs, snowballs, and certain other shrubs should be let alone during the winter, being neither trimmed nor covered with straw and manure, other bushes need special attention, says the Department of Agriculture in a bulletin just issued on the winter care of the garden.

"As a rule shrubs should not be trimmed in the fall," says the Department. "This process is timely immediately after the blooming period, and this is in the spring, as in the case of the snowball. If the shrubs bloom in the fall as do some hydrangeas, the rose of Sharon, and some lilacs, they should not be cut directly after blooming but in the spring of the following year."

Hydrangeas in the South can be cared for out-of-doors by protection of straw or brush. In the North they should be taken up, planted in tubs and placed in the cellar. Roses, south of the latitude of Washington, need little attention but North of this line they should be treated by cutting the shrubs off about 30 inches from the ground and protecting them with leaves.

ANNUAL COUNTY ROAD REPORT

Over Nine Hundred Miles of Improved Highways During Past Year

County Superintendent of Highways E. A. Howard, in his annual report to the Board of Supervisors declares that great progress has been made on Oswego county roads during the past year.

Over $109,000 was expended in the townships and over 900 miles of roads improved.

Perhaps the most important part of Mr. Howard's report was a recommendation to change the methods of selecting and removing town superintendents. He suggested an amendment providing that superintendents be elected every four years and they be removed only after trial on charges of the State Highway commission.

The total receipts for the year were $127,192.99 and the expenditures, $109,999.18, leaving a balance on hand of $17,999.16.

WORK OF ART

The Morrill Press has just issued a Peace calendar which is a work of art. The stock is of rich linen tone. A handsome embossed design of "Pax," the patron of peace, is used on the cover page, and black and gold and sienna inks produce a beautiful effect.

The Morrill Press is to be congratulated on so fine a specimen of printing art.

JUDGMENTS IN DEFAULTS

Judge Wilson braved the elements this morning and was down in city court bright and early to listen to arguments in some civil suits.

Two judgments were taken by default against George H. Lamphere; one for $63.74 in favor of Dr. Irwin J. Cusack and the other for $31.75 in favor of the Henderson Thompson Co. Both were in default of notes.

Mrs. C. D. Palmer Entertained.

Mrs. C. D. Palmer, Bairds Corners, entertained on Dec. 19th in honor of Miss Ruth Parker, a number of her friends at a miscellaneous shower.

Miss Parker's marriage to Harvey Dennison of Bowens Corners is announced for Dec. 29th, 1914, at her home at Mt. Pleasant.

A GENTLE HINT TO SANTA
Dear Santa:
I think it would be fine if you would bring us one of those Electric Heating Pads, which the Electric Light Co. are selling for $6.50, for Xmas.
They are made of felt and are flexible so you can fold them up and they will fit any part of of the body. Another thing, they do not cast off like the old-fashioned hot water bottle. These heating pads have three heats—low, medium and high.
Please bring mamma one for Xmas.

TAXICAB SORTIE SAVED FRANCE

Battle of the Marne was Won by Automobiles. Four Hundred Cabs Carried Troops to Front

Paris, Dec. 23.—It is not generally known that the battle of the Marne was won by automobiles. General Gallioni had 400 taxicabs and other light motor cars at his disposal. It will be remembered that Von Kluck with the right of the German army got as far as Champiley. General Gallieni, as military governor of Paris, had a large force, probably half a million men at his disposal and he was responsible for the defence of Paris.

Gallieni figured that he had more men than he really needed and that 70,000 of his men could be spared for work at the front.

Acting entirely upon his own responsibility, he ordered his men to crowd into the automobiles. He made each taxicab carry nine soldiers. It was a curious sight. There were two in each seat, two on the hood, one with the driver and one on each running board.

Within six hours he threw the whole 70,000 against the flank of the Germans at Neaux, about 35 miles from Paris. Von Kluck evidently had not reckoned with such a sortie. He was forced to stop and give battle. The French, retiring on his front reformed and gave battle. The result was the retreat of the Germans from Marne to the Aisne after the sanguinary battle named from the first river.

This is only one of the great exploits of the French army automobile transport service. No other nation, in this war has used the motor car with the effectiveness of the French. The automobile transport service is organized as a separate branch. Working with amazing rapidity just after the beginning of the war, the French army officers drafted into the corps men who had been employed in automobile manufacture—foremen, skilled workmen, testers and drivers. The officers were drawn from the manufacturers, agents and other heads of automobile organizations. The heaviest trucks are used for ammunition carriers and lighter commercial vehicles for the food supply. General Mongin commands the whole corps.

Some noted French race drivers are now in the army service. Boillot alternates with the Marquis D'Albufera in driving General Joffre's car. Several machines are kept ready day and night for General Joffre and it is no unusual thing for him to enter one of them and drive the whole length of the battle front in the course of the night.

There are now 15,000 automobiles and 12,000 trucks in the service of the French army.

One of the automobile service corps' biggest feats was the transfer of the British army from Braisne between Soisne and Rheims, to St. Omar a distance of 170 miles. The 200,000 men were transported to their new positions within three days.

Fresh German Troops Arrive

(Special to the Times)

Rotterdam, Dec. 23.—New German guns just turned out at the Krupp factory and fresh troops are being rushed into Belgium. The youth of the new troops shows that Germany is already drawing on her boys to fill her depleted ranks.

Seventeen thousand soldiers have reached Heyst, near the Dutch frontier. This is one of the points of the line upon which the Germans will fall back if they find they cannot withstand the offensive of the allies in Flanders.

Most of the soldiers arriving at Heyst are between 17 and 18.

Some of the new guns are being mounted there but others are being sent to the Flanders front. No civilians are allowed to enter—or leave Heyst under penalty of death.

AUTO LEAPS EMBANKMENT

New York, Dec 23.—One man was instantly killed and another probably fatally injured when their automobile plunged over a 30-foot embankment on Union turnpike, Jamaica, early today. Johns of Jamaica was killed and his body burned when the car overturned and caught fire. Hamilton B. Pearsall, owner of the car, crawled out of the blazing wreckage.

MELBOURNE INMAN IS WORLD'S CHAMPION AT ENGLISH BILLIARDS.

The English do many things differently and playing billiards is one of them. They play the game on a big table with small pockets, and when you pocket the cue ball it is a point instead of a scratch. Melbourne Inman is the champion at this back action game. He is trying to teach it to Willie Hoppe, who is returning the favor by giving him lessons in the balk line game. The returns indicate that Hoppe is learning faster than Inman, and some day the American may be able to defeat the Britisher.

Alfred Henry Lewis, Able Writer Dead

New York, Dec. 23.—Alfred Henry Lewis, novelist, and one of the most able newspaper writers in America, died to-day in his 5th year. He had been ill for three months with bronchitis and asthma, but was thought to be recovering until a few days ago when intestinal complications developed. A relapse followed and from that time Mr. Lewis began to sink.

Mr. Lewis wielded a trenchant pen as a political writer. He gained a deep knowledge of political conditions in Washington while serving as a correspondent for various newspapers.

He was born at Cleveland, O. He was unmarried and is survived only by two brothers who own a New York publication.

Mr. Lewis wrote for several years under the name of "Dan Quin." In 1900 three of his works appeared. These were Wolfville, Episodes of Cowboy Life and Sand Burrs. Two years later he wrote Wolfville Days and Wolfville Nights and a number of other books followed, including Peggy O'Neal, The Sunset Trail and the Story of Paul Jones.

BLOODHOUNDS ON TRAIL

New Rochelle, Dec. 23.—Bloodhounds were put on the trail to-day of the bandits who last night killed Charles Seacord, a wealthy farmer, as he drove his team along the Mill road in the town of Eastchester. His body was found at the side of the road close to the New Rochelle trolley line, with a bullet wound through the heart.

WOUNDED FRENCH

Paris, Dec. 23.—Almost half a million soldiers were treated in French hospitals between September 15 and November 30. The figures were submitted to the Army committee of the Chamber of Deputies by the chairman of the committee, M. Trousaaint, who gave the precise number as 489,733. Of this total 2.48 per cent died.

OLD ELI'S SONS TROD THE BOARDS TO ALBANY

Daring Aerial Attack Midst Heighth of Fog; Airman Dropped a Bomb; No Damage Done

Special to The Evening Times

London, Dec. 24.—A German aeroplane made a sky raid over Dover today and dropped a bomb.

Official announcement of the aerial attack was made by the government press bureau.

This was the first time that the British government has officially admitted an aerial raid over English territory, but itt was reported some time ago that a Taube German machine had flown over Dover.

The official statement follows:

One of the enemy's aeroplanes flew over Doyer this morning and dropped a bomb but no damage was done.

"A British aeroplane ascended as soon as the presence of the German machine became known, but the English aviator did not catch sight of the hostile machine. The weather was very foggy and cloudy

"The German aeroplane was seen over Dover by persons in the city at 10.50 o'clock. It dropped a bomb which exploded in a garden. The aeroplane was seen for only a few seconds when it disappeared in the fog, sailing toward the North Sea."

It is presumed here that the German aeroplanes came from Belgium, having flown over part of the North Sea and the Straits of Dover.

Dover is 70 miles from Ostend, the point from which the daring German aviator probably started. The round trip would entail a nonstop journey of 140 miles.

This is the second German attack against England within a fortnight the bombardment of Scarborough and Hartlepool having been made on the 16th.

Dover, Eng.—Consternation was caused here today by a German air man who flew over Dover and dropped a bomb. The bomb exploded 400 yards from the capital. Windows were broken but no one injured.

ALLIES TO HURL GERMAN FORCES BACK

Paris, Dec. 24.—It is learned from an authoritative source that Field Marshal Sir John French, commander of the British expeditionary force in France and Belgium and Gen. Joseph Joffre, commander-in-chief of the French army, are gathering their forces and are moving troops and artillery for two terrific blows which will be administered against the Germans at both ends of the 300-mile battle front, probably in January. The French government recently received from the government arms work a heavy consignment of new guns fully as effective as the 42-centimeter guns of the Germans, which are being rushed to West Flanders and to the battlefield east of th Meuse.

The offensive of the allies, which actually began more than a fortnight ago is expected to reach the climax of its effective pressure within the next three weeks. The object of this double drive will be two fold as follows:

1. To drive the Germans from Belgium; 2. To hurl back the German forces operating in Alsace-Lorraine to the Rhine line of defenses.

Official dispatches from the front announce further small gains north of Dixmude near Arras, on the Ainsne and particularly in the district lying between the Argonne forest and the Meuse.

Hundreds of French officers and privates arrived in Paris today from the front on a short Christmas furlough, for it is expected that there will be but little fighting tomorrow, Christmas day.

A Furnes' telegram says that the Germans are building a great aerial depot at Heyst, in northern Belgium, which may be used as the base for the proposed Zeppelin raid against England.

The German forces occupying Belgium are levying war taxes on everything possible. A bachelor tax has now been imposed on all unmarried men.

The beautiful coast city of Nieuport in Belgium which has been under artillery fire from German guns since the Franco-Belgian army occupied it is in ruins, says a St. Omer dispatch.

GEN. AUGUST MACKENSEN 65, AWARDED IRON CROSS

Berlin, via Amsterdam, Dec. 24.—General August von Mackensen has been promoted to Oberst-general for his successes in Poland against the Russians. The Iron Cross of the first class has been conferred upon him. Gen. Mackensen is 65 years old.

The Tageblatt today published an interview with Gen. Conrad von Hoetzendorf, chief of the Austrian general staff in which he states that the result of the war will be determined in the eastern theater. Berlin military experts disagree with him, asserting that the campaign against France and England in the west will determine the result.

Gen. Von Hoetzendorf denies that Austria has taken special military measures against Italy, but states that it is necessary to make preparations to defend all the frontier of his country.

WE WISH YOU JOY

Joy in the Christmas tide, joy in the silent peace of winter, when you sit down alone with Memory to count the blessings of the year; joy in the warm fire-side, in books of golden thoughts, in friendship tried and true. May your faith be strong and your courage high, to meet the winter days; and may the memory of the fall harvest be in you as a benediction upon the rounded year.

FRENCH WARSHIP TORPEDO

Vienna—An Austrian submarine torpedoed a French warship in the Gulf of Otrampo today but the vessel did not sink. Austrian shore batteries near Cattaro sunk a submarine attacked by the allies' fleet in the Adriatic.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Rome, Dec. 24.—At the Austrian embassy denial is made of reports that Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria is dying. The Vatican denies that a death bed blessing has been sent.

A persistent rumor to the effect that the aged Austrian Emperor was dying was circulated here last night.

Rotterdam Dec. 24.—Emperor William will spend Christmas on the battle front, among his troops in West Flanders. Traveling in a special armored train bearing high angle guns to repel any attacks by hostile aeroplanes, the Kaiser and his suite has passed into Belgium from Cologne.

Dispatches from Sluis say that the German soldiers in Belgium have made preparations to pass Christmas according to the spirit of the day and it is expected that there will be a complete lull in hostilities. At some points the German soldiers have erected Christmas tress in the trenches on the firing line.

It is reported from Cologne that three 42-centimeter guns have arrived there from the Krupp works at Essen. It is expected that they will be sent to Poland.

Paris, Dec. 24.—Gabriel Hanotaux, former foreign minister, expresses in the Figaro what appears to be the prevailing view in France concerning the proposal that Japan send an army to the battlefields of Europe. M. Hanotaux says that even though Japan should send no more than 250,000 men, she could always consider, in the event of a victory for the allies, that she had played an important part in ending the war.

Although M. Hanotaux makes no allusion to the United States, it may be stated that the American viewpoint has been taken into consideration by the Government.

Dover, Eng., Dec. 24.—Hundreds of British officers and privates arrived here today on transports from France to spend Christmas at home in England. Short furloughs have been granted over the Christmas season and the British railways have agreed to carry all soldiers to their homes free of charge. The Prince of Wales has arrived from France and will spend Christmas with King George and Queen Mary at Sandringham.

Stockholm, Dec. 24.—The Swedish government has decided to extend its moratorium on foreign debts until March 1, it was announced today.

Lisbon Dec. 24.—Official dispatches from Angola state that the second German expeditionary force which has invaded Portuguese West Africa consisted of 1,000 men with artillery. Fighting is still in progress there, it is said.

RESTORATION OF PEACE.

Washington, Dec. 24.—Administration officials today gave much of their attention to the situation in Mexico City and turned temporarily from the border at Naco.

They had no official confirmation of reports that Provisional President Gutierrez had left the capital because of the clash between his followers and those of Zapata. But they exhibited some concern about this new complication, said to have arisen in the affairs of the troubled republic and efforts were made to verify the dispatches which came through Constitutionalists scouees at the border.

There were no developments in the boundary situation to shake the optimism of officials as to the outcome there and all official advices seemed to give assurances that peace will result from the conferences between Major General Scott and the warring Mexican chiefs.

Washington, Dec. 24.—Gen. H. L. Scott at Naco, Ariz., today wired Secretary of War Garrison that negotiations of the warring section are progressing favorably. Secretary Garrison would not give out the text of the message, but expressed the opinion that it indicated at an early restoration of peace along the border. Gen. Scott said that his talk with Gen. Hill was satisfactory and he had arranged today to confer with Maytorena on the border line a few miles from Naco.

Secretary Garrison said that following this conference he would make a detailed report of what he has accomplished toward securing peace.

HEFFRON-LUKE GUILTY.

Syracuse, Dec. 24.—William E. Heffron and G. W. Luke two wealthy men were found guilty in Federal court at Auburn today for using the U. S. mails to defraud. The men have been on trial for six weeks. Much sensational testimony was brought out. Both were sentenced to one year and three months and to pay $1,000 fine.

A MARRIAGE LICENSE.

A marriage license has been issued by City Clerk Scudder to Uriah Lewis of North 5th st. and Miss Emma Delore of South 2d st. The wedding occurred yesterday.

Teuton Objective Point Warsaw, Say Russians

Official Dispatches From Warsaw and Salicia Assert Sledge Hammer Drives of the Austro-Germans

Special to The Evening Times

Petrograd, Dec. 24.—Official dispatches from Warsaw and Galicia assert that the sledge hammer drives of the Austro-German forces on the 200-mile battle front from Blow, 34 miles southeast of Plock, near the Vistula river, to the Dunajee river have at no point pierced the Russian lines.

Operations around Cracow are progressing according to the plans of the Russian general staff, it is said, and reinforcements are being moved into vast numbers toward Korezyn (Nevo Niasto), near the junction of the Nida and Vistula rivers to meet the heavier pressure of Field Marshal Von Hindenburg's forces in that vicinity.

Siege operations at Cracow are meeting with greater resistance than at any previous time, but Grand Duke Nicholas is sanguine that the arrival of reinforcements and fresh artillery south of the Vistula will force a retirement of the Austro-German forces.

From the German operations in Poland and Galicia it is evident that the chief objective of Field Marshal Von Hindenburg is the capture of Warsaw.

Successes over the Teutonic allies are reported from Mlawa, from the Nida Valley, from the Dunajee, from the district east of Lodz and south of Lowicz (between the Bzura and Pilica rivers), from the region of Skierniewise and from the northern elopes of the Carpathians.

The Russian front reports that several good German prisoners have been taken in the fighting on Tuesday and Wednesday, among them about sixty officers.

General Dakl's Austrian army in the Nida Valley has lost heavily

FIVE TRAPPED; GOTHAM BLAZE

New York Tenement Blaze Suffocates Five Occupants Early To-Day

New York, Dec. 24.—Trapped on the top floor of the tenement at 316 West Forty-ninth street by a fire which shot rapidly through the building, five persons were suffocated to death by smoke today.

The dead are, Frank Corso, aged 21, a clerk; Charles Corso, aged 18; Harry Corso, Mrs. Mary Corso and Grace Amedale.

There were 20 families sleeping in the tenement about 100 persons in all. The most of them were carried down the single narrow fire escape by extension ladders.

The fire started in the basement and spread rapidly; cutting off the stairways. Soon the upper windows of the five-story building, fitted with the heads of panic stricken men and women. Some fled in their night clothing to the roof.

Arthur Corso, a brother of Frank, Charles and Harry, is night telephone operator at the Polyclinic hospital and was on duty at the time of the fire. He took the call for an ambulance at his own home, but remained on duty until he heard that the members of the family were among the victims.

ittle Grace Amedale, aged 8, had come from Brooklyn yesterday to visit her aunt, Mrs. Corso and to buy Christmas gifts.

RUSSIANS CHECKED.

Berlin, Dec. 24.—Desperate fighting is in progress at several points on the Prussian frontier, it is officially announced today.

A Vienna dispatch states that the Austro-German forces at Cracow have been successful at keeping back the Russians and that all danger of Russian invasion of Galicia is at an end.

A favorable situation for the Teuton allies has developed at Cracow, says the Vienna dispatch.

BUSINESS QUIET.

Business among the city official departments have been very quiet this week, due to the holiday season.

SWEPT UNDER SNOW PLOW

William H. Dewey of South First St. Discovered Under Trolley Plow

William H. Dewey, of 764 S. 1st st. narrowly escaped death at a late hour last night when he was run down by a large snow plow of the Empire United Railways, near the intersection of First and Fourth sts. The man was proceeding homeward in the blinding storm and did not discover the approaching plow. He was knocked down and swept underneath and dragged for many feet before discovered by a boy on the sidewalk who shouted to the motorman. The boy probably saved Dewey from being ground to pieces, as the snow was rapidly forcing his body near the wheels. He was extricated from his perilous position with great difficulty.

The injured man was assisted to his home where he is under the care of a physician. His body is badly bruised and he was badly shaken up.

The name of the boy who saved Dewey's life is unknown. The youngster was returning home after attending the theatre and when the plow appeared he watched it heave up the huge drifts of snow and to his amazement discovered the man being tossed about. He shouted and waved his arms thus attracting the crew's attention and the plow was brought to an immediate standstill. The accident occurred about 12 o'clock.

Dr. E. M. Anderson, Mr. Dewey's attending physician, said that his injuries are quite serious due to his advanced age. The injured man is 79 years old.

The snow plow hurled him several feet before it ran him down. The accident early instead of late in the evening.

An action was started against the trolley company today for 5,000 through Attorneys John F. Cullen and H. S. Silman. Papers were served this morning in Syracuse. It is said that the approaching plow was without a headlight and no signal of approach was sounded.

OPINIONS

Doleful.

Government experts are raising a warning that meat will become a rarity in this country if the war continues a year or more, as it is expected to, and the cost may go to 50 cents a pound. Also, shoes are to increase in price and may reach $10 a pair. We are being called upon to furnish so many shoes to fighting nations that the stock of leather is being exhausted rapidly and the price is increasing.

Perhaps after all it would have been a good thing to have bought a few pairs of shoes for Christmas instead of spending it on fog-effect waists and celluloid boxes of trinkets.—Utica Press.

Goethals Coming Up.

Governor Goethals of the Panama Canal Zone is on his way to Washington. It has been the annual custom of the canal builder to visit Washington and answer questions that might be put by Congress concerning the work on the isthmus so that full knowledge might be had concerning the needs. The trip has been deferred this year because of serious slides in the canal which demanded the attention of Governor Goethals in person.

Attention has recently been directed toward the canal through the request made by Governor Goethals that he be furnished either cruisers or destroyers to guard the neutrality of the isthmian waters. It appears that foreign ships have been transferring coal and supplies within these waters, and that their radio, or wireless apparatus, has been used to transmit information that was in fact a violation of neutrality. A great deal of unnecessary noise was made over this incident, which appeared to be natural enough and entirely innocent. Those who always stand ready to discover suspicious circumstances in any movement by the government were on the jump in a minute, and all sorts of extravagant statements have been made. In the first place, it was one of those ordinary and meaningless movements that ought not have been given a second thought, and the disclosure of the request made by Governor Goethals was a silly and short-sighted thing on the part of some of the government departments. There was no significance whatever to the request. It amounted to about as much as if the governor had asked for another dredge, or had made a requisition for a cargo of supplies.

In the meantime, the British authorities have assured the United States Government that greater care will be taken by their vessels and colliers, and that there will be no further violations of the waters of the canal zone. It was pointed out that there was no intention whatever on the part of these vessels to violate the order of President Wilson, but that it may have done unwittingly in some instances by those who were not aware of the order.

And so the tempest in this particular teapot his simmered down very quietly and our fleet is not to be called upon to assemble at Colon on the Atlantic side, or at Panama on the Pacific side, and engage in a battle with the imaginary squadrons of the hysterical. Congressmen Gardner and Hobson may still sleep in safety in Washington, and their friends and allies, the yellow newspapers, must hunt around for the next "big thing" to be broken open.—Utica Observer.

PEAC ON EARTH

Good will, peace on earth" is the message the Christ Child brought humanity. In the walks of the big and busy places no life is too busy to catch at least the echo of the still small voice. Perhaps the opportunity of at least living in an age and a land when and where the glory of the big peace spirit is recognized is our great blessing.

When on Christmas the voices of the children ring on in the quaint old Christmas carols may we remember that, as in honor to the Christ Child, the children in our present midst.

May the memory last us through the year and aid us when the playgrounds and welfare station in our city call upon us for their sustenance.

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these ye have done it unto me."

HUGHES FOR PRESIDENT.

The best argument in support of Justice Hughes for President is that he would make a stronger run than any other man whom the Republicans could nominate. The main argument for Hughes, then, is expediency.

If Hughes is big enough to be President, and there is no doubt about that, his place is on the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States. He can serve his country there as well as he can in the President's chair, and perhaps better. He fits well in the Supreme Court. Possibly no one as suitable could be found to take his place.

If Republicans do not like Wilson, why isn't it playing the game more safe to keep Hughes where he is as a balance wheel instead of taking a gambler's chance at electing him. And if that chance is taken and Hughes loses, as he undoubtedly would his able service as a Supreme Court Justice would be lost to the country. The Republican managers are welcome to this suggestion.

Moreover, there is something distasteful to the average man about a Justice of the United States Supreme Court entering the field of politics People do not like to think of men in this great court harboring an ambition for a political office, or of a precedent which will encourage as tempt them to harbor such ambitions.

When a man is appointed to the Supreme Court he is given the job for life. He is not subject to the recall. He is removed from politics. There is no temptation to render a decision for the sake of political advantage, a thing which would surely happen sometime, if the Supreme Court were made a stepping stone to political office.

There is great respect for a Supreme Court Justice, probably more than for any other position in the country. When a man is named to this bench, men forget whether he is a Republican or a Democrat. They expect that he will forget it also. Usually he does. That ideal condition must be maintained.—Utica Observer.

the custom when the State took a census to close the thing up too quickly.

Mr. Hugo, by virtue of his office, will be director of the census for the State but he will have authority to engage such assistants as he may find necessary to carry the work through.

This generous patronage meal is said to have been almost unthought of by the politicians and not until Mr. Hugo commenced looking over the duties that would devolve upon him, did he realize that the State census falls next year. The Republicans will find in it full satisfaction in the fact that they worked as hard as they did to carry the election, and the Democrats will be somewhat chagrined because they didn't work harder and thus hold the patronage within their party.—Knickerbocker Press.

GREAT WORK ACCOMPLISHED

Public School Children Were Instrumental in Making Christmas Baskets a Success

Ensign Albert Fitzgerald of the local corps of the Salvation Army wishes to extend his thanks to the public and parochial school children of this city for their great assistance towards making the Christmas basket donations a success. Without their aid it could not have been brought about as the finances were $75 behind this year. It is believed that the weather conditions had a good deal to do with the small donations placed in the kettle in the down town district. Tonight is the last night for the kettle and it is hoped that the public will liberally respond.

Last year 87 baskets were distributed and it is believed that it will equal that number this year. The work of handing out the baskets started at noon to-day. A sleigh is used in carrying them to the sick and infirm.

On New Year's Eve the Christmas tree festival will be held for the Sunday school and the poor children of the city.

All donations of candies, cake, fruit, toys, mittens and stockings would be highly appreciated by Ensign Fitzgerald. You can notify him on the phone and he will call at your residence or place of business.

Christmas Exercises Tomorrow.

The Presbyterian Sunday school Christmas exercises were postponed until tomorrow evening at 7:30 o'clock and the program follows:

Song, School No. 64; Prayer, Dr. Robertson; Song "Christ Was Once a Little Baby", Primary Department; Recitation, Hilda Morgan; Song, Chorus; Duet, Sophie Ducret and Germaine Michaud; Recitation, Robert Jennings; Exercise "Christmas Popcorn" Beginners; Song, School No. 78; Recitation, "My Christmas Dolly" Mary Elizabeth Wilcox; Song "What Do Little Children Bring", Older Primaries; Recitation, Joseph Bennett; The Heart of Christmas, by Cradle Roll; Santa Claus.

SUCCEEDS SHERIFF BUCK.

H. D. Harris is Supervisor from Mexico—Mr. Schulz Will Resign.

(Oswego Times.)

The whirling of politics will result in several changes in the Board of Supervisors next year.

Henry D. Harris of Mexico occupied his seat as supervisor from that town at the meeting this morning, having been elected by the town board yesterday, to succeed Sheriff-elect W. L. Buck.

C. D. Soule of Cleveland will succeed W. M. Gallagher as supervisor from Constantia. The town board will elect Mr. Soule on December 28 and he will take office January 1. Mr. Gallagher succeeds H. D. Coville as county attorney.

Richard W. Schulz, supervisor from the Seventh ward, who has been named under sheriff, will resign as supervisor before January 1. His successor must be chosen at an election, but when this will be held has not been decided. No doubt a special election will be called shortly after January 1. Lawrence Heilig is being urged by his friends to accept the Republican nomination.

CITY COURT ACTIONS.

Adolphus Pelow has instituted an action in city court against William Sylvester for breach of contract. The amount involved is $175 for labor and services. The plaintiff cleared up a patch of muckland for Sylvester.

Attorney Fred G. Spencer represents the defendant and James R. Somers the plaintiff. The case will be tried on January 12th.

An action was started in city court today by Henry Pelow against Theodore Wilson, the taxicab man for $50 damages. It is alleged that his car collided with the plaintiff's car last month in the town of Granby. The case was adjourned until January 12. Attorney Fred S. Spencer represents the plaintiff.

Sailings.

CONDUCT SERVICES; CLEVELAND CHURCH.

Mr. Cedric C. Bentley, student in the General Theological Seminary, New York city, and lay assistant at Christ church, Rye, N. Y. is home for the holiday season. On Friday of this week Mr. Bentley will conduct the Christmas service in St. James' church at Cleveland in this county, and the following Sunday at 11 a. m., in the same church, will assistt the bishop of this diocese, the Rt. Rev. Charles T. Olmsted, D. C. L., who is to be the celebrant at the Christmas corporate communion of the Cleveland and Constantia parishes.

Program of Music.

Christmas morning the masses at the Church of the Immaculate Conception will be celebrated at 6, 8 and 10:30, the first and last being high masses, and the 8 o'clock service a low mass. In the training of the children, who will sing at the first mass, the organist has been ably assisted by the good sisters, who seem to have inspired them with the true spirit of the occasion and whose untiring efforts will contribute much to the success of this event. The service will open and close with a Christmas carol, and at the offertory the Adeste Fideles will be sung.

The following is the program for the mass at 10.30, which will be rendered by the regular choir:

Adeste Fideles (Novello).

Kyrie in C (V. Hammerel).

Gloria (LeHache).

Offertory, "Ave Maria," trio for soprano, alto and tenor (A. Gwen).

Sanctus (Rosewig).

Benedictus and Agnus Dei (V. Hammerel).

Organ march, "Triumphal," by M. Costa, from the "Modern Organist," arr. by H. R. Shelley.

Evening Service 7:30

Organ, "The Virgin's Prayer," (Massanet).

Vespers No. 2 in C, by Rosewig, consisting of Domine, Dixit Dominus, Confitebor, Beatus Vir, Laudate Pueri Dominum and Laudate Dominum.

Christmas hymn, "Adeste Fideles" (Novello).

Magnificat (Tedesco).

Alma Redemptoris Mater (A. Werner).

O. Salutaris, bass solo, composed by F. Kenyon for the occasion.

Tantum Ergo in F. (Rossi).

Organ, "Festal March in D," (H. Smart).

Soloists: Soprano—Miss Frances LaLonde and Miss Florence Talbot; alto—Miss Nellie Parker and Miss Victoris Beauchamp; tenor—A. E. Kraus and Lawrence Ranger; bass—John Timothy and Frank Massaro; organist—Prof. F. Kenyon.

FATHER LOWERY DEAD.

Troy, N. Y., Dec. 24.—Funeral services for Rev. John F. Lowery, LL. D., late pastor of St. Mary's church, Oswego will be held here Saturday. Interment will be at Utica. Although following a lingering illness, Dr. Lowery's death Tuesday night was unexpected.

Fulton Coal Company Incorporated.

Albany, Dec. 24.—The Hart Coal Corporation of Fulton has been chartered with the Secretary of State, with a capital of $15,000, consisting of shares of $100 each. The directors for the first year are as follows: Edwin E. Hart, Clarence W. Streeter and Glenn J. Streeter of Fulton.

Pro. Leaders Disappointed.

Washington, Dec. 23.—Prohibitionist leaders, while disappointed by the vote in the House on the Hobson resolution, were not discouraged today. They took comfort in the fact that a majority of the members voted for the measure, but they were much chagrined that they were 21 votes short of obtaining a majority of the whole membership of the House. They had planned to base a new campaign on such a showing.

Had the amendment been in the form of a bill resolution proposing new legislation it would have passed, as the prohibitionists had a majority of eight votes on the decisive roll call. They polled 197 votes to 189 by the opposition. But a two-thirds majority was required to carry the constitutional amendment.

The fight in the Senate for a similar amendment may be dropped for the present as a result of the House action.

Driven Out In Cold.

New York, Dec. 24.—More than 100 families were driven out into the cold and many persons overcome by smoke yesterday when a waist factory took fire in the heart of the tenement district at 107 and 109 South first st., Williamsburg. Police and firemen work with energy to save the suffering. The loss was $25,000.

BADLY INJURED.

Mrs. Nellie Quinn, of N. 3d st., is seriously ill at her home the result of a bad fall which she received on December 14th, in front of the old Marsh homestead in Oneida st. An action will be started through her attorney, John F. Cullen. Dr. E. J. Cusack is attending her and she is said to be suffering from internal injuries.

CONSIDERING FRANK APPEAL

Washington—Justice Lamar of the United States Supreme Court today heard the application of Attorney Lewis Marshall for an appeal from the order of Federal Judge Newman of Atlanta denying the petition of Leo M. Frank convicted of the murder of Mary Phagan for a writ of habeous corpus. The certificate of appeal by Frank's lawyers from Judge Newman's decision in the United States Supreme Court was refused at the same time the writ was denied.

Attorney Marshall's argument upon which hangs the fate of Frank was delivered to the Justice at the latter's home. It is anticipated that Justice amar will either grant or deny the appeal in public.

MAY PROVE CLAIMS.

Judge Ray, of the United States Court, has granted an order permitting the proving of claims of Lora Allen, of Sterling Valley, $600, against the Hunter Arms Company, and the Base Ball Magazine Co. of New York, $300, subject to review before the court. The payment of the fifteen per cent. dividend recently declared is also ordered paid to these two creditors amounting to $90 and $48.

FIVE KILLED.

Tucson, Ariz. Dec. 24.—Five persons are already known to be dead, but it is expected the list will grow larger as the result of the worst storm that has ever visited Arizona.

The property damage as far as known will aggregate $2,000,000. Hundreds of persons are marooned on the tops of houses, barns and windmills. Detachments of militia are on the scene.

FROM THE MINE TO THE MINERS

Minneapolis Scout Signed Up a Recruit Down Among the Diamond Dust

New York, Dec. 24.—Mike Kahoe, scout for the Washington and Minneapolis clubs went down into a coal mine recently to get the signature of a catcher who will get a trial with the Minneapolis club in the American Association next season.

"His name is Tom Wilson"- said Kahoe. "I was told to go to Hartford, Neb. where he lived. When I got to Hartford I found it a town of about 200. In the outskirts was a coal mine. Inquiry developed the fact that Wilson was at work in the mine. I decided to wait until he came out in the evening to sign him up, but I suddenly changed my mind following a conversation with one of the armed guards near the mine.

"There's going to be trouble around here pretty soon, Mister," said the guard. The regular miners are liable to come in on any train and the troops are on the way. Kinda think there's going to be some shootin' hereabouts."

"That was enough for be" continued Kahoe. "I just made for the mouth of that mine shaft and demanded to be taken down. The guards around there were going to 'frisk' me, but they didn't because I presented cards and letters that wore convincing proof that I wasn't a spy.

"Well, after going down and down for about 82 miles, the bucket that I was riding in reached the bottom. It was led for three or four miles farther and pretty soon I came upon a gang of men. My guide pointed out one and said:

"'That's Wilson.'

"I told Wilson that I had come to sign him up,' for the Minneapolis club, offered him terms and he said they were satisfactory. Then he signed the contract and I started for the top of the earth once more. I got there and I got out, of town just before the soldiers arrived.

"What did Wilson look like?" Kahoe was asked.

"Say I wouldn't know him again if I saw him on the street or in a mine" answered the doubt. "All those fellows looked alike down there. They all were about as black and sooty as could be. Maybe the guide gave me the wrong steer and maybe I signed up the wrong man but I took a chance on that rather than hang around that town any longer than I had to."

Football as she is conducted at Harvard is quite a lucrative sport. The total Harvard receipts for the 1914 season were $197,000. The total expenses were about $27,000. That leaves $170,000 as a net profit.

And up in Harvard they resent the remarks of some folks who contend that colleges commercialize sport.

The Harvard share for that Yale-Harvard game was about $70,000. The Princeton game receipts were $40,000 and the Michigan receipts about $30.00. The rest of the money came from Washington, Jefferson, Pennsylvania State, Tufts, Bates, Brown and Springfield Y. M. C. A. games.

The Army Navy football dates after the 1915 game is played may conflict with the Yale-Harvard battle dates. It has been customary in the past for Yale and Harvard to meet on the Saturday proceeding Thanksgiving Day.

Of late the Army coaches have come out strongly against playing their big game so late in the season, the contention being that the weather gets so cold up around West Point toward the latter part of Novembe, that it interferes with training and that the coaches are unable to get the players into the proper condition.

HOT LINERS.

Report A—Hans Lobert will jump to the Federals.

Report B—Hans Lobert will stay with the Phillies.

Report C—Hans Lobert will be with the Giants in 1915.

Jack Johnson in Mexico.

El Paso, Tex., Dec. 24.—Jack Curley has established a line of credit at the First National bank and made preliminary arrangements for the Jack Johnson-Jess Willard fight to be held in Juarez this winter.

Curley announced that he would erect a big arena for the fight as he is afraid that the bull ring is too small to accommodate the crowd which is expected to attend the battle. He says Johnson can avoid arrest by coming through Mexico by some east coast port and that he has assurances that he will not be molested in his promoting of the fight game across the Rio Grande.

PRICES FIXED BY COMBINE.

New York, Dec. 24.—Fifteen butter and egg firms in New York City virtually control the prices of the two commodities throughout the United States, according to information made public by the State Attorney General's office, which is investigating the sale of butter and eggs in this city.

Members of the Attorney General's staff here have prepared an analysis of figures relating to the trade in New York, and according to Deputy Assistant Attorney General Kennedy, will introduce the analysis into the evidence being gathered at the formal inquiry in progress here.

Further witnesses were examined yesterday in the course of these proceedings and adjournment was taken until January 20.

Many of the 15 firms alleged to have national control of butter and egg prices have an income as high as $12,000,000 each, according to Mr. Kennedy, and control the Executive committee of the New York Mercantile Exchange.

A State Game Farm.

Albany, Dec. 24.—Under the act of the Legislature $15,000 for the establishment of a game farm on Long Island, the conservation commission today decided to purchase the farm of Alonzo Robinson and the adjacent farm of Eugene Lane near Manorville, town of Brookhaven. The Robinson farm contains 104 acres, purchased for $45 per acre and the Lane farm is 35 acres, bought for $1,575.

The commission after a thorough examination of property suitable for a game farm on Long Island, selected this tract of 139 acres splendidly adapted to the propagation of game birds.

Johnson a Life Termer.

Washington, Dec. 23.—"Under no consideration will I dispose of Walter Johnson, either through a trade or sale."

Manager Clark Griffith, of the Senators today made this statement on his return from Kansas City, where he succeeded in bringing the great pitcher to the Washington club.

"Furthermore, Eddie Foster is not on the market, nor any other of my ball players, save perhaps a few rookies," he added. "Walter Johnson will play with the Nationals until he has outlived his usefulness as a ball player."

WORK AT FULTON.

Contractor S. R. Rosoff, of Herkimer, in charge of the Oswego canal contract in Oswego, gave out the first authoritative statement regarding the work, recently started. Mr. Rosoff stated that 10,000 cubic yards of earth had been filled in at the Southern end of the contract thus far.

Yiverton Island is being graded to an even level and the earth used as filler. According to the official, 35,000 yards will be filled in by March 1st. If weather conditions permit work will be continued until that date. Thirty-five men are now employed and a steam shovel was installed on the island yesterday.

The Fulton Lodge of Elks will hold a meeting tonight. They have subscribed $200 for Christmas baskets for the poor.

SNOW STORM HAS ABATED

There Will Be a Rush To-Night of Christmas Shoppers. Many Could Not Get Out Last Night

The severe storm which has swept over Fulton and vicinity during the past two days leaving a heavy blanket of snow for Christmas abated during the night.

Last night it was rather blustery and the streets were somewhat deserted.

The merchants have suffered severely through the blizzard. There will be a rush tonight of Fultonians to do their Christmas shopping and it is believed that the stores will be crowded.

Fulton seems to have been the center of the storm as reports from Oswego and Phoenix show that neither of these places received the quantity of snow that fell in Fulton.

Last night the steam and trolley roads were running a little behind their schedule time.

A large corps of men has been employed by Superintendent of Public Works Rumsey and business streets are getting attention.

This is the heaviest storm Fulton has experienced in several years. Although the snow fall was heavy the absence of a wind prevented the snow from drifting thus preventing a serious blockade of traffic.

A Volney Road.

A resolution was introduced at the Board of Supervisors yesterday by George Fuller designating a highway in the Toren of Volney to be improved next year. The road is less than a mile long. The Highway Committee reported favorably on the resolution.

Battalions Blotted Out In 15 Minutes' Fighting

But Germans Finally Reached River Bank, Took French, Later Losing Ground Before Terrific Onslaught

By Francis Lavelle Murray.

Special to The Evening Times

Petrograd, Dec. 26.—"I have been down to hell. I have seen the worst that man can see and live. On my dying bed I shall have visions of the Bzura slaughter. Never again, waking or sleeping, shall I be free of the recollection."

This is the opening paragraph of a dispatch received here from Warsaw today in which a correspondent tells of his visit to the front where he arrived just as the Germans were attempting to hurl their legions across the Bzura toward Warsaw.

"It was a horrible rout," he continued. "Germans and Russians fought hand to hand in the icy water. As they fell others took their places. The river, fifty yards broad at the point where I watched the combat, was dammed with corpses. Struggling bodies of the wounded and drowning lay entangled amid the dead in the icy water.

Even yet the bodies of the dead are being carried down tthe Vistula, the Germans returning thus to their Fatherland, borne on the River of Nations.

"Gen. Mischenko, who is holding the line to the Vistula, has not only not given way to the heavy German attacks, but has actually pressed forward several miles in operation with General Litwanoff who is commanding the first army in succession to General Rennenkampf. (Note—Gen. Rennenkampf was removed because of a strategic error that permitted the Gerrmans to advance west of Lodz almost without opposition.)

"South of Sochazew is a line of positions which the Germans are pressing heavily. This is a flat, wooded country which sinks gently to the course of the Bzura, which is fordable at many points. On either bank the Germans and Russians have pushed their trenches close to the water, the riflemen at some points being separated only by the water.

"The batteries are, of course, farther back, screened by woods of inequalities of land. For each of them an observation point is contrived in trees and in a church tower that commands a view of the field of fire.

"On the night of December 19 the Germans made five attacks at short intervals. The [illegible] shrapnel trebled and quadrupled. Down the river came [illegible] columns. They swayed under our artillery fire. They halted. They started again with searchlights playing upon them.

"They swooped down with the concentrated fire from the trenches mowing lanes through their ranks. They rolled into the icy bullet-whipped water which came up to their arm pits.

"Save for one attack on the night of December 20 they have never succeeded in reaching the eastern bank in force.

Generally their attack has been annihilated. No one can tell how many they have lost. Whole battalions have been blotted out in the course of fifteen minutes' fighting.

"On the night of December 20, after two futile efforts to force the river, they reached the east bank on the third effort. They had drawn through the water several mitralleuses and succeeded in enfilading the trenches held by the First Siberians. They entered and took the trench.

"Two hours later, the Siberians, reinforced by mixed detachments of the 126th and 15th regiments, retook the trench with the bayonet and drove the Germans into the river."

Germans Driven Back Six Miles

By Francis Lavelle Murray.

Petrograd, Dec. 26.—Smashing their way forward through a blizzard that rendered operations by the enemy impossible, Russian forces celebrated Christmas day by driving the Germans out of Rawa, on the Rawka river and drove them back six miles to Jezow. For five days the Germans had been in possession of Rawa, part of which stands on the highest point of a range of hills between the Pilica and Bzura rivers.

A sanguinary battle took place on these heights, but after a conflict of three hours the Germans were driven down the western slopes. The Russians took 2,300 prisoners and three guns.

According to the Army Messenger, this victory at Rawa, while not overwhelming in itself, opens a way to making a breach in the German line to lessen the pressure that the Kaiser's troops are maintaining against the Russians on both the Bzura and Pilica.

"The Russian positions on the Bzura are now secure," it says today. "The Rawa heights are of great importance and dominate the situation between the Pilica and Bzura. It is fortunate that they were taken at this time, as the Germans are bringing up heavy reinforcements.

"Germany is apparently drawing upon her last resources to construct 1,000,000 on our western front. Among prisoners passing through Warsaw were noted many professional men. Scores wore spectacles, showing that men who had been rejected early in the war had later been sent to the front."

Under the captain "Russian army a surprise," the Army Messenger discusses the Galician campaign at some length.

"The stubborn defense of our Austrian opponents in western Galicia has been the greatest surprise of the war," it admits. "Beginning with the battle of Dukla Pass it has shown a resourcefulness and strength wholly unexpected in favor of the early events of the war. Though we won at Dukla, taking several ammunition wagons and taking 2,000 prisoners, the Austrians inflicted severe losses upon us. They contested bitterly for every foot of ground."

FULTON MAN FOUND FROZEN

William "McSarley" Fagan Died In Ditch Behind E-Z Opener Factory

William Fagan, better known around Fulton as "Billie McSarley," was found frozen to death this morning at 10 o'clock in the lot in the rear of the E Z Opener Bag Co.'s plant. Coroner E. J. Cusack was notified and he ordered the body removed to Brown's undertaking establishment.

The body was found in a ditch, which runs between the railroad track and 4th st. and he was lying face down ward in the ditch with a light sprinkling of snow covering him. The discovery was made by Fred Dutcher, of Rochester st., who was taking a a short cut through the lot to inspect some lumber down in that neighborhood.

He had evidently been lying there since Christmas eve as it was upon that night that he was last seen. A brother-in-law, Thomas Newton said that he had left his home without his overcoat and that was the last heard of him.

McSarley, as he was known, made his headquarters most of the time in Minetto, although he generally came to Fulton during the winter months. The only immediate survivor is a sister, Mrs. Thomas Newton, of N. 4th st.

Coroner Cusack said that the man undoubtedly fell into the ditch and could not get up and therefore froze to death. The unfortunate man had a genial disposition and Fultonians who knew him will mourn his untimely death. Fagan was about 54 years of age.

The remains will be removed to the home of his sister for burial. The man's body was in gruesome condition when found but he could be identified by the new suit of black clothes.

German Counter Attacks Repulsed

Paris, Dec. 26.—A repulse of German counter attacks by the Allies is the chief feature of an official statement issued here today.

The statement follows:

"There was a light cannonade on the front between the sea and the Lys where thick fog paralyzed operations. Between Lys and Oise repulsed numerous counter attacks by the enemy at Moulettes west of Lens at Laboiselle northeast of Albert and at Lihons west of Chaulens where a trench taken from the enemy was lost and then retaken after a sharp fight.

DRESDEN OVERTAKEN.

Valpaaiso, Chile, Dec. 26.—News of a battle between the German cruiser Dresden and German transport, Prinz Eitel Friedrich and British cruisers o ffthe coast of Chile is expected momentarily. Chilean warships reported by wireless yesterday that the British cruiser New Castle had overtaken the Dresden and that a battle was on, and since that time wireless messages from off the coast "Jammed" and it has been impossible to decipher them. It is believed that the New Castle is accompanied by the Bristol.

ITALY TAKES ACTION.

London, Dec. 26.—Italian occupation of the Albanian port of Adalona is another step toward participation in the war. This statement made by a prominent diplomat to the International News Service today sums up the general belief in diplomatic circles. No one doubts that Turkey will protest against this action and the general result of such a protest if pressed would be the align of Italy with the Allies.

COLD IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Pittsburgh, Pa. Dec. 26.—All cold records were broken in Northwestern Pennsylvania today, when the mercury dropped 24 to 30 degrees below zero.

What Will Happen In Flanders if Germans Stick And Get Giant Guns Working After Winter Is Over?

No more striking picture of the effect of the terrific power of the great 42 centimeter guns of the German army has been taken than this. Friends of the allies when they look at such destruction as here seen ask the questions: What will happen if the Germans can hold their own in Flanders until spring and then bring their big guns again into action? Will they be able to capture Dixmude and Ypres and then push easily on to Dunkirk and Calais, shattering these seacoast towns if resistance keeps up? The picture shows what happened to one of the steel cupola forts defending Antwerp.

Armies Knelt for An Hour In Prayer

By Franklin P. Merrick.

Paris, Dec. 26.—For one hour on Christmas day the warriors of the nations locked in deadly conflict in western Europe ceased to fight. During that brief interval the clash of arms and the boom of artillery was halted and hundreds of thousands of soldiers knelt in prayer to the Omnipotent.

No armistice was officially decreed. It was as if a mightier mind than those of the commanders of the greatest armies on earth had decreed a return of peace, even for so brief a period.

After the short truce had ended, however, the mightiest combat in the history of the world was resumed.

Russians Again Fighting in Galicia

Vienna, Via Berlin and Amsterdam, Dec. 26.—The Russian armies, reinforced by fresh troops for their campaign against Cracow, are attacking the Austrians along the entire front in Galicia. These attacks are being successfully repulsed, however, according to an official report from Gen. Von Hoetzendorf, chief of the general staff. Fighting goes on day and night.

The report says:

"Fighting occurred yesterday (Thursday) on the greater part of the front. We beat several attacks near Magyar-Latorcza. The enemy, who lost heavily, was driven back near Lisko (southwest of Przemysl.)

"Between the Biala and the Wisiok, the Russians attacked all day Christmas and at night with great intensity. The situation on the Dunajec front is unchanged, with artillery fighting at some points. There is nothing to report from the Balkans."

WEATHER FORECAST.

Generally fair tonight and Sunday with a rising temperature. Moderate and variable winds.

French Troops Reported Making Small Gains

By Franklin P. Merrick.

Special to The Evening Times

Paris, Dec. 26.—Severe fighting is in progress at two points today in France, the outcome of which will have an important bearing upon the outcome of the great conflict. Along the Moselle river the French troops are trying to reach Metz and cut the German lines of communication leading into northern France.

South of Arras the Germans are attempting a similar drive towards Amiens, from which radiate several railway lines upon which the French, Belgian and British troops in Flanders and the extreme northern part of France depend for their supplies, except such as come from England through Dunkirk, Calais and Havre.

News that the Germans are striving to reach Amiens explains the continued fighting about Albert, where the conflict rages from house to house and the capture of a single trench or a gain of a few yards is considered important enough to chronicle in the official statements.

The conflicting reports reach here as to the situation along the Moselle. It is stated unofficially that the French have made so good progress there that they have been able to bring their heavy artillery to bear upon Metz and are shelling the outer forts of the German stronghold on Torraine.

It is known that the French troops have made important gains in the forest of Le Petre, but the official statements have not yet shown how these bear upon the efforts to gain the Norroy Ridge from which their long range guns could reach the Metz forts.

A brief lull in the fighting in Flanders is due to the fact that the allies have reached the barrier that had halted the Germans when they tried to pack their way through to Dunkirk before the main English forces had reached the front. This is the inundation along the Yser canal. Ice has formed in the flooded region, but this is not thick enough to bear the weight of men and artillery.

When the ice has reached the necessary thickness the offensive of both Germans and allies in this region will probably result in the greatest losses that have yet occurred in the war.

GERMANS LOSE ONE MORE OLD CRUISER

By Francis Lavelle Murray.

Petrograd, Dec. 26.—The German cruiser Hertha and a German mine layer have been sunk in the Baltic sea, according to information received by the Russian admiralty. No details accompanied the message telling of the German's double loss, but admiralty officials believe that the Hertha was sunk while it was trying to protect the mine layer in its operations along the Russian coast being overtaken by a fast Russian cruiser.

The Hertha was placed in commission in 1897 and for several years before the war was used as a training ship. Her complement numbered 473 men. She was a vessel of 5,569 tons. The Hertha was equipped with 24 guns, but her largest were two of 8.2 inches.

OPINIONS

Railroad Values.

The effort to obtain an increase in freight rates no doubt has hurt the credit of railroads somewhat. But that railroads constitute a solid investment field was argued by Clifford Thorne, railroad commissioner of Iowa, who appeared before the Interstate Commerce Commission and spoke against an increase in rates. His point was that the roads are merely affected by the depression along with the industries and other business, and are able to tide themselves over the reaction.

The commissioner declared that in 1913 the carriers earned enough to pay all operating expenses, all taxes, maintain their properties better than ever before in their history, pay all the interest on their bonds and debts, and had enough left over to make a clean net profit of a little over 8 per cent. on all the capital stock outstanding in the hands of the public. During the depression last year this fell to 4.16 per cent. Fifteen years ago it amounted to 3.88 per cent. During the five-year period ending in 1902 the average was 5.52 per cent. After 1902 there was a large change, for during the 10 years ending with 1913 the lowest point reached was 6.92 and the highest was 9.70 "Such a large return on capital over a long period," said the commissioner, "has never existed before in all the history of American railroading."

The main problem for the railroads during the next year is to meet notes and funded debts maturing in that time. The amount is about $300,000,000 according to the carriers. It was suggested that an average reduction of dividends of one-half of one per cent. would save the railroads $12,500,000, a sum equal to double the amount required to refund the obligations at the higher interest rates now prevailing.

Clifford Thorne knows something about railroads or he wouldn't be a public service commissioner in Iowa. Possibly he is mistaken about the situation. Nevertheless, what he says is reassuring. The average railroad is not facing a crisis, rusty rails, fallen over depots, leaky locomotives and general decay—an impression which has been created by railroad presidents and financial publications. Although the railroads may deserve the increase in rates which has been granted, persons who own shares and bonds in railroads should not be scared by the propaganda that was carried on in favor of the increased rates. The railroads of the country, with the exception of a few which have been grossly mismanaged, are still very valuable pieces of property and they are not going to the dogs, any more than the country is. And no American can believe that the country is headed in that direction.—Freeport News.

HIS INDORSEMENT.

The late Lord Roberts once sent his orderly to the bank to cash a check, says Pearson's Weekly, and the clerk wanted it indorsed.

"What for?" demanded the soldier.

"Well, it's the rule, and I can't pay you the money until you do indorse it," he was told.

"Oh, all right!" grumbled the messenger. So he took back the check and bit the end of a pen in deep meditation for a minute or two. Then he wrote this:

"I beg to say that I have known Lord Roberts for several years, and he has proved himself, times without number, to be as brave as a lion, but always kindly considerate to those who serve under him. And I have, therefore, great pleasure in respectfully indorsing his check."

PROSPERITY SHOULD NOT HALT.

Not many days ago it was asked, "Why is it that prosperity bringing peace, contentment and happiness in its train, seems to hesitate on palsied feet when every material prospect of farm, factory and market is big with promise and assurance of plenty?"

There was but one answer: Everything was set for better times except the railroads. But since putting the query the Inter-State Commerce Commission has set the pendulum swinging for better times. Increased freight rates have been granted—another fly in the ointment of many of us. But the railroads have their point of view. Their explanation is simple. They tell us the cost of railroad service has increased more rapidly than the receipts. America's railroads have been forced to pay increased wages, increased taxes and increased interest, and there has not been enough railway revenue left to buy adequate materials and supplies at increased prices.

Under similar conditions every other industry in the United States is free to meet increased cost of production with an advance in the price of the product. Why not the railroads?

The answer has been made—the Interstate Commerce Commission has answered. The holes have been plugged, and now the stick should begin to beat the dog, and all of us may go home to supper.

NOT THE RIGHT WAY TO GO ABOUT IT.

The failure in the House of Representatives of the resolution submitting a nation-wide prohibition amendment was a foregone conclusion. A two-thirds vote is required to submit a constitutional amendment, and there is no reason to suppose that there is any two-thirds majority in this country in favor of taking such a short cut to a solution of the drink problem. On the contrary, there is, in our opinion, a strong majority in favor of remanding the resolution of the problem to the states, where such a police problem properly belongs.

It would be a dangerous invasion of the rights of the states to attempt to impose on the entire nation one cast iron rule of non-sale and non-manufacture of intoxicants. The forty-eight states differ widely from one another in their attitude toward the abuses of the liquor traffic. New York, with its enormous population of foreign birth or extraction, accustomed to a moderate use of the milder alcoholic drinks, cannot be put rationally in the same category with the sparsely settled agricultural communities of the West and South, where entirely different conditions exist and entirely different ideas as to the use of liquor prevail.

Each state should be a law unto itself in regulating community habits and standards of temperance. If prohibition is going to be the rule of the future, it will win its way through the example set in prohibition states. If it is found to produce better results than local option or high license or any other method of regulation, then the states which do not have it gladly accept it. It will triumph, as every cause of that sort ought to triumph, not thrugh forcible conversion, but through realt moral suasion.

Mr. Hobson and those Representatives who sided with him are on the wrong road. Their zeal as reformers ought not to blind them to the fact that the regulation of the liquor traffic is not a federal function and that in thrusting prohibition on the country through federal action they would destroy the rights of self-government reserved to the state. The House of Representatives was right in refusing to sanction the rash and needless experiment of nation-wide prohibition through constitutional amendment.—New York Tribune.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

The lurking doubt in suffrage hearts in regard to the winning of Montana for suffrage is banished and the official count announced at Helena gives a goodly majority of 3,714 for woman suffrage. It is an interesting fact, showing that the people who know about woman suffrage know it to be a good thing, that the counties in Montana bordering on equal suffrage Idaho gave a majority for suffrage nearly equal to that of the entire state.

Seekers after a variety of arguments in favor of woman suffrage should visit the suffrage shop at 663 Fifth Ave. in New York city where distinguished people under the auspices of the Women's Political Union hold forth on the subject daily at 4.30.

Gifford Pinchot set the ball rolling on Monday by declaring that woman suffrage was no cure—all for state ills. Hutchins Hapgood wound up the week on Saturday by declaring that work for woman suffrage was a cure-all for the ills of women. In between came Oswald Villard making the demand that woman suffrage was imperative in the interest of a world peace.

"Ballots are like bullets," quotes Mr. Pinchot, "and there is no reason why women should not learn to use both just as men have learned to use tme. From what I have seen in the suffrage states I predict that woman suffrage will introduce the human element into politics which is just the thing we lack."

"Sufferers from neurasthenia and melancholia, get out and work for suffrage! was the clarion call of Mr. Hapgood who said that he had known many women who had found toned-up nerves and a restored mental poise in a suffrage campaign.

If a New York wife saves money out of the allowance given her by her husband, it belongs to the husband. A case in point has just been decided in Brooklyn in the husband's favor and the New York Tribune commented editorially that it was similar decisions that confirmed the average human being in the belief that "the law's an ass."

Suffragists will not fail to utilize this decision to calm down these numerous gentlemen who never tire of asserting that New York state law is more favorable to women than to men. Even Justice Blackmer, who made the decision expressed regret that the laws of the state had not reached the point "of holding that property which is the result of the husband's earnings and the wife's savings becomes their joint property."

Recently a new and powerful argument has been added to the woman suffrage arsenal. It is not conceivable that women could make a bigger mess than has come to man-ruled Europe. The so-called ruling sex has no reason to feel proud of its record. It must in humility confess that it has plunged half the world into a horror exceeding anything since the days of the Huns and Vandals, and that, perhaps the women, if they had had the power, would have ordered matters more wisely.—New York Globe.

"It was everywhere admitted," said Jane Addams of the recent Chicago election, "that the best candidates to the Sanitary Board were elected by the women's vote."

Advertising Talks

Special Qualities in Newspaper Ads.

A. E. Chamberlain, member of the executive committee of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the world, says:

"No other medium can give you all the following qualities found in newspapers:

"Newspaper advertising covers either the local field or the entire country.

"Newspaper advertising makes possible local co-operation between news paper and advertiser.

"Newspaper advertising makes possible advertisements that are up-to-the-minute, and are always under your control.

"It offers the greatest economy of advertising space.

"Newspaper advertising is placed in juxtaposition daily with events of city state, county and world-wide interest.

"Newspaper advertising is carried into all the homes of all the people all the time."

Most Powerful Factor in Advertising

F. Woodward treasurer of the New England Confectionery Co. Boston, says:

"Our personal opinion is that the daily press is the most powerful factor in advertising."

Citizenship is Taught the Boys

The usual course in civics in the average American high school is given in connection with the course in United States History, in the last, or next to the last, year in school. Such elementary work as the students may have received in the grade is very often of but little value. By the time the last year in high school is reached, only a very small fraction of the class is left. For this reason it was decided to give a short course in practical citizenship to the first-year students in the High School for Boys in a certain Pennsylvania city, and make it as non-technical as possible. In the organization of the work of this department several propositions were kept in mind:

1. The ordinary citizen immersed in the task of caring for his business and providing for his family, gives at present little thought to civic problems. Good water, sewage disposal, parks, playgrounds, treatment of vacant lots, paving, street cleaning, economy of administration, the City Beautiful and all other civic problems, are somebody else's business.

2. For this reason, principally, the government of American cities has many defects; officials are chosen not for their fitness, but for their political availability; good officials rarely receive credit for what they do, and bad ones are rarely censured.

3. Boys at the age of thirteen or fourteen are full of energy which is usually bent on mischief. Their minds are at that age "wax to receive and marble to retain." Enthusiasms then aroused are more liable to make a permanent impression than at any other age. So, if they can be made conscious of their peculiar responsibility as American citizens, if their pride as citizens can be aroused, the results are likely to be permanent, and thus in the course of years there will gradually be built up a body of citizens that will be a tremendous civic asset to their city.

With these propositions in view, the work was organized. All the entering class take history the first year. So the first six weeks of the fall term we devote the history period to this work. Almost the first thing each boy does is to commit to memory the pledge of Solon:

"We will never bring disgrace to this our city by any act of dishonesty or cowardice nor ever desert our suffering comrades in the ranks.

"We will fight for the ideals and sacred things of the city, both singly and together. We will revere and obey the city's laws, and do our best to incite a like respect and reverence in those above us who are prone to annul or set them at naught.

"We will strive unceasingly to quicken the public sense of civic duty. Thus in all these ways we will transmit this city not only not less, but greater, better and more beautiful than it was transmitted to us."

In our class work we then take up the six fundamental desires of men with which government concerns itself, viz.: health, wealth, knowledge, righteousness, companionship and beauty. We consider how these desires are satisfied and also how they might be satisfied to a greater degree.

Our field work is of two kinds. At first, an attempt is made to familiarize the student with what the city has already done. For this purpose walks are taken on Saturdays, and most of the boys go along. We plan for four of these walks.

1. Inspection of the sewage disposal plant. Our city has a sprinkle filter plant of remarkable efficiency, and the working of this is studied on the spot. The chemist in charge is very courteous and helpful, taking the students through the laboratory and explaining everything.

2. Inspection of the sand filter beds of the water system. The officials are equally helpful in answering questions.

3. Inspection of the parks. We have a municipal skating rink with which most of the boys are already familiar, and in this trip suggestions for park extension are discussed.

4. The local electric light plant. This trip was not taken this year on account of inclement weather.

We next try to ascertain what yet remains to do. In this connection defective administration of the city government is considered. To this end each student receives a suggestive program such as this:

An ill-paved street.
A billboard.
Faults in garbage collection.
Children in the street.
Defacement of the mountains and of the river front.
A smoking stack.
A dirty alley.
Disreputable vacant lot.
Grade crossing blockade.

Each boy then turns in a series of observations on these various topics to the section secretary, of which there are several. The secretaries then classify these observations and prepare letters to be forwarded to the proper authorities. They have already become personally acquainted with many of these officials by being sent to the City Hall, the Court House, and elsewhere, in preparing special topics for the classroom work.

Students who own cameras eagerly volunteer a six-exposure film, and take suitable snapshots to illustrate these letters.

The letter on billboards suggested that a tax be levied by the city on such advertisements. Another on the same subject, mimeographed and sent to the firms advertising on billboards urging them to discontinue, was also prepared by the students.

The letter on garbage collection pointed out about eighty defects as noticed by the boys, including uncovered cans, overloaded wagons, improperly emptied cans, etc.

A circular letter to the manufacturing firms where smoking stacks had been observed was also prepared. Committees of the students had visited those plants where the evil had been overcome, had found out how it was done and had embodied these plans in the letter. There was also added a plan or two that they had read of in the Scientific American. Figure as to the losses and as to the unhealthfulness were given. The Mayor was urged in another letter to take steps for the extension of the playgrounds. The vacant lots were suggested as offering temporary relief at small expense.

Our principal street is cursed with a trunkline railway grade crossing. The boys took a series of nearly a hundred observations, which, with the exact number of minutes of each, formed the basis of a letter to the State Public Service Commission.

The Board of Health had its attention called to seventy-six dirty alleys. Some of these have since been paved. The streets where paving is needed and the streets where the paving is broken were listed, and formed the text for a letter to the Mayor. Some forty men were forthwith put to work. But the reason for that may have been that the District Attorney wrote a letter at about the same time on the same subject.

This bare outline of the work can convey no idea of the vim, energy and enthusiasm which animated the boys in their task. The letters were not written in a supercilious tone, but were the respectful requests of citizens—rather young, of course, but voters-to-be. The keynote of the whole course was personal responsibility for a better city. In my opinion the boys have acquired a civic sense that will be permanent.

EMPIRE STATE NEWS.

One of the great knife factories at Walden, Orange county, has announced the receipt of a very large order from the British government to make pocket knives for English soldiers and sailors. The factory will work with an increased force for many months on the contracts.

Six hundred men recently employed in constructing Auburn city sewers, 300 being employed one week and then laying off a week, to allow 300 others a week's work are now all out of a job. The city is going to try to keep the men employed at other municipal work rather than put them and their families on the charity list. Out of $15,000 spent on the sewers, one-half was paid for labor.

New York is warned against a Mormon invasion and urged to join in a nation-wide movement for the suppression of polygamy by Frank J. Cannon, who was the first United States senator from Utah and was brought up in the Mormon faith. Mr. Cannon has come East at the invitation of the New York City Federation of Churches to start an anti-Mormon campaign throughout the state. "We have from the utterances of the head of the Mormon movement in this city," he says, "the definite assurance that the Mormon church is prepared to build a tabernacle in this city. For historical and sentimental reasons, the Mormon church has always claimed New York, for it was in this state that the golden tablets were found. The Mormons are all ready to make a determined effort here, and Mormonism will be exerting its political influence in New York before you know it."

The January American Magazine.

Two very remarkable contributions about the war appear in the January American Magazine. One, by Ray Stannard Baker, is entitled "The Last Phase of the Great War." It is a fiction story of the German Invasion of America in 1915-1916 and is a sort of imaginary history of the war supposed to be written one hundred years hence. The United States wins without any fighting at all and the story of its victory is ingenious and full of sense, humor and surprise. The other contribution on the war is entitled "Hats Off to France!" It is by Will Irwin, special correspondent of The American Magazine and it reports the courage and coolness with which the French are taking part in this war. One gains from this article the impression that France is determined and sportsmanlike to the last degree.

In the same issue Ida M. Tarbell continues her new series of articles entitled "The Golden Rule in Business." In her present article she writes under the title, "The Gospel of Safety," and gives a complete account of the tremendous development of the safety movement in American industries. Cleveland Moffet writes a wonderful account of the new invention by which moving pictures are now taken under the sea. This invention opens the way to the recovery of hundreds of millions of dollars worth of lost treasures. Its benefit to oceanographers and science is of course obvious. Stewart Edward White, writing under the title, "A Lion Adventure," gives an account of his personal experiences with wild animals in Africa. A husband, who has been married twenty-five years, gives a highly entertaining and suggestive account of his experience with the problems of matrimony.

Fiction is contributed by David Grayson, author of "Adventures in Contentment," in the way of a new novel entitled "Hempfield," and there are other stories by John A. Moroso, Mollie Best and Maravene Thompson. James Montgomery Flagg, the well-known humorist and artist, presents "Four Easy New Year's Resolutions," and the "Interesting People" department completes a lively and beautiful issue.

EVERS' RECORD EXCELS BAKER'S

He Has Done Great Batting In World's Series.

SEVEN MEN IN .300 CLASS.

Three Big-Game Home Runs Included in Classic Events—Evers and Baker Only Ones to Bat Above .300 In Three Series—Some Pitchers Have Done Remarkable Stick Work.

J. Franklin Baker no longer can lay claim to being the only athlete in captivity who has batted .300 or better in three world's series, for Johnny Evers by rapping the sphere for .357 in the recent arguments between the Braves and the Athletics got into the Marylander's class.

Baker and Eddie Collins are the only pair of players who have twice batted over .400 in baseball's annual classic.

Not taking into consideration morning glory performers like Art Wilson, Olaf Henrickson and J. Weldon Wyckoff, the high batting percentages for world's series by positions are as follows:

Hall of the Red Sox, for the pitchers, with .750; Gowdy of the Braves, for the catchers, .545; Chance of the Cubs, for the first basemen, .421; Evers of the Braves, for the second basemen, .437; Steinfeldt of the Cubs, for the third basemen, .470; Barry of the White Elephants, for the shortstops, .368; Sebring of the Pirates, for the left fielders, .366; Cobb of the Tigers, for the center fielders, .368; Schulte of the Cubs, for the right fielders, .389.

The names of all the men who have hit .300 or better in the various world's series are given below:

Batted 1.000—Wilson, Giants, 1912, in two games; Henrickson, Red Sox, 1912, in two games; Wyckoff, Athletics, 1914, in one game.

Batted .600 — Mathewson, Giants, 1913, in two games.

Batted .500—Kennedy, Pirates, 1903, in one game; Killian, Tigers, 1907, in one game; Thomas, Tigers, 1908, in two games; Crandall, Giants, 1911, in three games; Ames, Giants, 1911, in two games; McLean, Giants, 1913, in five games; McCormick, Giants, 1913, in two games; Shawkey, Athletics, 1914, in one game.

Batted .300—Meyers, Giants, 1911, in six games; Speaker, Red Sox, 1912, in eight games; Barry, Athletics, 1913, in five games.

Christmas is children's day. It is their day for rejoicing around the Christmas tree and in the playroom where the stockings hang on the bed. Millions of tots the world over bring smiles of happiness to fond parents and tears of gladness to the aged on this great day of days. Then tired out from their play with new toys and doilies and with all the other good things, they often fall asleep on the floor in early evening just as the tot in the picture did, happy even in their little dreams.

THE JUDGE STANDS PAT.

He Doesn't Look for Radical Constitutional Changes.

A recent issue of the Palladium contains remarks made by Judge Merrick Stowell concerning the April constitutional convention. He says he has never heard of a conference of delegates to the convention and knows of no program, tentative or otherwise, regarding the new guide that must be submitted to the electors for approval before it becomes organic law. Continuing the Judge is quoted as follows:

"However, I wish to say that according to my present lights I am not in sympathy with those who believe in the abolishment of our Boards of Supervisors, our County Court or our Grand Jury system. I am opposed to the referendum, the recall, woman suffrage and prohibition and would oppose the writing of these planks into the proposed revised Constitution. However, I am not opposed to their submission to the voters of the State as independent measures.

I believe in Constitutional government and in permitting government to rest in the hands of the people, believing that they are the ones most interested and that they will conserve their own interests better that a commissioner or a commission can do. The Supervisors directly represent the people; there could be no more representative body and, therefore, in my judgment it should not be disturbed. The County Court also should remain a part of our Judicial system, being as essential now as it ever has been. Our Supreme Courts at present are congested with business and if the business of our County Court is turned over to the Justice of the Supreme Court it seemingly would be necessary to employ more Supreme Court Judges. Probably many of the delegates will be there with pet forms of government which they will urge, but I doubt if there will be many radical changes in the way of conducting county affairs. We have prospered under our present form of government and I believe it should be continued with changes only to meet changed conditions."

Company Wants to Abandon Him.

Oswego, Dec. 24.—City Attorney McCaffrey has been notified that the Public Service Commission will hold a hearing on the petition of the Empire United Railways for permission to abandon their east side line from Riverside cemetery, south to the foot of Seneca Hill, at the Court House, this city, January 8 at 10 a. m.

The company sought to abandon the line several years ago, but was ordered to continue service thereon.

Nobody ever questioned the nerve of Eddie Collins. On Tuesday he umpired a game of indoor baseball between two nines of girls in Philadelphia.

The Oswego Times says:

"Congressman Mott and forty-one other Oswegoians stranded in Syracuse this morning, due to the failure of the New York Central to carry out train connections, made things interesting for the railroad for a short time. They arrived in two Pullmans from New York and just missed the 8:35 Oswego train. Congressman Mott and a committee waited on the railroad authorities and demanded a special on the ground that their connections had been missed through the fault of the railroad and not by bad weather. They were refused. Then they took the matter up with the Public Service Commission in Albany and finally obtained an order requiring the road to furnish an engine and run the train special. About that time the regular 10:50 train was made up and a compromise was effected and the Pullmans came down on the regular schedule.

Richland—Resident business men are moving for the incorporation of the village and the securing of a charter at the next session of the Legislation. A survey has been made by Charles E. Briggs, a civil engineer, of Daysville. The matter has been agitated before, but more interest is being shown now and it will probably go through.

Richland—A stranger bought $2 worth of groceries at Daniel O'Brien's store a few nights ago and gave a check for $69. Mrs. O'Brien gave him $67 in exchange. The check was drawn on the Pulaski National Bank, and when presented was pronounced a forgery.

Mrs. H. P. Burgard Presented With a $6,500 Auto By Her Husband

Mrs. H. P. Burgard, wife of the wealthy Barge Canal contractor, was the recipient of one of the most costly Christmas presents received in this city yesterday. Her husband presented her with a handsome high powered limousine car valued at $6,500 as a Christmas gift.

Mr. Burgard sent the car down from Buffalo. The chauffeur drove the automobile from Buffalo to Syracuse and when he learned that the roads in this vicinity were impassable, on account of the heavy snow storm, the car was loaded aboard a special freight car at Syracuse and shipped to this city, where it was unloaded and driven to the family garage, corner 4th and Academy sts.

Much difficulty was experienced in getting the car through the snow blocked streets and several times it was necessary for the men to dig it out of the snow.

The gift was a complete surprise to Mrs. Burgard as she did not know a about the donation until it was being being placed in the garage. It is conceded to be the finest machine in Fulton.

Pulpit and Pew

First Baptist Church.

Milton George Beck, D. D., Pastor.

The "church of the cordial welcome" is at the corner of 3d and Utica sts., where the seats are free and all are made to feel at home. If you are a stranger in the city, come with us if you have no other church home.

On Sunday evening at 7, Leon Foster, a student at the University of Syracuse, a talented organist, will give a short organ recital preceding the regular services.

The primary department of the Bible school will have a Christmas party on Tuesday afternoon. All children of the department and their mothers are invited.

The services Sunday will be of unusual interest. In the morning the pastor will speak on "Our vows, have they been kept or not during 1914."

The Bible school will meet at 12 m. A contest is on and we are having the largest school in the history of the church. Do not fail to be present.

In the evening, organ recital and the choir will sing an anthem appropriate to the occasion. The pastor will preach an old fashioned evangelistic sermon, subject, "The unchangeable Christ," with an 'after meeting' in the chapel. You will miss a good time if you are not present.

Christian Endeavor in the chapel at 6 p. m.

Prayer meeting next week, Friday night instead of Thursday, in connection with the annual corporate meeting of the church at which time there will be election of trustees for the ensuing year and such other business as will properly come before the meeting.

Christmas at Presbyterian Church.

The Christmas exercises of the First Presbyterian church will be held tomorrow. Miss Belle Vickery soloist, of Syracuse and Phoenix, will render solos at both the morning and vesper services. Miss Vickery is known as a very talented musician throughout the country having been in concert work and grand opera for a number of years. At the morning service a mixed quartet will give "Sing, O sing, this Blessed Morn" by Harry Rowe Shelley.

Dr. Robertson will take "The Christmas Message" as the topic for his morning address.

At the vesper service at 5 o'clock a cantata. "The Prince of Peace," by Ashford, will be given by a chorus of Fulton singers, the Misses Lake, Wm. S. Hillick and A. Gustave Ansermet taking solo parts. Mr. Ross Wolever of Colgate University will preside at the organ.

The Young Men's Bible class will have several special features of interest immediately after the morning service.

Father Kirby Officiated.

The Rev. Father Kirby, of Phoenix, recently ordained to the priesthood, celebrated his first mass in this city yesterday. He officiated at the high mass at the Church of the Immaculate Conception.

Father Kirby is a native of Phoenix but is well known in this city, where he has a host of relatives. In introducing him to the congregation the rector, the Rev. Father Lindsman spoke of him as a child of the parish. Father Lindsman said that there was a time when the Fulton parish included all of the surrounding towns, including Phoenix, and that made him virtually a child of the Parish.

After mass the congregation filed up to the sanctuary rail where a special blessing was bestowed upon them by the newly ordained priest.

Christmas at First M. E. Church.

On account of the storm, the Methdist Christmas tree entertainment was postponed until this afternoon at 3:30. The following program was given:

Winfred Joyce, recitation; Primary song; Mrs. Morin's primary class exercise; Dorothy Fox, recitation; Marjorie Scudder, piano solo; Estlier Shattuck, recitation; Mildred Bort, piano solo; Harriet Trask, recitation; Anna Adams, song; Doris Lamb, recitation; Gladys Chapman, recitation; Sarah Gurnsey, song; visit from Mr. and Mrs. Santa.

William H. Keller who lives on the Charles Gnile farm died yesterday, after an illness of about two months.

The Quirk.

Monday night musical and theatrical friends of Henry Schellenberg, leader of the Quirk orchestra, whose right foot was amputated two weeks ago, have volunteered their services in putting on a big ten-act testimonial benefit at The Quirk. The management has donated the use of the theatre and earnest efforts are being put forth to make the affair a big success, as the beneficiary is without funds and hospital fees and operation were costly. The Ross orchestra of Syracuse (10 pieces) with Ned Kinney leader, will augment the Fulton orchestra comprising, the largest orchestra ever in the Quirk. The principal artists in the entertainment are, Miss Vera Bovard, Daisy Cooper, Neah-Ta-Wanta Glee Club, Horace Webb and his Clown Band, The Musical Newtons, Van Buren and Co. in a new act, Cecil Prashaw, the Great Weber, Dan and Hazel Darleigh, and and the Citizens Band. The beneficiary is worthy of the deed and the spirit in which it is being done is the exact principle adopted by him in all cases of a similar nature.

WHITE VELVET AND SABLE COMBINED IN CHIC STREET GOWN.

How We Get the News.

Day before yesterday a perfectly nice lady called us up and with tears in her voice reproved us for not mentioning the fact that she had had a friend visiting her last week. We told her that she had not let us know anything about it and that therefore, we did not know that she had a visitor. Then she said, "Well, you should have known. I thought you were running a newspaper." Wouldn't that rattle your slats? Some people think that an editor ought to be a cross between Argus and Anna Eva Fay. They seem to think that our five senses are augmented by a sixth that lets us know everything that happens, even if we see, hear, feel, taste or smell it not. Dear lady, editors are only human or at least, almost human. If you have a friend visiting you, if you are going away, or have returned from a visit out of town, if Johnnie falls and breaks his arm, if your husband chops his toe instead of a stick of wood, if anything happens that makes you glad or sad, happy, or mad, call us up. Tell us about it. That's the way to get it in the paper.—Lyons Republican.

Mrs. Jennie Edley Brings Action Against Estate For Damages Due To a Fall

A summons and complaint in a $25,000 damage action was served Thursday upon Andrew W. Stoneburgh, former deputy sheriff of this county; his son, Harry W. Stoneburgh, an employee on the Barge canal, Rochester; Ethel M. Ballard-Stoneburgh and Melissa L. Ballard by City Marshal, John W. Youngs.

The plaintiff is Mrs. Jennie R. Edley of 123 Lyons st. and her attorney is John F. Cullen.

Mrs. Edley was injured in a fall, October 24, 1914, in front of premises 112 Lyons st. and suffered serious injuries. A defective and obstructed sidewalk is said to be the cause of the accident.

Mrs. Edley claims the sight of one eye has been impaired and that she has lost her voice. She suffered also internal injuries which have caused her to be confined to her bed.

Early in November Attorney Cullen filed a claim for $25,000 against the city in behalf of the plaintiff. Her husband also filed a claim. Dr. Joy is attending the injured woman.

New Game Law

A new game law that should be passed by all states would contain the following:

"Book agents may be shot between October 1 and September 1; Spring Poets from March 1 to June; Automobile Speed Demons from January 1 to January 1; Road Hogs from April 15 to April 15; Amateur Hunters from September 1 to February 1; War Talkers—no closed season. Any man who accepts a paper for two years and then, when the bill is presented, says 'I never ordered it,' may be killed on sight and shall be buried face downward in quicklime so as to destroy the germs and prevent the spread of the infection."

CONCERT FOR NEW SCHOOL

Choir of the Church of the Immaculate Conception Promoting the Affair

Members of the choir of the Church of the Immaculate Conception are contemplating holding a sacred concert about Easter time for the benefit of Father Lindsman's parochial school.

Yesterday the choir held an informal discussion and a meeting will be held in the near future to make definite arrangements for the concert.

The leading promoters are Professor Kenyon, organist at the Church of the Immaculate Conception, and soloist, Miss Francis Lalonde.

Father Lindsman has been unfortunate with his new enterprise. According to original plans the school was to be opened in February but on account of the disaster which befel the building the work has been seriously delayed and it is doubtful whether the children will be able even to get into the school in the spring.

The concert will be held in the church and will comprise vocal and instrumental music of the highest order. As soon as definite arrangements are made tickets will be placed on sale.

The Christmas music at the Immaculate Conception Church was beautiful and the pastor complimented the choir at the evening services.

The Rockland Hero.

We suppose that William V. Cleary, the Rockland county hero, is a good fellow. The fact that he is the boss of the county is evidence to support the supposition. But that fact didn't prevent him from placing his daughter on the witness stand to tell to the world her misfortune in order that he might use it to protect himself. This fact, coupled with his own habit of getting drunk topped off with the spirit which would lead him to shoot down a defenseless youth, make him a fine specimen for plaudits of a court room audience.

Cleary is a murderer, the slayer of his daughter's husband. He is no object for heroworship. Not only has he brought infamy upon himself, but he and his friendly jury have lent encouragement by lynch law, the business of taking law in one's own hands, particularly if a job of killing is to be done. By letting Cleary go free, the jury gave notice to the world that so far as this jury is concerned anarchy may prevail, and if injustice has been done to a man or to a member of his family he may go back to the primitive method of squaring the wrong himself. We haven't any doubt that Cleary felt that no great harm would come to him if he shot the boy, and he reckoned right. If only a matter of sex can be made the excuse for one man murdering another life of another and suffer at most the inconvenience of a trial and a few years in prison. This custom, it is declared by authorities, is a prolific source of murder in the United States.

There is plenty of homicide in this land. Life is regarded cheap. The 9,000 to 10,000 persons who take life every year do not regard life highly. The juries which inadequately enforce the law seem to think that it is a small matter that some one has killed. The Cleary jurymen violated their oaths and who knows but that by so doing they will become murderers through the hand of some one who may think that he can do what Cleary did?—Utica Observer.

EMPLOYMENT FOR MANY.

Giving employment to 1,250 persons on full time, with a weekly pay roll of nearly $18,000, the H. H. Franklin Manufacturing Company of Syracuse, makers of the Franklin automobile, is finishing a year which breaks all previous records in volume of business. The plant is now running on a production basis of 3,000 cars a year, the weekly output having been increased since July 1 from fifty-four to sixty cars. The total production for the twelve months of 1914, will be 2,490 automobiles. This represents sales for the year aggregating more than $5,000,000. The prediction is made by the sales manager that the production will be increased to 3,500 cars during 1915.

MERCURY WENT BELOW ZERO

There Were Many Varied Opinions About Town as to How Cold It Got

The mercury took its first dip below zero for the season over night and the official record for this vicinity given out from Observer Linsley's office at Oswego was 8.6 below zero at 6 a. m. today. There were varied opinions about town today as to how low the thermometer went in Fulton. Some claim it went as low as fourteen. It all depended on the location of the instrument but it is believed that the temperature was in the neighborhood of 10 below zero. Old "Sol" made his appearance this morning and the mercury began to soar skyward. The forecast for today brings the joyous tidings of warmer weather. The sun was quite warm.

Buys $1,000,000 Worth of Apples.

The greatest single purchase of apples ever known was made by Steinhardt & Kelly of New York this fall when they bought of the Northwestern Organized Fruit Growers 650 carloads for $1,000,000. The crop in the Northwestern apple region this year amounts to 13,650 cars. A Spokane correspondent of the Philadelphia "Public Ledger" states that the area now set out to apples in those states is 505,000 acres. These trees, counting that half of them only will be so cared for that will succeed, will produce not less than 125,000 carloads in 1919, or about ten times the 1914 crop. "And apple men," he continues, "merely smile at the suggestion that the market will be flooded even then."

Why smile? An Irishman, the old story tells us, once laughed and chuckled to himself at the trick he was about to play on an unsuspecting bull. He would scare the animal over a steep bank into a mill pond by leaping from behind the hedge and saying "Boo!" After he had crawled from the pond where the bull tossed him, he is said to have remarked: "Faith, it's well I had me laugh first!"

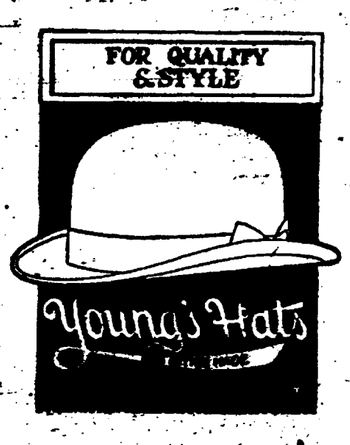
TWO PROGRESSIVES ONLY IN ASSEMBLY

Republicans Have Ninety-Nine Members, or Twenty-three Majority



When the legislature organizes on the first Wednesday of the year, at noon January 6th, the assembly will find itself without any Progressive party interference, unless Hamilton Fish, jr., of Putnam, and Joseph Steinberg of the twenty-sixth New York district decide to fight it out for the Progressive party leadership, as they are the only two Progressives in the legislature. Michael Schaap, former Progressive leader, who last year had seventeen votes at his command, did not come back.

Of the 150 assemblymen eighty-seven are former members; and of the fifty-one senators, thirty-seven have seen previous service in the upper branch of the legislature, making a total of 124 experienced men out of the 201 legislators. The Republicans have ninety-nine in the assembly, to forty-nine Democrats and two Progressives. In the senate the Republicans have thirty-three members, seven more than a majority, to seventeen Democrats and one man who terms himself a "Republican and Progressive."

Lawyers come within five votes of being in the majority in the senate, there being twenty-one of them registered, according to the advance white books just issued. Farmers are scarce in the senate, only three members admitting that title. There are six real estate dealers, and the others include various occupations.

There are fifty-four lawyers and one law student in the assembly, to twenty farmers. Also there is a dentist, a cheese merchant, an ice dealer one undertaker, one office manager, a coal dealer, a fruit grower, a bank cashier and a single member who admits being a brick layer. About the only thing the assembly seems shy of is a plumber.

FRENCH CHARGE IMPERIAL GUARD

To Dislodge the Enemy It Was Found Necessary to Take Recourse to Counter Attack

Northern France, December 26.—I have just obtained further particulars of the magnificant charge by the Chasseurs d'Afrique by which the Allies retained possession of Albert. The Germans attacked Albert time and again with great ferocity. The busy industrial town was reduced to a mass of ruins by the bombardment.

In order to dislodge the enemy it was found necessary to have recourse to a vigorous counter attack. At the same time great masses of German cavalry were reported to be about five miles from Albert.

The French staff sent forward a regiment of Chasseurs d'Afrique to meet this cavalry body which proved to be the Prussian Dragoons of the Guard. The Prussians were threatening the French line of communication with Aveluy.

The gallant Chasseurs, mounted upon their little Arab steeds, advanced along the road to Becordel. From this point I quote from the words of a Chasseur of the party, now in the hospital:

"We rdoe through a little wood. In a ditch me saw the figure of a man lying face downwards in such a natural position that he looked as though he was asleep. Two of us dismounted, and, on turning him over, discovered him to be an Uhlan, who had been shot in the head at close quarters, and could not have been dead long. We were puzzled, as none of our people had been out in this direction. However, we left him there, and followed on. We all felt as calm as possible, and were eager to measure our strength against the Dragoons of the Imperial Guard. At a mile or two from Las Basselle we made a hault. Our colonel held a council of war with his officers.

"Let us fire at them first, before charging," said the captain of the third squadron, which was mine.

"No," replied the colonel, "our orders were exact," and drading his sword he cried, "Allons, mes enfants!"

"The colonel turned in his saddle, looking at us all, and, rising in his stirrups, waved his sword. It was a gesture which might be regarded as 'banal' at manoeuvres, but on this occasion there seemed nothing out-of-place about it, as he shouted in a voice of thunder:

"Escadrons, gards a vous, pour charger, sabre main, au trotau galop-marche!"

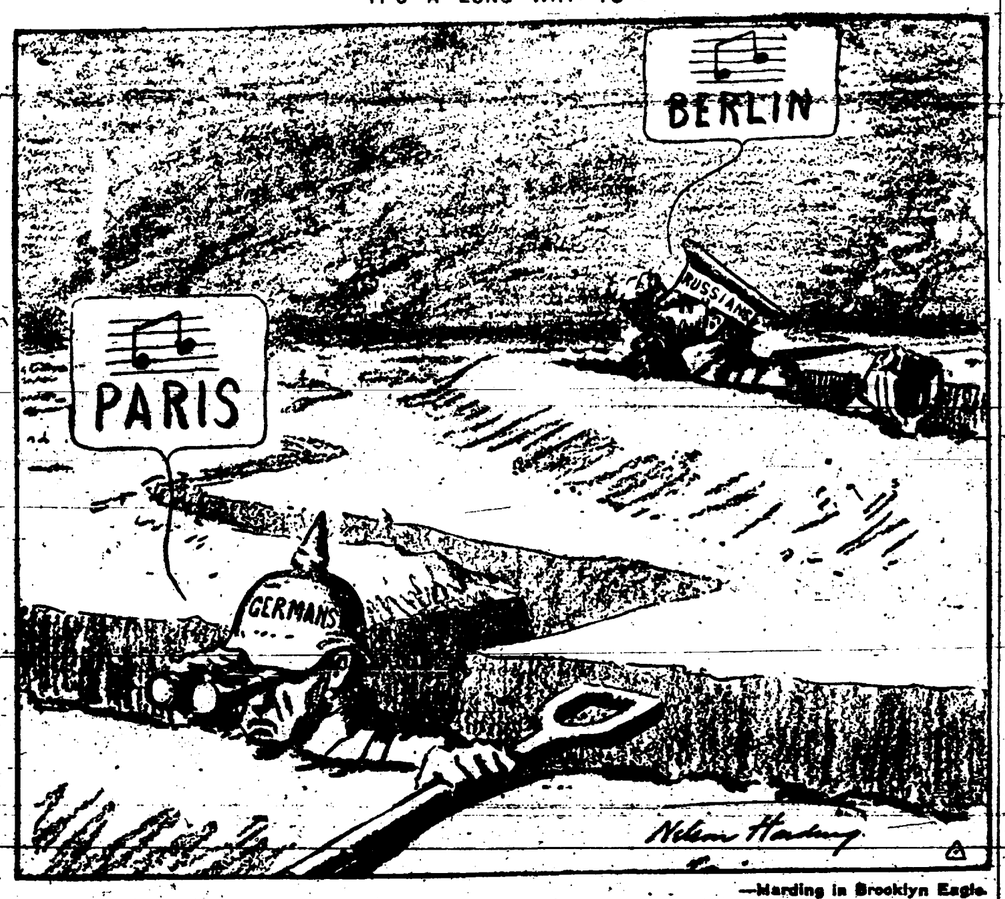
The bugles sounded the charge, and all the officers repeated the words of command.

"The spirit of all the men was splendid. We all felt this was a supreme moment. Off we went. Our dear little mounts broke into a gallop of their own accord. They seemed equally with us to understand what was afoot, the drunkenness of battle was upon us all.

"Rapidly the distance between us and the foe was diminished; it was not long before we came well in sight of the enemy's lines. It was a solid compact line, apparently motionless, but which, nevertheless, was advancing towards us at a walk, as they felt certain of victory against our onrushing torrent.

"We got close together and had our horses well in hand. Our feet well in our stirrups right up to the heel, our spurs into the flanks of our mounts, ord swords grasped in our left hand, our carbines in the right, we approached rapidly. A great cry went up, 'Charge!' 'Charge!'

"Who gave that cry?" All of us! From every throat came the word, from us all frantic hurrahs were shouuted as we bore down upon the enemy. Off went our carbines at the same time; they were soon laid aside, and we seized our swords from our left hand. At 'the thrust' we charged, side by side, into the living wall which confronted us. Indescribable cries, the clashing of steel upon steel, the squealing of horses followed. Then began the lust for slaughter, and the groaning of the wounded.



"In my turn I hacked at a beach for myself and drove into the struggling, swaying mass, cutting right and left, carried away by the turmoil, helping with a mad frenzy my comrades to mow down the enemy like ripened corn. The Dragoons of the Guard fell around us, leaving many a riderless horse, which tore here, there, and everywhere, adding to the confusion and panic amongst the enemy. Like an avalanche we broke through right to the rear of the German lines, the Imperial Dragoons crumpled up before us, most of them galloped off, the rest lay upon the ground dead and wounded, while many a horse trotted off his head high in the air, with bleeding flanks, carrying the limp figure of a motionless rider.

"Suddenly a rattle is heard, it is the machine guns of the enemy opening fire upon us, and the German artillery is seen coming into action. We immediately broke out into open order, changing our front, and at the same time we heard the reply from our artillery beginning, whilst to our left and right our infantry attack was developing so rapidly that the German artillery, fearing to be outflanked retired upon Guillemont.

"Since that day Albert has no longer been bombarded, and when our 'pou, pious' pass by La Basselle they say with enthusiasm:

"'It's just here we ate up the Dragoons of the Imperial Guard.'"

ARE DISCHARGES TAXABLE?

County Clerk's Office Holds Stamp Must Be Affixed.

The question as to whether discharges of mortgages must have a fifty cent revenue stamp is being discussed by attorneys. Deputy County Clerk Little holds that, under the war tax law, the discharges must have the stamp affixed to the certificate. He bases his upon the all-inclusive statement of the law that all certificates must bear a stamp.

One attorney who has had wide experience in real estate matters declined to pay the stamp for the discharge, holding that the so-called certificate was not a certificate within the meaning of the law.

The matter will probably be referred to County Attorney Coville for decision.—Oswego Times.

JANUARY'S CALENDAR.

One Hundred Four Causes Listed for Supreme Court.

Oswego, Dec. 24.—Today was the last day for filing notes of issue for the January term of Supreme Court to be held at the Court House by Justice L. C. Crouch, commencing Monday, January 4. The calendar will number 104 causes, which is one of the largest in recent years.

The large calendar is rather a surprise to the court officers and lawyers, as it was expected that the workman's compensation law would reduce the number of causes to a minimum and affect the legal business adversely. This has not been the effect, thus far at least. It is a noticeable fact, however, that the negligence actions for injuries to workmen are fewer in number than before. There are very few on the January calendar and most of these arose before the law went into effect. Barge canal contractors are defendants in most of these actions

There is another class of negligence actions, however, that seems to be growing, actions for injuries received in automobile accidents. There are no less than ten of these cases on the January calendar.

Would Set Aside Lake's Will

Oswego, Dec. 24.—An order entered in the County Clerk's Office today directing the service of a summons and complaint on an infant, in the action of Lillian Sarah Mount, et al, against Mrs. Jessie Lake, et al., indicates that an action to set aside the will of Elijah Lake, the octogenarian Fulton horseman, who died last June, has been started. Mrs. Mount is a sister of Mr. Lake. He willed his entire estate to his son, by a second wife, Mrs. Jessie Lake, who has been appointed his guardian.

Costs Exceed Verdict.

Oswego, Dec. 24.—An order by Judge Rowe was filed today approving the retaxation of costs in the action of Addie M. Walker of Pulaski vs. Charles K Short, at $58.59. The costs were originally taxed at $118.34, in an action in which the verdict was but $22.

BY INTERNAL EVIDENCE.

"Where do you suppose we got the saying, 'He laughs best who laughs last?'" asked Mrs. Binks of her husband.

"Probably some Englishman first said it," replied Mr. Binks. "He was doubtless trying to set a national failing in a favorable light."

FEDS RAIDING, YET WEAK

Magee the Man They Needed; Nats Have Nothing on Them at Shortstopping

New York, Dec. 26.—The Feds, via the raiding route, have reached a point where they have just about as many stars in their ranks as have either the American or National leagues.

The Feds right now have as classy an assortment of pitchers as ever worked on the firing line. They have catchers who rank with the best in either of the two organized leagues. They have two first basemen who rank as among the best in the game. Collins and Evers are better second sackers than Otto Knabe, but at the short-stopping job the Fed entries—Doolan and Tinker—rank with the best two that the National league has, and they rank ahead of the best two in the American league.

At third the Feds are weak. They haven't a real third baseman. In the outfield the American league overshadows the National and Federal, with a tie for second place honors.

Here are the lists:

American—Pitchers, Walsh, Bush, Wood, Scott, Dubuc, Leonard, Benz.

Catchers—Schaik, Schang, O'Neill.

First Base—McInnis, Gandil.

Second Base—Collins.

Shortstop—Barry, Chapman.

Third Base—Baker.

Outfielder—Cobb, Speaker, Jackson, Crawford, Milan.

Federal—Pitchers, Johnson, Caldwell, Ford, Hendrix, Hank, Seaton, Falkenberg, Marquard, Bender, Packard.

Catchers—Wingo, Archer, Wilson, Rariden.

First Base—Chase, Konetchy.

Second Base—Knabe.

Shortstop—Tinker, Doolan.

Third Base—McKechnie (?)

Outfield—Kauff, Kagee, Evans, Oakes, Zwilling.

National — Pitchers, Mathewson, Alexander, James, Doak, Rudolph, Tesreau, Rucker.

Catchers—Bresnahan, Killifer, Gowdy.

First Base—Daubert, Merkle.

Second Base—Evers.

Shortstop — Wagner, Maranville, Fletcher.

Third Base—Zimmerman.

Outfield—Burns, Dalton, Magee.

And the Feds, it must be remembered, haven't finished their raiding job. They have captured Sherwood Magee, the Phillie outfielder, and Jack Brooklyn Dodgers maybe taken into camp.

Chapman, the Nap shortstop, has been offered terms. So have some of the other stellar lights in the organized firmament and if the players continue to jump until spring at the same rate that they have jumped since the season closed, the Feds may open the 1915 season with a greater collection of real baseball talent than is enlisted in either the American or National leagues.

SHORT HITS.

Captain Huston says that if he and Ruppert buy the Yankees they will probably build a park of their own. From Chicago came the report that the new plant would cost $425,000 exclusive of the site, and would hold more persons than any other baseball plant in the country. The captain said he had not heard about that.

* * *

John McGraw, manager of the Giants, said he had made an unsuccessful attempt to get Hans Lobert, third baseman of the Phillies, but added that negotiations might be begun again soon.

* * *

John Heydler, secretary of the National League, who attended the recent schedule conference at French Lick Springs, reported that the Cubs and the White Sox would clash in five Sunday games at home next season. These are the only conflicts between the National and the American leagues.

VON HAESELER IS SEEKING LOST RIB

Famous Old German General Sees Service In Four Wars.

SEVENTY-EIGHT, STILL ACTIVE

Veteran of War With Denmark, War With Austria and War of 1870-1 Goes Back to Battlefields and Lends Valuable Aid In Directing Destinies of Army Operating In Belgium.

Berlin.—"Your majesty, in the war of 1870-1 I left a rib in France. Now I want to go back and get it."

Thus Count von Haeseler, "father of the modern German army," the sole surviving leader of the old school of militarism and now attached to the general staff of the German crown prince's army operating in Belgium, requested the German emperor to assign him to new duties on the outbreak of the war.

Von Haeseler is a great organizer and has done much to retain the principles as laid down by the elder Von Moltke, uncle of the present field marshal.

He belongs to an old Prussian house of the nobility which was ennobled more than two centuries ago. His name is Gottlieb Count von Haeseler, and he was born on Jan. 19, 1836. Completing his education, he was made lieutenant in the hussar regiment at the age of seventeen and soon attracted attention by his devotion to duty and his remarkable skill as a rider.

In the war against Denmark in 1864 he served with distinction and was rewarded with a promotion by the king.

COUNT VON HAESELER.

When the war against Austria began in 1866 he was with the army of the crown prince.

In the war of 1870-1 he distinguished himself upon many battlefields and was decorated with the iron cross of the second and then of the first class in 1873. Later he was given the order Pour le Merite.

He continued to take an active part in German military affairs until 1903, when he was raised to the rank of field marshal general, and having completed fifty years of distinguished service asked to be retired. As Kaiser Wilhelm did not wish to relinquish all claim on his services he appointed him lifelong member of the Prussian upper house of parliament, where he took an active part in all debates on military questions.

When the present war broke out he was one of the first volunteers to offer his services to the fatherland and, although seventy-eight years old, is now doing active duty at the front, sharing the responsibilities and devising strategic movements for the army of the crown prince operating against the allies' forces.

The following story tells of an interesting incident in connection with the army to which Count von Haeseler is attached:

Since the German occupation of Maubeuge the inhabitants have been much interested in a nameless young officer whom the Germans treat with the greatest deference. He is generally believed to be the kaiser's fourth son, Prince August William.

A complaint was raised by a townsman that the Germans had seized his wagon without payment, whereupon the young officer, who until then had been unnoticed, came forward and proffered a bond for the value, which the paymaster honored without demur.

Later another citizen expressed a wish to change 20,000 francs in five franc pieces for paper. Suddenly the same officer appeared, produced French notes to that amount and ordered a passing soldier to take the money to headquarters. The soldier obeyed almost reverently.

Finally, a German general visited the youth, who was quartered at the house of a local councilor, and the latter heard his guest say, "General, remember that I give orders, not requests to them."

The visitor then departed.

PAIN IN HUNGER A FANCY.

Chicago Professor Tells Scientists Starvation Is an Easy Death.

Chicago.—Death by starvation would be a painless one if—

The "if" was explained by Dr. A. J Carlson, assistant professor of physiology at the University of Chicago, in a lecture before the National Academy of Science. He asserted that the pangs of hunger are only imaginary to a great extent and that if one can succeed in fooling his stomach into "believing" it is full then to all practical purposes save that of nutrition it is full.

"If any one could keep his mind occupied about other things except his stomach while he was starving," said Dr. Carlson, "death by starvation would be about as painless a death as any one could hope to have."

Here are some of the ways he said the stomach could be fooled:

By chewing gum.

By holding a stick in the mouth.

By forgetting all about hunger.

By taking a drink of hot or cold water.

By becoming so frightened you don't care anything about meals.

By swallowing a small balloon and pulling it up again with a string.

The latter method is the one used by Dr. Carlson in conducting a series of experiments on himself, his assistant and a patient who has been fed through a tube inserted in his stomach for twenty-eight years. He used a machine called a manometer, with a small inflated balloon attached to a device for measuring the effort of the muscular action of the stomach on the balloon. He exhibited a chart and explained the wavy little lines to his audience.

FRENCHMAN WALKS 1,300 MILES TO WAR

Tells of Journey From Canadian Northwest to a Railroad.

New York. — Fernand Tromeur, a hunter and fur collector, with a line of traps running 150 miles north of Fort Providence on the Mackenzie river in the far northwest of Canada, arrived in New York and sailed for France the other day. He is a reservist in the French navy and goes to join his ship. He is twenty-nine years old.

So far away in the forests is Fort Providence that he did not hear of the war until it had been going on a month and a half. Then he started afoot and walked most of the way, 1,300 miles, he estimates, to the nearest railroad station.

"Eight years ago I went to Canada and became a fur trapper," he said. "At Fort Providence there is a tribe of Indians whose chief's name is Peter Squirrel. The only other white men besides myself are the company's two or three agents.

"I liked the life in the forest, got a government lot, built a log house and established my line of traps. It is a wild, cold country, but there is good money there, and my brother-in-law last winter gathered $16,000 worth of furs and sold them, but in the spring he found himself $600 in debt to the company.

"Peter Squirrel has a daughter, Magdalena, the prettiest Indian girl in the province. I was lonely and far away from my people. She was good to look upon and bright, and a good housekeeper. We were married a year ago. Then came word that my country was at war. I was far out on my line of traps and was making my way back to the cabin home, where I expected to find a baby when I arrived.

"Then, with the call to come home and fight ringing in my heart, I left. With blankets, a gun, bannock bread, flour and dried moose meat I started up the Mackenzie river toward the south until I met voyageurs paddling the way I wanted to go. They gave me lifts over some of the bad places, which I was grateful for, as I had 1,700 miles to walk to get to the nearest railroad station. Their lifts made my walking trip only 1,300, as I figure it out.

"It was 600 miles of walking to Fort Chipewyan, on Athabaska lake. The ice closed the river, and I had to walk this, following the windings of the river to Great Slave lake and then the Athabaska river to Fort Chipewyan.

"If I live I shall be back on the Mackenzie after the war, for I want to see that little fellow. My wife has taken him and gone home to her folks at Fort Smith, I expect. It is a wonderful country up there, and once the lure of the trapper's life gets into your blood you will be drawn back to it in spite of yourself."

LOST, TOOK "NATURE CURE."

Missing Woman Lived Six Weeks Alone in the Woods.

West Falmouth, Mass.— Declaring she had wandered alone in the woods for six weeks, living on acorns and checkerberries as a "nature cure," Miss Martha Palmer, who has been missing several months, has returned to civilization. She told Deputy Sheriff H. H. Lawrence, at whose home she stayed overnight, that she had regained her health and enjoyed her experience, but that the increasing cold of the nights had forced her to seek shelter.

Miss Palmer is about forty years of age. Since she disappeared, saying that she was going for a stroll in the woods, relatives have been unceasing in their search for her.

Future Histories With Records to Be Filled of Eventful 1914

War In Europe Makes Past Year a Most Notable One.

Many Forward Steps Were Taken on This Side of the Atlantic.

New York.—The war in Europe, the most titanic struggle between nations of the world in history, overshadows all other events of the last twelve months. This fight for supremacy, on the outcome of which hinges the fate of the strongest powers, has placed other events, which ordinarily would occupy pages in our history, in the background.

The landing of troops in Panama, the completion of the Panama canal, the changes in the fundamental principles of the currency law of the nation, the death of the pope, the election of his successor and the usual number of disasters and deaths of prominent persons added to the European fight, combine to make 1914 one of the most notable years in history.

GERMAN EMPEROR AND POPE BENEDICT XV. (TOP), EX-PRESIDENT HUERTA AND GENERAL FUNSTON (CENTER), COLONEL GOETHALS AND GEORGE STALLINGS, MANAGER OF BOSTON BRAVES (BELOW).

A brief history of the war to date follows:

July 23, Austria made demands on Servia for murder of Archduke Francis Ferdinand; 25, most of Austria's demands agreed to, but Servia refused an official investigation by Austria, Russia backs Servia; 26, Germany indicated she would support Austria; 28, Austria declared war on Servia; 31, Germany demanded that Russia cease mobilizing and proclaimed martial law.

Aug. 1, Germany declared war on Russia, France ordered mobilization; 4, German troops began attack on Liege; 5, England announced state of war with Germany for invading Belgium; President Wilson offered to mediate; 15, Japan sent ultimatum to Germany; 20, Germans captured Brussels, Antwerp became capital; 27, Germans burned Louvain; 28, British fleet won first naval battle near Helgoland.

Sept. 2, French government removed capital from Paris to Bordeaux; 5, battle of the Marne, ending in German retreat, begun; 12, German retreat halted at the Aisne; 20, Germans bombarded Rheims; 22, German submarine U-9, sank British cruisers Cressy, Aboukir and Hogue in the North sea; 28, Germans began attack on Antwerp, Russians advanced into Hungary.

Oct. 5, Belgian government moved to Ostend; 9, Antwerp occupied by Germans; 13, Belgian government moved to Havre, France; 16, British cruiser Hawke sunk by German submarine; 24, Germans defeated after ten day battle before Warsaw, Russia; 27, British Dreadnought Audacious sunk by mine; 29, Turkey entered war by making naval attack on Black sea Russian ports.

Nov. 1, Germans defeated British in naval battle off Chilean coast; 5, England and France declared war on Turkey, bombarding Dardanelles forts; 6, Tsingtao, German port in China, surrenders to Japanese; 10, German cruiser Emden, destroyer of commerce, captured; 23, the German naval base at Zeebrugge shelled by British warships; 26, 15,000 ton battleship Bulwark sunk by an explosion at Sheerness, England, costing 800 lives.

Dec. 8, in a naval action off Falkland islands, in the south Atlantic, Admiral Sturdee's British squadron defeated Admiral von Spee's German fleet, sinking the cruisers Nurnberg, Scharnhorst, Gneisenau and Leipzig, with a loss of 1,825 men to the vanquished.

The most daring naval action of the war occurred on Dec. 16, when a fleet of German cruisers slipped across the North sea under cover of darkness and at dawn bombarded Scarborough, Hartlepool and Whitby, killing several persons and destroying much property.

As the old year was passing out the German line was firmly intrenched in France and Belgium, severe attacks marking each day's fighting with little advantage for either side. In the western theater the Russians, Germans and Austrians were engaged in daily battles without decisive results. Cold weather had proved an added horror to the war.

Our trouble with Mexico dates from Feb. 3, when President Wilson lifted the embargo on arms. On April 10 several American sailors were arrested by Mexicans at Tampico. An apology was demanded and was not forthcoming. On April 20 President Wilson delivered a warlike message to congress asking for authority to use force in dealing with the Mexican situation. This granted, the fleet was dispatched to Vera Cruz, forces landed, and in the subsequent fighting nineteen American marines were killed and seventy wounded. On April 30, 5,000 soldiers under command of General Frederick Funston were landed at Vera Cruz.

On the same day the Mexican mediation congress, consisting of representatives of South American republics, met at Niagara Falls. Order was maintained at Vera Cruz by the American forces until they left on Nov. 23. In the meantime President Huerta had resigned the presidency, Provisional President Carbajal was installed on Aug. 10. After his rule of ten days General Venustiano Carranza became provisional president. On Dec. 3 he was replaced by President Gutierres.

In the political history of the United States radical changes were made in existing laws. On June 16 the repeal of the Panama canal tolls bill became a law. On Oct. 22 the war tax bill, designed to meet the emergency caused by the European war, became effective. On Nov. 16 the federal reserve banks were opened in compliance with the new currency law and released $160,000,000 for loans. Prior to this, however, on Nov. 3, the general elections were held and the Democratic majority in the lower house reduced to nineteen and that in the senate to ten.

Other important events were:

Jan. 30.—Old Dominion liner Monroe sunk by collision off the Virginia capes with a loss of forty-one lives.

Feb. 3.—Fire destroyed $1,000,000 worth of cotton at Clinton, Tex.

Feb. 4.—Peruvian revolutionists deposed President Guillermo Billinghurst. In an attack on the palace Prime Minister Varela was killed.

March 9.—In a fire which destroyed the Missouri Athletic club house, St. Louis, thirty persons perished.

March 12.—Loss of nearly $1,000,000 by the burning of the Columbia docks at Portland, Ore.

March 24.—Loss of $1,000,000 by the burning of a tobacco plant at Durham, N. C.

April 2.—In St. Augustine, Fla., courthouse and several hotels and residences destroyed by fire; loss $500,000 to $750,000.

April 7.—Treaty between United States and Colombia signed at Bogota.

April 13.—Adlai Ewing Stevenson, vice president of the United States, 1893-7, died in Chicago; aged seventy-nine.

April 20.—State troops and striking miners clashed at Trinidad, Colo.; twenty-five, including eleven women and two children, killed or burned to death.

April 26.—Fire in Salem, Mass., caused a loss of about $12,000,000; 20,000 people made homeless.

May 7.—Eleanor Wilson, daughter of the president, married in the White House to William Gibbs McAdoo.

May 11.—Memorial exercises to United States sailors killed at Vera Cruz at the Brooklyn navy yard; President Wilson took a leading part.

May 25.—By a majority vote of 77 the Irish home rule bill passed the British parliament.

May 28.—Steamship Empress of Ireland rammed and sunk by the collier Storstad off Father Point, gulf of St. Lawrence. Out of 1,478 on board, 462 were saved, 1,016 drowned.

July 1.—The use of liquor on shipboard in the United States navy was prohibited by order of the secretary of war.

July 2.—Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, noted figure in British politics and industries, died in London; aged seventy-eight.

July 6.—Mrs. Woodrow Wilson (Ellen Louise Axson), wife of President Wilson, died at the White House; aged fifty-one.

July 15.—Panama canal formally opened to commerce. Steamer Ancon passed from ocean to ocean in ten hours.

July 27.—Ulster war clash in the streets of Dublin between Nationalist volunteers and British troops in the Ulster war against home rule.

Aug. 13.—United States senate ratified peace treaties with Norway, Netherlands, Portugal, Switzerland, Denmark, Italy, Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Bolivia, Persia, Costa Rica, Venezuela, Uruguay, Argentine, Brazil and Chile.

Sept. 15.—Peace treaties between the United States and Great Britain, France, Spain and China signed at Washington.

Sept. 20.—Pope Pius X. (Giuseppe Sarto) died in the Vatican, Rome; aged seventy-nine.

Oct. 2.—Cardinal Giacomo Della Chiesa elected supreme pontiff to succeed Pius X.

Oct. 5.—Newly elected pope crowned at Rome as Benedict XV.

Oct. 15.—Boston Nationals defeated Philadelphia Americans in fourth and deciding game of the world's series. Score, 3 to 1.

Dec. 1.—Fire on board the steamship Mississippi destroyed art objects in transit from Europe valued at $1,000,000.

Dec. 9.—Nearly the whole of Thomas A. Edison's plant in West Orange, N. J., destroyed by fire; loss $7,000,000.

Dec. 10.—Sereno E. Payne, noted congressman, author of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill, died in Washington, aged seventy-one.

NAVY NEEDS 200 AIR CRAFT.

Chief of Aeronautical Bureau Tells of Their Value In War.

Washington.—Captain Mark L. Bristol, chief of the aeronautical bureau of the navy department, declared that the navy needs 200 air craft, 100 for active service and 100 to be held in reserve.

"It would require an appropriation of $2,000,000 to bring the aeronautical branch of the navy up to the proper standard of efficiency," Captain Bristol says.

"The air navy of the United States," said he, "must consist of aeroplanes, semirigid or nonrigid airships—the destroyer, cruiser and battleships of the air, respectively. The aeroplane will be used for scouting to discover the enemy's fleet, especially submarines and mines, and to attack the dirigibles and aeroplanes of the enemy.

"It is the torpedo boat of the air against the airship cruisers and battleships. Having discovered the submarines and mines, it directs the air cruisers to attack these craft, and at the same time protects the cruisers from the enemy's air craft. The air cruisers also will lay mines, probably will be used to drop aerial torpedoes on the surface ships of the enemy and be utilized over land for reconnoissance and dropping bombs.

"The uses to which air craft can be put in war will be better known after the European war. It seems that the air navy will be just as essential a part of the country's fighting force as the battleships and submarines.

"To be successful against any enemy the country must have command of the air the same as command of the sea.

"Any nation that has suitable air craft could detect submarines. The aeroplane can see submarines and mines very plainly and guide the dirigible to them, which can descend close to the water and drop high explosives to explode the mines or destroy the submarines. We can pick up the mines at their usual depth, even follow the anchor line of the mine down to a considerable depth below the mine."

ONE RUSSIAN TOOK NINETEEN PRISONERS

Austrians Surrendered as He Called to Imaginary Comrades.

Paris.—How Private Lavine of the Russian army distinguished himself near Lublin by capturing single handed nineteen Austrian soldiers is told in a letter received here.

Lavine had wandered off from his patrol to have a look round in a neighboring wood on his own hook. He had just entered the wood when he came upon a squad of Austrians. Undismayed, he promptly resorted to a typical Cossack ruse. Looking back, he beckoned to some imaginary comrades and shouted: "Come here! This way! Here they are."

The Austrians followed the movements of his hands with the greatest excitement. Believing he was the captain of a full company, they promptly decided to surrender. Lavine accordingly dismounted and advanced, sword in one hand and revolver in the other. He ordered them to throw down their rifles, which they did, and then directed them to march ahead of him. He succeeded in bringing back to his station the entire bag of sixteen soldiers and three officers without firing a shot.

Since the outbreak of the war Paris has been flooded with advertisements of prophets, palmists, card seers and somnambulists who are equally prepared to reassure anxious reservists going to the front or state the exact date of the conclusion of hostilities or the arrival of the kaiser at St. Helena.

A huge placard placed above the picture of a prophetess in a chair beside an outlying boulevard runs thus:

"Mme. Lea, a graduate card seer, informs her clients about the duration of the war, the number of victims and the final fate of the German emperor. Price, 10 centimes (2 cents)."

When the French retook one of the towns on the east of the allies' field of operations a number of prisoners captured were seen to be wearing tricolor cockades in their helmets, although otherwise clad in German uniforms.

"Why do you wear our colors?" asked the officer.

"We come from upper Alsace," was the reply, "and we don't want to be Germans."

"Do you want to become French again?" queried the officer.

"No," they said, "we are already French." Then they threw aside their helmets and tunics, shouting "Vive la France! A bas le Prusse!" much to the surprise of the other German prisoners.

BLUEJAYS GATHER CROP.

Birds Trained by Farmer to Harvest Pecans.

St. Louis.—Joshua Powers, a farmer of Jerseyville, Ill., who is raising pecans for the market, exhibited to a friend the most remarkable system of gathering his crop ever seen in this section. While hunting with Powers Link Dodson, the friend, noticed starch boxes tacked to all the pecan trees.

"What's the idea?" he asked.

"Watch," said Powers. In a few minutes some bluejays appeared with nuts, which they placed in the boxes.

"I've trained 'em," said Powers. "They put in a lot of acorns, but it's easier to sort them than to gather."

PAY THE MILITIA, OFFICER ADVISES

General O'Ryan Says Each Man Should Be Paid For Drills.

FAVORS A LARGE INCREASE.

Points to Past Experiences and Says That United States Should Have Trained Men Ready For Any Emergency at Any Minute—Wants Stricter Control Over Militia.

New York.—The plans of the War college at Washington to increase the fighting forces of the United States to 500,000 men were generally approved by officers of the national guard.

Among those who discussed it was Major General John F. O'Ryan of the national guard of New York state, regarded as one of the best authorities on state military affairs. He said that if the big army was to be developed successfully certain elementary principles must be followed, among them:

Development in all the states of the various branches of the service—artillery, cavalry, infantry, engineer and signal corps—in proper proportions.

Provision by the federal government of a complete equipment for the enlarged service.

Payment of a small sum to enlisted men for each drill.

"The proposition to increase the national guard to 500,000 men means nothing in the way of military assets," General O'Ryan said, "unless these 500,000 men are to be soldiers, clothed, armed, equipped, disciplined and trained as such and their relations to the federal government established and fixed by sound legislation.

GENERAL JOHN F. O'RYAN.

"This country has no military policy. The weakness of our method of waging war was well illustrated in 1898.

"Our activities consisted in sending three expeditionary forces, one to Cuba, one to the Philippines and one to Porto Rico. In Porto Rico no battles were fought. In the Philippines our forces took the city of Manila without serious opposition. In Cuba but one engagement—namely, that of San Juan—was fought. Yet the latter engagement and the military operations connected with it resulted in practical demoralization of the army which constituted that expeditionary force.

"The militia of the country under existing plans consists of twelve divisions. A division numbers 22,000 men, so that the militia would provide in time of war a force of 264,000 men. These divisions, however, other than those of New York and Pennsylvania, exist on paper only. The auxiliary arms (cavalry, artillery, engineers, signal, sanitary, etc.) with few exceptions do not exist. They are not divisions in any tactical sense.

"The present status of the organized militia is so contrary to all military principles that existing plans of the war department do not contemplate the use of the militia as such in time of war but the organization at the outbreak of war of a volunteer army to be made up, it is hoped, largely of the organized militia. In other words, all the preparation and training now going on in the militia throughout the United States are being carried on with the knowledge that at the outbreak of war the militia organizations are to be discarded and a new force is to be created at that time and substituted in their place."

General O'Ryan said there was in congress a bill pending to provide pay for the drill of militiamen which would increase the cost per man about $60 a year, but would make the original cost, now less than $100, profitable. It would give the United States a proper control over the militia.

General O'Ryan said that New York state has at present 17,000 well equipped men, representing every branch of the service. The majority of these regiments would be able to take the field in two months' time.

PARCEL POST RECORD BROKE

Postmaster Conley and His Efficient Force Receiving Congratulations From All Sides

Postmaster Peter T. Conley states that the parcel post record at the Fulton post office was broken during the past three days. No less than 20,000 parcels were handled up until 9 o'clock last night by the local force and three extra rigs were delivering.

Great credit is due Postmaster Conley and his efficient force for the admirable manner in which they handled the rush of work.

An enormous amount of first-class mail passed through this office which consisted mainly of postal cards; people exchanging Christmas greetings in this form.

Five extra clerks were on duty during the past few days and the entire force has been working overtime. The rush of business continued throughout today.

All of the rural carriers went out heavily laden and they experienced great difficulty in getting over the unbroken roads. Instead of returning at 3 o'clock as they usually do several of them did not get back until after seven in the evening.

Assistant Postmaster, J. T. Hargreave was busy today cleaning up the Christmas packages. Most of the articles that passed through the office were small and considerable time was consumed in routing them.

The express companies did an enormous amount of business yesterday and extra rigs were on the run all day. They handled all the heavy goods that could not be shipped by parcel post.

ADVERTISING TALKS.

The Great Medium is the Newspaper

Dana H. Howard, general publicity agent of the Commonwealth Edison Co., Chicago says

"Our opinion of newspaper advertising is somewhat expressed by the fact that in the necessary curtailment of our advertising, in view of adverse financial conditions of late, our newspaper advertising was probably the least curtailed of any forms of advertising which we are at the present time employing.

"We use display space in all of the dailies in Chicago, covering those printed in foreign languages, as well as the leading English dailies. In addition to these, we use quite a number of dailies and weeklies in cities contiguous to Chicago.

"We do not know of any better medium that can be employed by a public service corporation than the daily press.

"We have merchandise to be sold, the same as John Wanamaker or Marshall Field & Co. and similar sales plans have to be adopted in order to enable us to market our goods to the best possible advantage. Of course, we represent only one department of a large store such as Field's, in that we only sell electrical merchandise. For this reason we do not utilize as much display space in the daily press as do the large mercantile stores. However, we do know that the advertising which we do is largely responsible for the great increase in our business which we notice year after year.

"We employ nearly every form of effective publicity—street cars, billboards, electric display signs, direct-by-mail literature, circulars, etc. exhibits and salesmen—but the greatest of all of these we can venture to say, is newspaper advertising, by means of which we reach the greatest number of people in the shortest possible time at a comparatively low cost per reader.

"We are side-stepping all of the so-called 'specials' and are devoting our time, money and energy to a consistent, persistent and intelligent newspaper campaign, calling attention to every feature of our electric service."

CHAUNCEY BALDWIN.

Chauncey Baldwin, 87, died Thursday evening at the home of his son, F. A. Baldwin, 610 Rochester st. Mr. Baldwin was born in Volney in 1827 and he moved to this city a year ago. The funeral will be held Monday at 11 a. m. The Rev. George Ward of Mt. Pleasant will officiate.

Surviving are three children, J. C. Baldwin of Hastings, this county; F. A. Baldwin, this city, and Mrs. M. James of Newark, N. J.

Austria Denies Peace Report

By Steven Burnett.

Vienna, via Amsterdam and Berlin, Dec. 26.—"Austria is not seeking peace. She sees no reason for seeking peace. The Germanic nations are pledged to act together in making war and in making peace. Reports that Austria intends to desert her ally are base lies."

In these words Count Leopold Berchtold, foreign minister and head of the Austro-Hungarian cabinet today answered the rumors circulated in the newspapers of France and England that his government was trying to effect peace with Russia and Servia.

"The guarded statements issued in St. Petersburg," he continued, "admit, though not in so many words, that the Russians in Galicia are being forced back. The situation in the South is causing no anxiety here. After whipping the Servians we withdrew troops from that fighting zone, for service in Galicia.

"All preparations for a withdrawal of our remaining forces in Servia in case they were threatened by superior numbers had been made.

"The withdrawal was effected in good order.

"In Poland the Austro-German forces are co-operating in full harmony and with the successful results. The stories inspired by our enemies that there has been friction between our leaders and those of Germany are just as false as are the stories that we are seeking peace for Austria alone.

"Austria and Germany did not want this war. We had to defend ourselves against the ever-increasing encroachment of Russia and her minions. We are doing so and shall continue to do so. We shall not accept peace with dishonor.

"The Austrian and German armies, I repeat, are operating in harmony. Our respective governments are united as to the furtherance of our national aims."

When asked how long he thought the war would last, Count Bertchodt said: "That is a question that no man can answer, but we are resolved to make ourselves secure from future attacks."

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Copenhagen, Dec. 26.—A German squadron of considerable size is reported to have sailed out into the North Sea early today, proceeding toward the coast of England to give battle to the British fleet.

London, Eng. Dec. 26.—A German aviator tried to attack the British naval base at Shernuun. He is believed to have perished. The lighthouse keeper in the North Sea off the mouth of the Thames river reported today that he had seen an aeroplane fall into the water about a mile from his coast about noon today.

Gunners who fired at the German flier think that they struck the machine.

Paris, Dec. 26.—Piquet is the favorite diversion of the French troops in the trenches along the battle line. Some remarkable games are played. Many of the contests are broken off suddenly by the bursting a shrapnel in or near the trenches. Not infrequently a game ends in a "dead" hand when some unfortunate player "passes out" forever while holding the winning cards.

Athens, Dec. 26.—Anticipating that the allies will be able to force the Dardanelles and attack Constantinople itself, the Turks have transported heavy guns from Adrianople to San Stephano and Kadikoi, according to advices received here. From these two points the Turks will make their final fight against attempts to enter the Golden Horn.

Carranza Flees From Vera Cruz

By Lewis T. Matson.

El Paso, Tex., Dec. 26.—Dispatches received here from two independent sources in Mexico City carry reports that Gen. Venustiano Carranza has fled from Vera Cruz and that negotiations are being conducted for the surrender of that port to the forces of Gen. Villa.

They state that in a battle fought Friday morning just west of Vera Cruz the Carranzo troops were forced to fall back and that larfie numbers of them surrendered to the Villaistas under the pledge that their lives would be spared.

The two dispatches differ as to the manner of General Carranza's flight. One says that he fled south from Vera Cruz, apparently with the intention of going to Puerta Mexico; the other declares he went aboard a vessel that had been kept in the harbor of Vera Cruz to serve as his refuge.

FEAR PHILLIPINE UPRISING.

Washington, Dec. 26.—Administration officials today are anxiously awaiting a reply to the cablegram sent by Brig. Gen. Frank McIntyre of the Bureau of Insular affairs of the war department to Gov. Gen. Francis Burton Harrison of the Phillipine Islands, yesterday inquiring as to the true condition of affairs in the Far Eastern archipelago. Despite the press dispatches reporting grave disturbances due to discontent among the natives, Government advices having reported everything in the islands to be serene. It is stated, however, that officials reluctantly admit that native agitators of a sinister type have been more active recently than at any time since the Philippine insurrection.

Against New Year's Extravagance.

There will be no all night drinking bouts in Rochester this New Year's eve. Mayor Edgerton put the kibosh on that idea when he refused to issue all night licenses. The Powers, Seneca, Rochester, Whitcomb, Eggleston, Hofbrauhaus and London's were the places refused the licenses. Mayor Edgerton's letter accompanying the refusal gives one an idea of the high caliber of the man whom the Republicans of Rochester have elected to their highest office year after year. This is a paragraph from it: "In view of the fact that nearly all Europe is engaged in the most sanguinary war in history and the appeals for help which come to us from across the seas the general industrial depression in our own country and the consequent widespread distress, and the necessity of providing relief for hundreds of our own citizens who have never before asked for assistance, it seems to me a most inopportune time for extravagance and revelry."

The Quirk.

Today the classic five-reel photo play, "Othello," one of the famous Kleine productions and of the same class as "Quo Vadis," and "Pompeii" in quality, will be the feature attraction. Tomorrow, the first authentic moving pictures of the European armies in action in four full reels. Tonight and tomorrow 5c and 10c.

Colonel Ruppert thinks that Charlie Faust is the funniest man in baseball, and he may make an effort to get him for the Yankees.

The latest report is that Bill Donovan is not to manage the Yankees after all. Perhaps that's what makes him "Wild."

ANNOUNCEMENT

OF TWO—YES THREE, INTERESTING FEATURES WE HAVE PLANNED FOR "TIMES" READERS

The Evening Times takes pleasure in announcing at this time a few of the many features it has planned for its readers for the immediate future. The editor will confess that to be able to announce some of them at so early a date is due to—well to a bit of good fortune.

Firstly, commencing next Saturday we will inaugurate a column on the editorial page to appear at least once a week under the running head of "Musings from the Old Arm Chair." Stealing a bit of the introductory installment, we will use it as an explanation:

"So I propose to treat of Fulton's past as the editor of the "Times" will so ably handle affairs concerning the city's present and future. To the many who have lived and grown up here, whose fathers have lived here perhaps, the city's past history and the achievement of those who have gone before lies as a noble heritage close to their hearts. Many of these Musings will be of tender interest." In other words, musings largely but not entirely of a historical or biographical nature.

Secondly—for the children, some of whom will form the citizenship of the Fulton of tomorrow we have another and entirely dissimilar announcement, "The Children's Hour." Another department will appear commencing with Monday to run each Monday, Wednesday and Friday. Some unique little contests and occasionally a chance to contribute like some of their elders to help make the "Times" (for we want you to think of this paper as still the "Times" only a larger and better one) what we fondly hope to—a real community affair.

Thirdly—and this is announced so that any of you who object to having your name printed in the "Times" can arrange to move out of town. As often as possible we are going to spring a bit of surprise on some one or other of you.

Now we are through for today.

FRENCH TROOPS THREATEN METZ; SOLDIERS FROZEN

Aeroplanes Driven Back by German Guns; Russians Gain 40 Miles; French Lose at Sea

Special to The Evening Times

Paris, Dec. 28.—Three of the forts in the outer ring defending Metz on the southwest are being violently bombarded by the French, according to advices from the eastern end of the battle front, and German attacks against the French lines near Preny have been repulsed with severe losses. The German works under artillery fire are Fort Kronprinz, lying north of Dornot, about a mile west of the Moselle river; Port Graf Haeseler, lying on the east of the Moselle, and Fort St. Blaise, lying about two miles south of Fort Graf Haeseler.

French aeroplanes, which flew over the German lines to establish the artillery range, were subjected to a hot fire from the German high angle guns and compelled to retreat into the French lines.

It is indicated that the French may try to isolate Metz and reduce it by cutting it off from supplies. It would be necessary first, however, to clear the Moselle valley, and to do this the forts in question must be silenced.

Heavy cannonading is reported from West Flanders, the district east of Amiens, and the Aaisne. The French attacks in Upper Alsace, Lorraine and the district immediately east of the Meuse have become so vigorous that the German commanders there are doubtless demanding more men to meet the assaults. The weather between the Aisne line and the Nosplle has been very cold, especially in the Vosges mountains and the soldiers fighting there are subjected to terrible hardships.

In numerous instances, wounded soldiers have frozen to death upon the battlefield before they could be picked up by the Red Cross men.

A squadron of British and French warships has been sighted off the Belgian coast east of Nieuport.

Special to The Evening Times

Vienna, Via Berlin and Amsterdam, Dec. 28.—An official report from the Austrian general staff says that the Austrian troops in Galicia had been driven back by the Russians along a forty mile from from Rymanow to Tuchow, [illegible], that land and sea attacks made upon Cattaro by Montenegrin troops and by the French fleet have been unsuccessful.

The official report follows: "The situation in the Carpathians is unchanged. Our forces in the Galician forelands of the Carpathians have withdrawn a little before the Russian offenders along the front from Rymanow to Tucshow.

(This line runs from Northwest to southeast, from a point south of Tarnow on the Biala river to Tucshok, about 41 miles southwest of Przemsyl on the Tabot river.)

"The enemy's attacks on the lower Dunajec and lower Nida have failed. The battles near Tomaszow (in Poland) continue. In the Balkans quiet still reigns.

"All the territory of the monarchy with the exception of the unimportant frontier regions of Bosnia, Herzegonevia and Southern Dalmatia is clear of enemies, even a strip of land between Spitza and Budua, which was occupied by the Montenegrins at the beginning of the war.

"East of Trebinje there are some Montenegrin divisions on the Herzegonovia frontier and there are some Servian forces east of the line, Drina-Fotcha-Vishegrad, who have not repeated their attacks.

"The Montenegrins' attack on Boche di Cattaro have failed and they have been forced to discontinue firing. A repeated bombardment of the Cattaro coast fortresses by the French fleet has been unsuccessful."

Third Plot Against Republican China

Shanghai, Dec. 28.—Another conspiracy against the republican government of China and President Yuan Shi-Kai has been discovered and numerous arrests are being made in Pekin. The plot, which is alleged to have been hatched in Japan, aimed to depose President Yuan Shi-Kai, turn the country into a constitutional monarchy and place a prince regent upon the throne until Emperor Hsuan-Tung attains his twentieth year. The Japanese government and agents of the Russian government are reported to be involved.

This is the third plot against the Chinese republican government discovered in less than a year, and the latest conspiracy is evidently related to the Cabal, which was put down in October last.

WEATHER FORECAST

Cloudy to-night and Tuesday; probably becoming [illegible] Tuesday. Moderate, south t[illegible]st winds.

Turks Sank Two Mine Layers

Constantinople, via Berlin and Amsterdam, Dec. 28.—The Turkish fleet has successfully engaged Russian naval forces in the Black sea, it was officially announced to-day. Two Russian mine layers were sunk, the battleship Rostislav was attacked and the Russian fleet fled to Sebastopol.

"The Turkish fleet sailed through the Black sea and returned undamaged," says the official announcement. "One of our warships met a Russian fleet of seventeen units and attacked them. It bombarded the line ship Rostislav and sank two mine layers, capturing two officers and thirty marines.

"Other parts of our fleet successfully bombarded Batoum on Dec. 25th. Two of our ships tried to force the Russian fleet into battle, but the enemy preferred to flee to Sebastapol. We continue our victorous advance in the Caucasus."

WAR AVERTED IN NOVEMBER

Cruiser North Carolina Cleared Decks For Action During Her Visit to Turkey

New York, Dec. 28.—The U. S. cruiser North Carolina was cleared for [illegible] during her visit there in November. All preparations were made to shell the town. Five hundred men were fully equipped for shore duty. The president of the American college was given a set of signals by which he could call for help. These conditions prevailed for three days, but at the end of that time the tense situation became lessened.

Yet how near the North Carolina came to firing and precipitating war with Turkey was learned to-day when four naval officers returned on the liner Finland after being relieved from duty on the cruiser, which is still in the eastern Mediterranean protecting Christians, including Americans, in Turkey.

Naval officers are: Commander Mugtin, Lt. Ballinger, Ensign Paphart and Lt. C. Sanfley. These four men were in a party that carried American gold to Paris. After delivering the money they sailed with the North Carolina for Turkey.

GETTING AT CANNON

Terre Haute, Ind Dec. 28.—The long arm of the federal court which had caused the indictment of 127 men here and the arrest of almost every important official of the city, including the mayor, sheriff and circuit court judge, promised to-day to reach across the State line into Illinois and question the legality of votes cast for "Uncle Joe" Cannon last November. [illegible] to-day to [illegible] before the grand jury that not only did thirty-one floaters from Paris, Ill., come into Indiana and vote at $5 a head, but that no fewer than 700 of them were bought by some one representing the Republican machine and cast fraudulent votes for Cannon.

"The Republicans had a conspiracy of their own," said United States District Attorney Frank C. Bailey to-day. "When the grand jury meets again on Jan. 4th we are going to hear all about the Republicans.

PRESIDENT IS 58

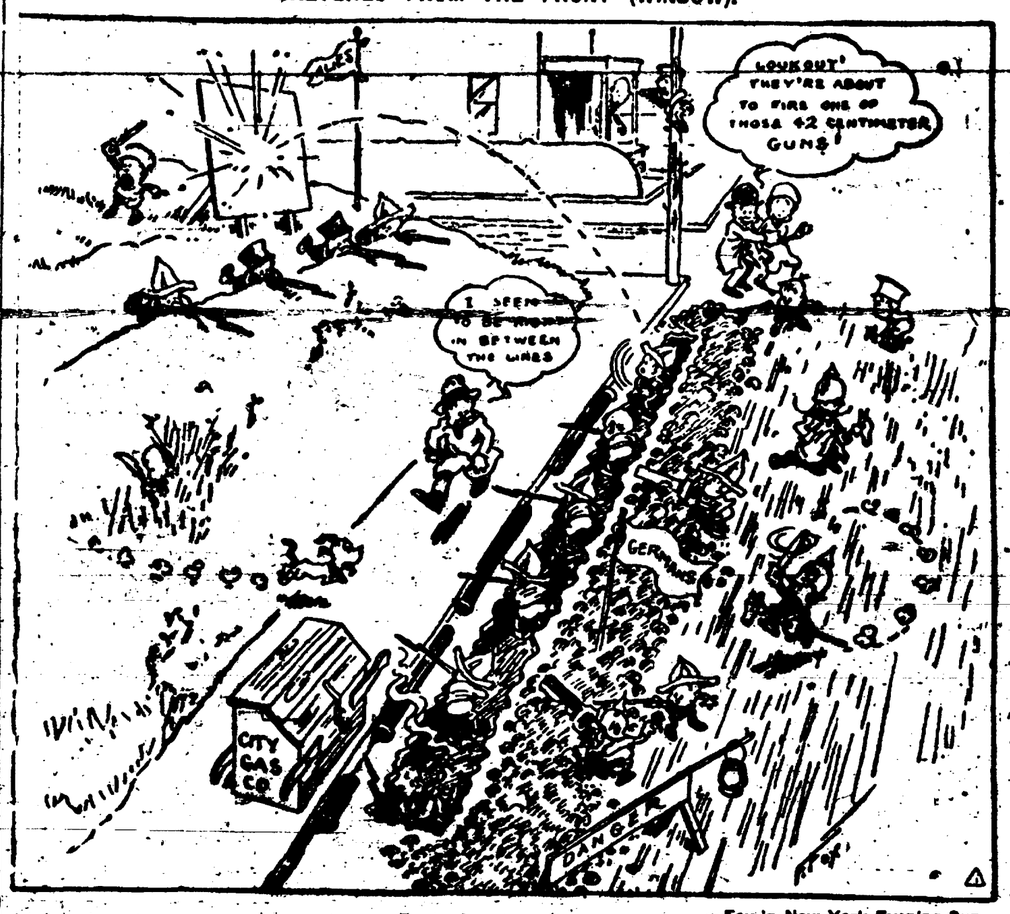
Washington, Dec. 28.—Congratulatory messages from all parts of the world were received to-day by President Wilson who reached the 58th milestone in his journey through life.

Save for a reunion with the members of his immediate family the occasion was marked by no special observance. Miss Margaret Wilson and Mrs. Francis Howes Sayre, his daughters, spent the day with the President and several relatives were also at the White House.

The President spent the morning hours in his office transacting routine business, but after noon he gave his entire time to his family.

$100,000 FIRE.

Hoboken, Dec. 28.—More than 100 men and women were carried to safety to-day by firemen in a fire which entirely destroyed the American hotel and which for several hours threatened the Lyric theater and the Zenith hotel. Entire fire department fought the blaze. Only a continuous wall of water between the theater and the burning hotel saved the theater and the Zenith hotel. Loss more than $100,000.



WHITMAN'S SUCCESSOR

New York, Dec. 28.—Gov.-Elect Whitman announced to-day that his chief assistant, Charles A. Perkins, will become district-attorney of New York county when Mr. Whitman takes up his duties of office. Mr. Perkins became first assistant district-attorney when Frank Moss retired from that position.

Galicia Being Swept Clear of German Soldiers

Special to The Evening Times

Petrograd, Dec. 28.—Under the eyes of Emperor Nicholas the Russian armies in Poland are taking the offensive all along the line. The hardest fighting is along the Pilica river, where both Germans and Russians are making attacks and counter attacks. The battle here extends from Tomaszow to Luboez.

The Germans have made their greatest effort to cross the Pilica at Inowlodz. Their losses have been severe. In repulsing the fourth attack the Russians took 850 prisoners.

Along the Bzura river the Russian artillery has driven the Germans from their trenches on the west bank.

The fighting in Galicia is proceeding with marked gains for the Russians. After thrusting the Austrians back to the Biala river the Czar's troops crossed that stream and reached the Dunajec. They have re-occupied Tarnow, which they were forced to yield before numercially superior forces of the enemy and are now moving up the Vistula valley toward Cracow, their right flank protected by the forces along the Nija river and on the left bank of the Vistula.

Semi-official dispatches from Lemburg state that the Russian campaign in Galicia is now approaching the victorious climax and that in the operations of the last ten days the Russians have taken 42,000 prisoners. A fourth sortie by the garrison at Przemysl has been repulsed.

The recapture of Tarnow is taken by the military experts here to mean that the advance on Cracow is now to continue without further interruption. They believe that the Austrians' power of resistance has been finally broken.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Calais, France, Dec. 27.—(Delayed in transmission).—German artillery bombarded Furnes violently this afternoon. Many houses were wrecked. Two shells struck the church at St. Walburga and set it on fire, but the flames were extinguished by Belgian soldiers.

The church of St. Walburga was designed at the beginning of the fourteenth century and adjoins the belfry of Furnes, whose spire was built in 1624. The Belgian military headquarters have been at Furnes for several weeks.

Athens, Dec. 28.—It is reported here that immediately after the departure of Enver Pasha from Constantinople a revolt broke out in the Turkish capital against the young Turks and the Germans. Numerous arrests are said to have been made in street riots precipitated by mobs demanding that the alliance with Germany and Austria be broken.

London, Dec. 28.—England is becoming so full of wounded soldiers that some who have become badly disabled that they cannot re-enter the service are being sent to South Africa for the convalescent period.

London, Dec. 28.—Among the British troops that will go to the front early in 1915 is a battalion of Bantams from Birkenhead. The men are all undersized and were passed over by the recruiting agents in the early stages of the war because they were too short in stature. The new battalion was suggested by Alfred Bigland, M. P., and most of the men are not over five feet in height.

Petrograd, Dec. 28.—Enver Pasha, Turkish minister of war, has arrived in Armenia to [illegible] Ottoman troops against the Russia[illegible] It is announced [illegible] Turks have been driven in the region [illegible]instehovich, [illegible]ian Black sea fleet co-operating with t[illegible] forces in bom[illegible] the enemy's positions.

BRITISH SHOT TWO AMERICANS

Canadian Soldiers Killed and Wounded Buffalo Hunters on Niagara Frontier

Buffalo, Dec. 28.—Walter Smith of this city, was instantly killed and Charles Dorlach, also of this city, was seriously wounded when Canadian soldiers stationed along the Niagara river fired at them while they were hunting along the river this morning. The shooting occurred at a point 500 feet south of the ferry landing shortly after 10 o'clock. Doriach is at the General hospital in a critical condition. Chief of Police Mains of Niagara Falls, Ontario, will conduct a rigid investigation to determine why the soldiers assumed authority to deal with light offenders against the Canadian game laws. There is some question as to the responsibility.

The soldiers assert that they were ordered to shoot over the heads of the men when they refuse to obey orders. Smith's body is held at Fort Erie.

Members of a company of soldiers insist the shots were fired to frighten a company of hunters.

ALLIES MAKE GAINS

Paris, Dec. 28.—Both gains and reverses for the Allies are announced in an official statement issued here this afternoon. It states that west of Lombartzyze the French have gained a foothold among the sand dunes along the coast on which the Germans have established their line of defense, but to the south of Ypres they have lost part of a trench. Farther south the Allies have offset this minor loss by taking 800 yards of the first line trenches held by Germans.

BUILDINGS DYNAMITED

Hymera, Indiana, Dec. 28.—Dynamiters to-day wrecked three buildings and damaged the fort in a serious attack by setting bombs. The police at once began hunting for the enemies of Walter Wilkins, a saloonkeeper, who owned one of the wrecked buildings. Another saloon and a meat market were practically demolished. The damage exceeds $20,000.

"It's a newsy little sheet, and I can see there's a good prospect for The Evening Times becoming a success"—Clinton Hulett (of Hulett-Taft Co.-

An Important Change

Commencing with the Jan. 4 issue The Times' six-cent-a-week plan will be withdrawn and in its place will be established a new subscription rate.

Notice on today's first page the $3.00 a year rate; 25 cents a month rate (prepaid) calling for delivery by carrier.

When subscribers care to pay carriers at the close of the week The Times will make a seven-cent weekly rate. The reason for this change of rate lies in the fact that unfavorable weather conditions at this season of the year makes impracticable the six-cent rate.

There is no longer a doubt about the future of Fulton's new daily paper, which combines so many possibilities for helpfulness to this entire community. Abounding evidence shows that the people of the city and vicinity are eager to support the venture. For this we are grateful, recognizing at the same time that tangible assets are essential to the success of any undertaking. With the latter point in view The Evening Times wishes to impress upon its readers' minds that the slight increase in rates is one of its essentialities; therefore, in becoming a subscriber for the evening edition, we make it a condition that all subscriptions not paid for in advance until the end of 1915 shall be at the rate of $3.25. Deferred monthly payments will be collected at the rate of 28 cents.

YOUR CITY.

In a recent issue one of the serious minded daily newspapers of the country printed a few sensible remarks relative to citizenship; to affairs relating to our personal responsibilities in the community in which one may live.

The essence of the particular editorial was that one's activity, or inactivity, as the case may be, should prove a fair index of character, or the lack of character. While this comment is not intended as an endorsement of another paper's sentiments, the privilege is reserved to raise a voice for the cardinal principle for which The Evening Times stands.

Fulton has made remarkable strides forward in recent years. The city is destined to make still more, but credit, when awarded for whatever achievement may be obtained, should go to the large number of women and men who shall have earned it.

There are laggards in every community. Fulton shall become just what its people want it to become. It is up to every one of us to make or break, to do or leave undone, the things that shall place this city ahead by feet instead of inches of every town in the Empire State.

Fulton possesses so very many natural possibilities that it appears to The Times that now is the most opportune time for pulling all together. We are about to enter upon a new year. With this in mind, why not spend just a few moments in retrospect, deciding whether or not there has been anything lacking in our efforts, and what chance for improvement there is.

Let us ask ourselves as well whether public opinion, public improvements, progress and justice in local matters can be advanced by giving support to out-of-town institutions—if that support means the withholding of support for a local medium of the same nature.

In taking the retrospective view let us remember that history is mostly a record of fights. Now that a business condition confronts the people of Fulton, why not make of it a record of boosts?

Business sets people to work and pays them what they are worth. And this is one of Fulton's needs.

Will the reader mention another?

FIRST FRUITS OF DEMOCRATIC POLICY IN THE PHILIPPINES.

It is difficult to determine the precise gravity of the Philippine uprisings at this distance. Governor Harrison persists in denying the existence of what various responsible correspondents have seen with their own eyes, and there is thus no official source of information. The country must get at the truth as best it can. It certainly cannot wait until an official graciously consents to lift the curtain and make public facts which it is every one's right and duty to know.

The insurrecion in the neighborhood of Manila seems to have been easily suppressed, and there is no occasion for alarmist views of what may follow. The army is able and willing to act, and the possibility of widespread consequences need not now be considered. The really significant feature of the outbreak is its location in or near Manila. These are not Moros, living in a state of savagery, but citizens of the most civilized portion of the islands who have thus conspired. The affront to Mr. Harrison's sentimental administration comes from the very section of the Fillipinos upon whom the burden of self-government, when granted, would principally fall.

It is not hard to surmise the psychology of unrest which lies behind this ill-tempered and impolitic revolt. The policy which Mr. Harrison has pursued at President Wilson's direction is perfectly calculated to awaken every defiance. The American people have ceased to be a vigorous and keen-eyed parent; we have become, in Filipino eyes, blind and indulgent, anxious only to abandon our responsibilities and turn our charges adrift with a few kind words. The passage of the Jones bill through the House and its progress in the Senate are just so many signs to patriots of the Ricarte school that America can and should be flouted.

The significance of these uprisings to Congress will scarcely be overlooked. The more the administration seeks to minimize them the more it is borne in that here is grave matter for debate, matter seriously affecting a section of foreign policy upon which the administration has sought to lay down the right with scant hearing of the facts. The Senate is to be congratulated on its present hearings, and the fuller and wider their character the better for the country. In the course of them it would not be without interest for the Senate to inquire by what right an official of the United States seeks to cut off his countrymen from the facts.—New York Tribune.

Opinions

Free-Trade in Corn and Wheat.

During July, 1913, when the Payne protective tariff law was in force and corn was protected by a Tariff duty of fifteen cents a bushel, the imports of corn amounted to 2,007 bushels. During July, 1914, with the Underwood Free-Trade law was in force, and corn on the free list, the imports of corn amounted to 1,764,575 bushels.

During July 1913, when wheat was protected by a tariff duty of twenty-five cents a bushel, the imports of wheat amounted to 4,618 bushels, while in July 1914, with wheat on the free list, the imports of wheat amounted to 45,159 bushels.

Is there any wonder that up to the outbreak of the European war the price of farm products was declining, and does the farmer need a better example of the effect Free-Trade has on the product of the farm?—Economist.

Unconcerned.

Grand Admiral von Tirpitz, the German Minister of Marine, asks: "What will America say if Germany declares submarine war on all enemy merchant ships?" Why should America be expected to say anything? Germany has already been making submarine war on British and French merchant ships, several of which have been torpedoed by German submarines. Provided such warfare does not interfere with the lawful rights of American citizens, it concerns the United States no more than did the exploits of commerce-raiders like the Emden and Karlsruhe. As for the grand admiral's boast that Germany can bottle England up and "torpedo every English or allies' ship which nears any harbor in Great Britain, thereby cutting off large food supplies," we doubt if it will cause much anxiety in London. Thus far Germany has inflicted no serious damage upon the British merchant marine as a whole. The German navy and the German merchant marine are both bottled up, and until British sea power can be disposed of it is fantastic for any German to think about starving Great Britain by submarine raids. It may be true, as Von Tirpitz declares, that "Britain's domination of the sea was originally founded on piracy," but whether founded on piracy or the Ten Commandments, it is a very real domination, and Grand Admiral von Tirpitz wisely refuses to challenge it in an open fight.—New York World.

Badly Hurt by Free Trade.

The Elgin Dairy Report mentions the business of condensed milk as one which is badly hurt by the admission of foreign goods free of duty, saying: "The new Tariff has put milk upon the free list, whereas formerly there was a duty of 2 cents a pound. The average case of milk as exported or imported contains forty-eight pounds of condensed milk, therefore a case under the old rule would pay, say, 96 cents duty, while now it comes in free.

"The cost of milk in the United States on an average has been $1.56 a hundred pounds at the time comparisons have been made, and it can be bought in some foreign countries as low as 95 cents, being a cost using a cost under the price of this country of 61 cents per hundred pounds. The average wages paid in the United States for men of skilled labor is $3 per day. In parts of Europe where condensed milk is made extensively, as low as 77 cents per day is paid. This article gives considerable cause for reflection, and someone is going to get less money out of the business under present conditions and that someone probably will be the dairymen who furnish the raw material. In the last year over 132,000 cases of condensed milk have come through the port of New York alone, at, say, an average valuation of $5 per case, would amount to, over $666,000. While this is a small amount of condensed milk production in the United States, it is sufficient to affect the wholesale selling price of all the rest of the milk in the country that is condensed. It is a rather peculiar thing that condensed and evaporated milk are the only free canned productions on the list."—St. Louis National Farmer.

Interesting Facts about the Foot-and-Mouth War

Herbert Quick, editor of Farm and Fireside, the national farm paper published at Springfield, Ohio, prints in the current issue of that periodical the following interesting facts about the foot-and-mouth disease:

"It is war.

"Foot-and-mouth disease exploded in the neighborhood of Chicago like a seventeen-inch shell from a Krupp howitzer, and blew to pieces the live-stock business of Illinois, Michigan, Indiana, Pennsylvania, and Ohio. It shattered things in a dozen other States, for when the stock yards are closed in Chicago, Indianapolis, and Buffalo the whole live-stock business feels it.

"Europe is the normal home of this disease, which is caused by a germ too small to be filtered out of a liquid, or to be seen in the microscope. It is violently contagious, but only moderately fatal to the cloven-hoofed animals subject to it; and it is incurable. It causes infected animals to waste to skeletons and a considerable proportion of them to die.

"It is caught through the hides, hair, mouth secretions, or milk of infected animals.

"It infects human beings, especially children. A child ill with foot-and-mouth disease is taken with fever and vomiting, and with small sores like fever blisters inside the cheeks and on the tongue. It is not a very severe disease for human beings except in exceptional cases. Milk may be made safe against this infection by Pasteurization to the temperature of 145 degrees for thirty minutes.

"The live stock infected are incurable, and should all be killed and their carcasses buried.

"This is the worst outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease in the history of the United States, and the control of it means a war in which many of us will be losers and most of us feel the inconvenience."

Home Rule and Assessment Features of Buffalo's New Charter

At the November election the city of Buffalo, N. Y., voted to adopt a commission government charter which had previously been approved for it by the State Legislature. Buffalo thus becomes the largest city in the United States which has yet adopted the commission form.

This new charter, which goes into effect January 1, 1916, provides for a city council of five members, including a mayor at a salary of $8,000 and four councillors at $7,000 each. All will serve for four-year terms.

Among the many progressive features of the charter, the provisions for home rule, municipal ownership and local assessments are especially noteworthy.

The city is given very wide powers, including among others the right to build and own wharves, canals, slips, basins, gas mains and conduits, water works, asphalt, lighting, heating and power plants; it may erect and maintain "one or more buildings for public assembly," and it may "do anything necessary to beautify the city or preserve or add to the safety, intelligence, comfort and well-being of the city and its inhabitants."

The charter provides that "no lands in the city shall be exempt from local assessments." The cost of building or enlarging sewers, or building or repairing sidewalks, of grading, paving and repaving streets and alleys, shall be defrayed by local assessments except that one-third of the cost of repaving an accepted street shall be paid out of the general fund.

"The city may construct, maintain and repair a city hall, markets, and other public buildings, bridges and reservoirs, wells and fountains and places for supplying the public with water, and docks; maintain, improve and embellish parks, squares, open spaces and other public grounds, and defray the expense or any part thereof, out of the general fund or by local assessment; but all bridges shall be constructed, maintained and repaired out of the general fund."

"The Council may order any street cleaned, sprinkled or watered * * * and may contract therefor on petition of a majority of resident owners on the said street * * * and cause the expense thereof to be defrayed by local assessment."

The city can make dock, wharf or harbor improvements and assess the cost wholly or in part against benefited property. When the city improves river or creek bends within its limits to prevent floods, not more than one-third of the cost of the work can be drawn from the general fund; at least two-thirds must be paid by local assessments on benefited property.

Where the cost of an improvement exceeds $5,000, and in any paving paving work, whatver its cost, payment of local assessments shall be in five yearly installments, with interest at 5 per cent. Where any sewer costing more than $40,000 is to be built, the Council may by four-fifths majority vote provide for the payment of the local assessment in not less than five nor more than fifteen yearly installments, with interest at 5 per cent.

The city will issue its bonds to pay for improvements made by the local assessment plan, and will redeem them with installment payments by property owners.

The Children's Hour

Our Girls and Boys are a much More Important Part of the Community Than we Oftimes Realize. This Department is Their Especial Part of the Paper—Older Folks Can Read if They Wish, But Only Those Under Fifteen can Contribute.

Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations,
That is known as the Children's Hour.

From my study I see in the lamplight,
Descending the broad hall stair,
Grave Alice, and laughing Allegra
And Edith with golden hair.

They climb up into my turret
O'er the arms and back of my chair;
If I try to escape, they surround me,
They seem to be everywhere.

How many of you children, who read this, can tell right straight off who wrote the poem. I have given sections of? So many million American children can that it wouldn't be very surprising if you could.

Today we announce our program for the immediate future as was advertised in the previous issue of this paper. Listen, now—all you boys and girls.

First comes a guessing contest and what do you suppose it is about? We're going to ask you to guess who the person is or was who either told, wrote, or as had told about—the short stories we shall print during the next three weeks.

With the first, third, fourth and fifth stories there will be a blank directing you how to send in your guess.

Then, at the close of the third week we will announce the name and all those who guessed right (and only those) can prepare a composition, just like you have in school you know, about that person, what that party did and what you think of the life such a person lived—as well as how papa or mamma thinks. Prizes will be announced.

This corner or column has an "Editor" just like other papers often have for children.

Anything that you want to send, guesses or contributions must always be addressed to "Editor Children's Hour" (c/o this paper).

VICTORY IN A BILLBOARD FIGHT

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT SAYS CHICAGO CAN REGULATE ALL SIGNS.

Chicago, Dec. 26.—The municipal art committee of the Chicago City club scored a victory in its fight to eliminate bill boards and painted advertising signs from residential districts. The victory came by way of a decree fro mthe Supreme Court of Illinois reversing the decision of Superior Judge Foell.

The lower court decided last July the city ordinance against billboards in residential districts was unconstitutional and granted the Thomas Cusack Co., a perpetual injunction restraining the city authorities from removing the billboards, which, it was alleged by the City Club, had been erected in violation of the ordinance.

The ordinance prohibits the construction of billboards in a block in which one-half of the buildings on both sides of the street are used exclusively for residence without first obtaining a written consent of a majority of the owners of the street frontage.

Everett L. Millard, chairman of the municipal art committee of the City Club, said the decision is a great victory for those who have been making a fight to beautify the streets of Chicago.

"This decision is the most sweeping that has ever been placed upon the court records," said Mr. Millard. "It sets a new precedent which will enable any municipality to regulate billboards from a utilitarian standpoint not only as to their location but their height and construction as well.

Thomas Cusack said his company would obey the order of the higher court and remove the boards which do not comply with the ordinance.

The municipal art committee of the City Club about a year ago started a fight against billboards. Investigators found a number of instances where permits had been given by Building Commissioner Ericsson's office for the erection of billboards without the consent of nearby home owners having been obtained.

After some hesitation Commissioner Ericsson served a notice on the Cusack Co., to take down the billboard within forty-eight hours. The billboard company took the case to court and Judge Foel decided the city did not have the right to enforce such an ordinance. It was this order which was reversed by the Supreme Court.

Advertising Talks

Young Men as Fighters.

It is noted that very young men are taking a prominent position in the fighting ranks of Europe. It was observed that the first of the German troops which poured into Belgium were composed of young fellows. Now all the nations are calling out boys a year ahead of their time for enlistment and drill. Many of the chief generals may be men above the 60's, but for work in the trenches and the charge, young men are the best fighting material. With the best part of their lives before them, they seem to care less about it; they are more daring and reckless, and are better fitted for the grim business. Kipling observed this and put the fact into swaggering rhyme.—Elmira Star.

Packing Co.'s Liberality.

Canajoharie, Dec. 26.—Today was the regular weekly paytime for the Beech-Nut Packing Co., but in addition to passing out the envelopes containing the weekly wages each employe who had been in the service of the company one full year received an additional envelope containing $3 for each year of continuous service. The Beech-Nut Co., thereby presented their help with a sum of $5,000, some of the older hands receiving as high as $69. This is the third holiday season that the Beech-Nut Co., has brought this substantial variety of cheer to their help and it surely puts them in a happy frame of mind and appreciative attitude for the Christmas-tide. The distribution of nearly $15,000 through the Spraker Bank Christmas Club and the $5,000 given away by the Beech-Nut Co. ought to help materially in the betterment of business conditions in Canajoharie.

EMPIRE STATE NEWS.

Mrs. L. W. Collins of Alene, found two pearls each the size of a spice kernel, last week in a can that contained oysters. They had been sold out, all but about a half pint, which she turned out of the can, and was about to rinse it out when she heard something rattle. On looking in the bottom of the can she saw the pearls. They will probably bring about $50.

There seems to be some prospect of the building of the Utica-Binghamton trolley line, according to the latest reports of Thomas F. McBride, a prominent citizen of Clinton. Mr. McBride was in Norwich recently looking after the extension of certain franchises and the prospect of securing new ones. He stated that he will meet the city aldermen soon and discuss his plans. Maps have already been prepared for a portion of the line.

Earlville is not only noted for its large number of thoroughbred Holstein-Friesian cattle, but lately is coming into prominence in the fancy poultry line. With Frank Nickerson, Harold Shapley and others taking the majority of the prizes in their lines at such shows as the one at Rochester it will not be long before a prize winning hen and a good record-bearing Holstein will make a man independent for life.—Standard.

Two men who gave their names as Charles Roth and John Dooley, sentenced by Justice Howe of Morrisville to sixty days each in the Onondaga penitentiary, were handed over to Deputy Sheriff Newton, a recent candidate for sheriff of Madison county, for transportation. As the prisoners were tired and hungry and no fire was burning in the jail, Newton sent the pair to a local hotel for dinner, telling them he would come after them later. In the meantime Newton was called to repair a telephone and the prisoners much refreshed, started on foot for Eaton, where they entered the house of E. B. Roby and secured $28 in money, a gold watch and other jewelry, making good their escape. A blood hound followed their trail to the O. & W. tracks, where they probably boarded a freight and went merrily on their way.

GOV.-ELECT TAKES OATH

Assistant District Attorney's Father Gave Mr. Whitman His First Job.

Charles S. Whitman was formally sworn in Saturday as Governor of New York by Presiding Justice George L. Ingraham of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court. The oath was administered in the private chambers of the Justice, Twenty-fifth St. and Madison Ave. The only witness was Assistant District Attorney William Hayward, who is to be legal adviser to the new Governor.

Mr. Whitman will be publicly sworn in as Governor in Albany at noon next Friday, and his object in taking the oath yesterday was to prevent the State from being without a Chief Executive from midnight Dec. 31th until the following noon. He chose Justice Ingraham because the two have long been warm personal friends. Although Justice Ingrahm is a Democrat Mr. Whitman throughout his term as District Attorney has frequently sought his advice.

The Governor-elect has completed his message to the Legislature. It contains about 6,000 words. He said yesterday that he was too busy with the Baff murder case to discuss appointments, but it is known that he has practically decided to choose Assistant District Attorney Charles Albert Perkins as his successor. The formal announcement of the appointment will not be made until Mr. Whitman leaves for Albany next week. Mr. Perkins's father, Dr. Albert Perkins, has long been a friend of Mr. Whitman, and he gave Mr. Whitman his first place after Mr. Whitman left Amherst college, engaging him for the Adelphi Academy teaching staff.

Republican leaders discussed yesterday the advisability of trying to have another Congressional reapportionment of the State. The law requires that such a reapportionment shall take place immediately after the Federal census, every ten years. Following the last census in 1910 a reappointment was made that greatly favored the Democrats. William Barnes was not at all satisfied with what was done in Albany county, when, in an effort to make it safely Democratic, eleven wards from Rensalear county were added to the Congressional district. Mr. Barnes is said to be behind the plan to have another reapportionment, but whether it can be made before another Federal census in 1920 will have to be legally determined.

About Baseball Mainly

BY FRANK G. MENKE.

New York, Dec. 28.—The Feds will make a master stroke if they place a team in New York for the 1915 season. Right now seems to be the proper time for the transfer of the Kansas City franchise to the big town.

Some folks will argue that the greater city will not support five big league teams—the Brooklyn Dodgers, Brooklyn Feds, New York Yankees, New York Giants and a New York Federal team, but that is a matter that never can be decided until the experiment is made. And the time seems ripe for the Feds to make the experiment.

The Yankees in 1915 will be a mighty uncertain proposition. Even if they change owners and get a first class manager it doesn't spell success for the Yanks, and it doesn't make them a drawing card. The Yanks need something they haven't got just now—first class players. There is a little likelihood of any of the other clubs in the big leagues donating a few players to the Yanks because most of the other clubs are a bit shy on stars owing to the Federal raidings.

The Giants may draw as well next season as in other seasons, but it is doubtful. It is believed that the reign of McGraw in the baseball world is near an end. The Giants failed to grab the pennant last season and that lost them some of their old drawing power. Furthermore, the Giants don't look overly powerful for the 1915 battle and it is likely that they will not figure so very largely in the pennant battle.

The home town fans have soured a bit of the Giants of 1914. They have tired of seeing Merkle, Doyle, Snodgrass, Meyers and some of the old gang. They want to see some new stars shining. If McGraw puts a few on display there may be a revival of interest in the Giants. If he doesn't the fans may turn away from the Giants.

The Feds, as a league, has corraled enough stars to distribute among eight clubs and give each club a major league look. In case the Kansas City franchise was transferred to New York they could put a mighty strong team in the big city and it probably would become a good drawing card.

The Federal League officials are said to have three fine sites for a baseball park on Manhattan Island in view and any one of the three, it is said, will be about as well located as the Polo grounds.

The Feds have a mighty good chance this year to get a greater amount of publicity than the organized major league clubs and also they will be in position to grab off the cream of the minor league talent that will be turned back by the majors.

These two chances came because of the two new rules laid down a few weeks ago by the magnates. One rule limits the organized clubs to 21 players; the other rule forbids their going into training until March 1.

If the Feds go into training early in February they will be at it two or three weeks before the organized clubs. The Feds will be first in the field with training trip news. More attention will be paid to the individual performances of the Federal players by the newspapers. Stories concerning the human side of the Feds will be used—and they will be read. Just about that time the fans will have become hungry for some sort of news that tells of base hits and fine fielding stunts, and even those who haven't much interest in the Feds will read the news because it's baseball news.

When the organized clubs get into the Southland the fans, of course, will be interested in their doings, but they won't be so hungry about baseball because the Federal league news of the two weeks previous will have satiated their appetites.

The fact that the organized clubs will have to cut their rosters down to 21 men will mean that those clubs that carry from 40 to 50 players to the southland will have to begin cutting loose from their recruits within a week after they land below the Mason and Dixon line and that will give the Fed scouts a chance to grab off the best of the recruits.

CATTON AND YAMADA HAVE BEEN PLAYING CLOSE BILLIARD GAMES.

Marcus Catton of Chicago, who took Ora Morningstar's place in the Champion Billiard Players' league, was first matched against Koji Yamada, the Japanese expert. In the first six games five were won, four of them by Catton, with less than seven points separating the contestants, the games being for 300. Catton is only twenty years old and is a son of the late Billy Catton, once renowned as a three cushion carom player. Yamada's picture is at the top, Catton's at the bottom.

GOSSIP AND NEWS OF THE FIGHTERS

Style of Fighting Has Changed In Recent Years.

BUT ARE THE MEN BETTER?

Hard to Believe That Present Day Scrappers Are Equals of Fitzsimmons, Corbett or Sullivan—Freddy Welsh Willing to Tackle All Lightweights—Johnny Kilbane Heavier.

Since Jimmy Clabby defeated George Chip in California and thereby won the right to claim the middleweight championship his manager, Larney Lichtenstein, has decided that Jeems is the greatest fighter that ever lived—that is, he is by far cleverer than any of his predecessors in the art of self defense. Like his manager, Jimmy believes that they do not go in to be beaten to pieces without trying to show some signs of real science. Writing regarding the matter, Manager Lichtenstein says:

"There is a great difference in the old and the present style of boxing. In the old days it was generally agreed that the place to aim for in boxing was the head. So the arms were held up high, and, though some such blows as the kidney punch were known, the body of an opponent was generally neglected. The average boxer among the old timers believed that a blow which marked an opponent's face was much more telling than one which landed on the body and slowed him up.

"The boxer of today pays at least as much attention to the body as to the face or head. Attempt to box with a man like Clabby or Gibbons or Welsh, and you'll find that he'll hit you five times on the body to every punch he lands on your face or head. The style has changed. The old fellows boxed straight up. The fighters we now have dig in and strike from every conceivable angle.

"The only class that falls below the standard is that of the heavyweights, but that is only a temporary situation. It won't be long before we have white fighters who could have whipped John L. Sullivan, Jim Corbett, Bob Fitzsimmons or even Jim Jeffries in the days when Jim could really fight."

A lot of what Clabby and his manager say is true, but just the same it will take a lot of convincing to make some sporting men believe that we have in the making fighters of Fitzsimmons' weight who can do what Ruby Robert did. Fitz never weighed over 156 to 160 pounds when fighting, and still he met men over 200 pounds and slashed them to ribbons. He held three titles at one time—middleweight, light-heavy and heavyweight—something to be proud of. John L. Sullivan was not only a rugged fighter, but a clever one, for with all his hard battles he has no marks to show where he was battered about the face nor bum ears, which so many fighters have nowadays. As for Jeffries—well, when Jim was himself probably there never lived a man who could defeat him, Jack Johnson included. Jeff was not only a fighter, but a boxer, for when he fought Jim Corbett the last time he outboxed the clever Jim.

Johnny Kilbane, featherweight champion, has entered the lightweight class and has left the featherweight title to be fought for by several aspirants. Kilbane took on Joe Mandot as his first opponent in the heavier division, and the bout was regarded as a draw.

Freddy Welsh, the world's champion lightweight, is being guided into a lot of coin by his manager, Harry Pollok, and the chances are that when Freddy begins to count his pile in the spring he will go into the five figures strong. He must be given credit for one thing—he is not afraid to tackle any of the lightweights and does not demand much time for training. Under these conditions it is not surprising that Welsh wants to make his matches at catchweights or at a point that will not bring him down too low. If he kept in hard training all the while and tried to make the lightweight limit he would soon go stale, and that is what he wants to avoid. There is little doubt that Welsh can make the proper weight when the occasion demands.

Since Jack Dillon, the Hoosier champion, defeated Jim Flynn at Kansas City and Charlie Weinert, the Brooklyn light-heavyweight, at Philadelphia, knocking out the latter, the sport followers have reached the conclusion that Jack is no longer a middleweight, but a full fledged heavyweight. All are mistaken, for Jack and his manager, Sam Murbarger, are ready to post a forfeit at any time that Jack will make 158 pounds at 8 o'clock for any of the stars in a big match.

Motorboat Races in Florida.

Midwinter sports are to have a notable addition in a powerboat regatta announced for Miami, Fla., in January during the annual midwinter carnival of the Knights of Dade, one of the big fetes of the Florida winter season. An effort will be made to attract all the fast boats of the country, including Distirber IV., America's champion. The course, a five mile rectangular affair, is said to be the fastest in the world, being completely landlocked and dredged to an even depth by government engineers.

WILL D. L. & W. PAY REWARD?

There Is Much Speculation Among Local Lawyers as Boys Will Never be Brought to Trial

The Grand Jury, which will sit next week in connection with the January term of Supreme Court, opening on Jan. 4th, will consider the cases of the three feeble-minded youngsters who are charged with wrecking the Lackawanna passenger train near Granby in October.

There is much speculation among local lawyers as to whether or not Chief of Police Dyer will get the reward offered by the railroad company for making the arrests. When the Lackawanna made the offer it was said the company would pay "for the arrest and conviction" and, as the accused youngsters are feeble-minded they may never be brought to trial.

It is the concensus of public opinion that Chief Dyer should be paid for his clever work. The railroad company will be protected against damage suits if the Grand Jury indicts the boys.

ENGAGEMENT ANNOUNCED

The engagement of two prominent young Fultonians was announced at the close of a dinner given by Miss Virginia Hunter at her home in S. 4th. St. Saturday night. It is the promised marriage between Miss Lena Crockett and Warren E. Marvin. Miss Crockett is prominent socially and is a member of the L. O. P. H., while Mr. Marvin is the son of Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Marvin, E. Broadway. He is head chemist at the Nestle Food plant. An informal dance was held in the basement of the Hunter home following the announcement.

THE QUIRK

To-night ten clever acts will be given by the best talent in Fulton, both local and professional. To-morrow, the usual Tuesday, 5 acts of high class vaudeville.

WEDDING A SURPRISE

Charles Leadley, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Leadley of the Thompson road, Oswego Center, surprised his parents on Christmas day by announcing his marriage to Miss Ethel Phillips.

The marriage, which took place on October 29th, had been kept a secret until the announcement was officially made. The bride for two years has been a teacher at School No. 10, Oswego Center, and she will complete the remainder of the term.

The marriage was performed by the Rev. H. D. Holmes, pastor of the First Methodist church, Fulton. Mr. and Mrs. Leadley are prominent young people of Oswego Center.

BOX SOCIAL

A box social will be held at the Presbyterian church to-night at 8 o'clock. The young women will take boxes of foodstuff, which will be purchased by the young men who will serve lunch in the church parlors. The proceeds will be placed in the Christian Endeavor fund.

FAGAN BURIED TO-DAY

William Fagan, of this city, who was found frozen to death in the rear of the E. Z. Opener Bag factory, Saturday morning, was buried this afternoon at 2:30 from Earl S. Brown's undertaking establishment.

The coroner's investigation proved that death was accidental.

Stamp Sales, 3 Per Inhabitant.

New York, Dec. 26.—More stickers for stamping out tuberculosis had been sold by December 19th in New York state than ever before by that date, according to figures given out today by the State Charities Aid Association. While reports have come in from only a part of the 1,000 agents, outside of New York city, the indications are that far more villages and cities have sold three seals per inhabitant than in any of the six preceding years in which seals have been sold.

Some places have a percentage considerably above 3 per inhabitant and are working hard in hopes of winning both national and state pennants. This year's sale continues to Jan. 1st, the seals having been designed to serve as New Year's pasters as well as Christmas stamps.

COUNCIL MEETING

The Common Council will meet as a grievance board at 8:15 o'clock to-night to levy the assessment for the public highway improvements that have been made during the past year. More than $80,000 remains to be collected.

BOWLING NOTES

The Non-descripts and the Onyx clubs of the City league will clash on the Onyx alleys to-night.

Unfair Criticism.

American manufacturers are being criticised by the Wilson administration organs for their slowness of taking advantage of the trade opportunities created by the European war.

Is such criticism fair?

Why should an American manufacturer be asked to invest large sums in new enterprises to supply a home market which his government refuses to protect and which will be again at the mercy of cheap foreign labor as soon as the war is over? The greatest opportunity that will ever come to this country, in all probability, for the development of its home market is here. The war cuts off foreign competition and gives us a practical monopoly. But there is one essential lacking—a Protective Tariff which will insure the permanency of this new home market and guarantee investors against the kind of foreign competition which in the first few months of the Underwood Tariff has cost the people of this country hundreds of millions of dollars.

When administration newspapers admit the opportunity for American industry created by the war, in putting an end to European competition, is any further argument needed to prove the fallacy of the present Democratic Free-Trade system?—Doylestown, Pa. Intelligencer.

TANGO DANCES

Tango dancers went through a workout on Saturday using all new steps. They had the use of the theater orchestra, as the management is anxious to put on the greatest dancing contest of its kind ever held in this city.

The latest dances that will be featured is the famous fox trot and maxixe. All dancers will be in full dress. Stephenson and Newton rank as nearer professionals than the Oswego dancers, but this puts more life in the Oswego dancers, as they are anxious to beat the best Fulton can send and after the rehearsals they all feel confident of winning first prize.

As usual first class photo plays for the same admission.

GAY TOKENS OF RIBBON.

The brocaded velvet and satin ribbon, as well as some of the novelty striped effects, will be found to offer many suggestions for holiday gifts in the shape of waistcoats, vestees and the like. Sometimes the colorings accord better with the cloth and velvet to be trimmed than the fancy satins at the counter.

Moire taffeta and plain taffeta are always in good taste for belts and sashes as well as for hat trimmings. Velvet ribbon makes a wonderfully soft girdle and in black frequently gives character to a gown that has seemed a little insipid before its introduction. Bright red, old blue and black velvet ribbon is fancied just now instead of the leather belt for the dress of French pique worn by little girls.

Brocaded ribbons in exquisite colorings, suitable for the sash of the evening gown and originally imported to sell well over the dollar mark, are now to be had for about 50 cents a yard. In this same lot are two tone effects for street dresses or blouse finish and lovely plaited ribbons for the miss or the younger sister. The plaid ribbons, by the way, are fancied for tying the braids of the schoolgirl, and the same ribbon sometimes reappears as a cravat to complete the collar of linen or pique.

TUBERCULOSES NURSE PLANNED

Chairman Streeter for the Prevention of Tuberculosis Made This Announcement Today

Chairman Glenn Streeter of the local committee for the prevention of tuberculosis, wishes to extend his thanks to the citizens of Fulton who so generously responded to the good cause. The Red Cross Seal campaign, which has been carried on since Thanksgiving, is about closed and the committee has but $65 to reach its goal. They intend to raise $400.

It was officially announced this morning that this money will be used for the hiring of a nurse to attend those suffering from tuberculosis in this city. Several nurses are now under consideration by the committee and an announcement is expected shortly. The duties of the nurse will consist of thoroughly investigating all cases and bringing them before the board and also to render professional treatment.

Let everyone who has failed to help the good cause respond during the few remaining days of the year. All those who still retain letters are requested to return them to Mr. Streeter.

The children of the schools of this city raised $143. The prizes were awarded as follows: School selling most seals in proportion to its size, Rochester street school; room selling most seals, Professor Lannigan's class of the Phillips street school.

The donors will be announced in to-morrow's Evening Times.

CORNELL EXTENSION SCHOOL

Professor S. R. Lockwood of the Hannibal high school delivered the opening address at the Cornell extension school, which opened at that village to-day. Several prominent Cornell instructors are down for speeches and discussions.

How To Keep Up With It

If the reader is a paid-in-advance subscriber for THE FULTON WEEKLY TIMES opportunity is given him to become listed as one of the patrons of the city's latest mark of progress—The Fulton Evening Times—in this way:

Announce by postal card, letter, phone message, solicitor or paper carrier, a desire to have your name stricken from the mailing list for the Weekly Times, and in place of the latter, to have The Fulton Evening Times served at your door each day.

Upon receipt of such information we shall place to your credit upon The Evening Times' mailing or subscription list the amount of unearned cash that has been received by The Weekly Times.

For example:

"Semit" subscribed for The Weekly Times on July 1, 1914, for one year. On January 1, 1915, he shall have remaining to his credit 50 cents.

This sum is the price charged for The Fulton Evening Times for six days a week for two months, which means that "Semit" will by making the transfer from the old to the new list, receive at least 48 pages for 50 cents, whereas by continuing as a weekly subscriber he would not get more than 13 copies and these papers would be extended over a period of six months—a slow process, isn't it?

There is another point for explanation:

Many subscribers for The Fulton Evening Times have been annoyed by the non-arrival of the paper. To one and all the hope is expressed that we shall receive as much indulgence as lies in one's power of endurance for very soon our circulation building plans and their execution should bring the desired relief to the subscriber and publisher.

In the hope that 1915 may bring to our books the names of all of our weekly patrons, and with good wishes to the people of Fulton who are doing their best to co-operate in the publication of "a Herald of Progress," we remain,

TRAINS BOY FARMERS

Rockefeller Foundation Tells of Fine Results Obtained Through Their Clubs

New York, Dec. 27.—A chapter in the report of the work of the General Education Board made public yesterday tells of the efforts to interest boys and girls in intelligent, money-producing farming methods. The history of the boys' corn clubs is related in detail. The report says:

"Sporadic clubs had already been organized by a few County Superintendents of Education when, in 1908, Mr. Knapp appropriated and made the most of the idea. As far as possible, every boy should plant an acre of corn on his father's farm. In every neighborhood there should be a local boys' corn club. Next, county and State organizations should be formed, and finally, a federation of corn clubs should be created, including every Southern State.

"Local, county, and State prizes should be awarded. The topmost boys should be sent to Washington to meet the Secretary of Agriculture and to shake hands with the President. The expanded idea was an effort to appeal to the boy's imagination—assuredly an effective way of dignifying the farming profession, but the shrewd old teacher knew that merely decorative distinctions would in the long run prove ineffective. The boy, therefore, was to sell his crop and pocket the money.

"As a rule, each member of a club works a plot of one acre. The county superintendent of Education is usually in charge. Appointed special agent of the Department of Agriculture with a nominal salary of one dollar a year, he obtains the franking privilege, which enables him to procure reports from the boys and to disseminate information and instructions among them.

"But more and more other agencies also undertake to co-operate. Prominent among them being State colleges of agriculture, of which nine were regularly connected with the work in the year 1912.

"The club enrollment has increased from 10,343 in 1908, to 91,000 in 1913.

"In 1910 the boys' clubs of [illegible] county, Mississippi, averaged seventy-six bushels of corn per acre, while their fathers were averaging sixteen in the same season. One hundred boys in various parts of the South averaged 133.7 bushels, and one day produced over 200. The following season 100 boys averaged 137.48 bushels. Seven boys raised over 200 in 1911. Four hundred seventy-one made over 100 bushels to the acre in 1912.

"The instances above cited represent, of course, the most favorable results. But the general average of the boys is, as the following figures show, strikingly superior to results otherwise obtained:

State	Boys' Acre	Similar Lands
Alabama	62.30	17.20
Arkansas	49.50	22.00
Florida	39.58	8.00
Georgia	56.40	14.00
Louisiana	55.32	20.24
Mississippi	66.30	18.00
North Carolina	62.80	20.00
Oklahoma	48.00	22.63
South Carolina	68.79	18.50
Tennessee	91.46	35.50
Texas	38.00	24.00
Virginia	59.50	20.00

"A club consists essentially of a group of boys varying in number from 25 to 100. Corn and cotton are both cultivated, but corn is preferred, first, because the South needs more corn, and secondly, because corn lends itself better to study and selection."

TARIFF APPEAL TO WILSON

Pennsylvania Manufacturers Demand Repeal of Underwood Act.

Philadelphia, Dec. 28.—Asserting that the Underwood tariff law had paralyzed the industries of the country, the Manufacturers' association of Montgomery county, an organization composed of influential manufacturers and others to-day sent a letter to President Wilson urging that he use his influence to bring about its repeal.

The letter calls attention to conditions in Pennsylvania and New England, and the appeal is for "relief for the victims of circumstances created by the change in legislative policy at Washington; relief from the business depression which is deepening and spreading with each successive month, until now we are face to face with a condition nothing less than frightening."

The letter denies that the war is responsible for the depression in business. The association also denies that politicl motives have anything to do with the appeal.

"We place this question squarely before you," says the appeal. "Why do you not make your theories prove successful, or give us those that will? The business world is asking that question, and we now bring it to you direct. You must accept the responsibility for conditions we now face. Had your theories, which have been enacted into laws by a docile Congress, brought forth peace and plenty in the land you would have accepted the universal gladness as a part of your reward, and the business men of this country would have given you ungrudging praise."

Harry K. Thaw Reading Supreme Court Decision Against Himself.

After the United States supreme court decided that Harry K. Thaw, slayer of Stanford White, would have to go back to New York to stand trial for conspiracy in escaping from Matteawan asylum interest again centered in what that much noticed man would do. On the public tongue it was said that he would flee from New Hampshire and thus start legal proceedings all over again. It was said he would consent to return to New York and would plead guilty to conspiracy, taking his year's sentence in jail and then emerging a free man, because the fact that he had been sentenced would automatically clear him of being insane. It was said he would fight further in New York to retain his liberty from the asylum. It was said he would flee to Europe and join the allies. In fact, a dozen lines of conduct were reported for Thaw. Here is a recent picture of him reading the supreme court decision against himself.

FIRE INVESTIGATION

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 28.—Mayor Good ordered an investigation to-day of the fire which caused the death of four aged women and injuries to a dozen more in a midnight fire which swept the old Cambridge City Home in North Cambridge. It is feared that other bodies may be in the ruins.

The dead are:

Mary Dunn, Eliza Greenleaf, Mrs. Schultner and [illegible] who died at the Cambridge hospital this morning.

MEXICAN REPORTS DOUBTED

Washington, Dec. 28.—State department officials to-day were inclined to doubt reports of breaks between Provisional President Gutierrez and the chiefs of several of the factions in Mexico. They took this stand in the absence of official advices and after Enrique C. Llorente, Washington agent of the Gutierrez government, had stated that his reports indicated that there was harmony between Gutierrez and all the chiefs.

The border situation was regarded by the administration as settled.

WHITE VS. SHRUGRUE

New York, Dec. 28.—Charlie White, the fast Chicago lightweight and George Shrugrue, the clever Jersey City boxer, are putting the finishing touches on their training for their ten-round go in Madison Square Garden to-morrow night. The odds to-day are 5 to 4 in favor of White. Both fighters have won a popular decision over Freddie Welsh, the Engish fighter, and the winner will probably be matched to fight the champion in a battle for the title.

War: Pathos and Humor

(Special Dispatch to the International News Service.)

London, Dec. 29.—Perhaps the maddest adventures of the war are those attributed to the Cossacks. They take war as a sport and are correspondingly reckless. They have a superstition against surrendering and against losing their lance or their horse.

A correspondent of the Daily Graphic sends some remarkable stories of these strange horsemen, who are well drilled, he finds. To their immemorial boldness and wildness they have now added drill and science and they are much more effective than in the Japanese war. He says:

"Greatest of all Cossacks is Mikhail Filimonoff, who is with the invaders of Galicia. Filimonoff is a striking figure. He sits his horse like a Petrograd bank clerk, but his leadership beats De Wet's. On the day he was given command—of a little reconnoitering force of twenty-five men—Filimonoff dispersed or captured four Austrian outposts or detachments. All outnumbered his force. For that he was promoted to 'khorunji' and given the St. George's Cross.

"He has done all wild things since. Near Przemysl he held up an Austrian convoy and captured two hundred convoy and captured two hundrew wagons of grain and coal. When, a few days later, his force was surrounded he saved it by himself diving into a stream and racing for help. Filimonoff's ruses are surprising. He disguised himself and some of his men as peasants, and thereby got valuable information. The Cossacks take the war as sport. Lately I visited the Vistula south of Warsaw and saw at Gora Kalwarija Cossacks having Djigitovka sports.

"One of the players had his left arm in a sling. I was told that he was wounded after the terrific battles on the Pilitsa a month ago, he was taking part in a similar sports under the enemy's fire.

"Cossacks cannot be induced to surrender. They have martial superstitions about keeping their horses and lances. I have heard of cases of Cossacks preferring death to abandoning either. Before the grand Duke Nicholas's armies reached the Warthe at Kolo the Cossack Nikita Tchumakoff with ten comrades was captured through falling into an ambuscade. Three days later Tchumakoff turned up with two bullets, one through his clothes and one through his thigh. He was horseless, but carried his long lance. Tchumakoff, without horse or weapons, had crept during darkness from the tent in which he slept.

"He got safely past the German sentries. Then he reflected that it was a shame for a Cossack to lose his horse and lance. So he crept back, facing the risk of being killed or recaptured. He recovered both horse and lance and galloped away. The horse was killed by a shot from an outpost. From his lance Tchumakoff would not be parted."

The skill of the Cossacks in scouting is responsible for most of the Russian successes, says this observer. They are especially notable for rapid thinking operations. Through an ingenious ruse of Cossack cavalry, General Marshall von Hindenburg was deceived about the line of advance of the Siberian reinforcements in the first German advance on Warsaw and largely due to this factor the Germans had to retreat.

Germans' Forts Astonish French

(Special Dispatch to the International News Service.)

Edinburgh, Scotland, Dec. 28.—A letter has just been received here from a French woman whose home is in Soissons, along one of the hotly contested points on the French battlefront. She describes to her Scotch friend the misery of the inhabitants of the city. The Germans, it seems, were driven out, but not beyond the range of their big guns. The Frenchwoman did not desert her home. She says:

"We have to remain in our house, for we really could not bring ourselves to leave it, and all our possessions, although most of the inhabitants have left the town.

"For three months the bombardment of the town has continued, sometimes for days and nights without ceasing, and then we hide in the cellar—you may guess how happy we are. We simply live in dread of the shrapnel which is going to fall on our house and set it on fire and bury us in the ruins.

"You have no idea what terrible engines of war the Germans have. Seeing everything around us burn and fall to pieces, we live in a sort of nightmare. The house of Dubois (next to us) is in ruins, and St. Jean des Vignes is practically a heap of stones—indeed, everything in our quarter is demolished. You will be heartbroken to see it when you next come. Fortunately our house has so far escaped, though all the tiles are smashed and the windows broken by the force of the detonation. It is not worth replacing them, but you may imagine how comfortable we are in this cold weather, and the terrible thing is that no one can say how long it will last.

"On their way back from the Marne the Germans took possession of all the quarries along the hills to the north, which they had carefully prepared on their way south with concrete and iron, making of them veritable forts. They are terribly clever, and now they are shelling Soissons from the quarries of Pasley, Clamecy and Crouy, from which they can also dominate all the main roads from the town. There is absolutely no chance of taking them by surprise, because from there they see everything that happens. They have got the light railway to Coucy, which enables them to revictual from the rear. From Coucy and Chauny they have the main lines right to Germany, so that they can bring up reinforcements as they require them.

"They have driven away all inhabitants, and they take everything movable they come across. We had samples of this in Soissons, where they remained for two full days. We had eighteen billeted on us. Every unoccupied house they broke open and took away everything in their wagons and automobiles. Nothing that could be lifted did they spare—furniture, linens, bedding, contents of the cellars, everything went, and from the farms and flour mills they took all corn of every kind, flour and all live stock—absolutely a clean sweep.

"It is not a war of soldiers, but of robbery and destruction, such as I suppose the world has never seen, and which should not be allowed. Why bombard open, unfortified towns and villages? But they have said they will ravish all France. I do not know what the future has in store for us, but if we, who have right on our side, and who have your soldiers and the Russians with us, lose there is no more justice in Heaven.

"Our troops can only keep them from advancing and they will tell us we must wait, but for how long? For all the winter, perhaps. But we shall be dead before it is over. Quite a lot of English soldiers have been here—fine men and splendid horses (we have not a horse left in the district)—but now they have left this quarter and are in the north. They did well too, and I am sorry for them where they are, for with the severe weather they are going to be very uncomfortable.

"We also had some of our own men from the south, and they were shivering with the cold, for now it is freezing hard. I forgot to tell you that Crouy, Cuffies, Vailly and all these villages you know so well are all razed to the ground—churches, houses, everything—nothing remains.

"As I write the bombardment commences afresh and I must run. The room is shaking and the table dances. Who knows? It is perhaps our turn now, for, as I have told you, we await the shrapnel that is to finish us off. I cannot do housework, sewing or indeed anything. We take our meals as rapidly as possible, and wait for the whiz of the shell which is to tell us that it is time to dash to the cellar. And to think that it has been like this since the beginning of September. We are almost at the end of our endurance."

Theodore Foster Sang in Oswego.

Theodore Foster, one of L. C. Foster's gifted sons, is engaged to sing in Christ church, Oswego. Recently he became a member of the choir. His pleasing baritone voice was heard for the first time in the church at the Sunday afternoon service. His solo work was in Maunder's cantata, "Bethlehem."

The other soloists were Mesdames McCloskey and Brown and Miss Sexsmith.

THE GERMAN CASE STATED BY AN AMERICAN.

Professor Fullerton Argues That if the United States Were Situated as Germany is It Would Have Gone to War.

Professor George Stuart Fullerton, a resident of Munich, has issued the appeal of "an American to American" to recognize the German point of view. Professor Fullerton was formerly vice provost of the University of Pennsylvania and is now professor of philosophy at Columbia and honorary professor in the University of Vienna. He writes in part:

"For 30 years I have known Germany, and have been interested in her science, her literature and her political and economic development. At first, I saw the land through the eyes of a mere visitor, but of late years I have had the opportunity to know it much more intimately. I have seen a people, formerly comparatively poor, not very strong, not very closely welded into a unit, become rich, powerful, united, and so advanced in its social development that its internal organization compels the admiration of the economist and of the humanitarian. The land has prospered exceedingly in the intelligent pursuit of the arts of peace. Austria I have visited in past years, and last winter I spent in that empire in the capacity of first American Exchange Professor to the Austrian Universities, lecturing at Vienna, Gratz, Innsbruck, Cracow and Lemberg. I met many persons in public and in private life, and had an opportunity to feel the pulse of public opinion.

War Was Forced.

"I say without hesitation that no class, either in Germany or in Austria, desired to precipitate this terrible war. Peace was desired, and earnestly desired, for economic reasons. But war was forced upon both nations. That the war came just when it did may be regarded as an accident, for the war was sure to come in any case. * * *

"We Americans do what seems to us prudent and practical under the conditions which prevail in America, and we have no more need for the German army than has a Philadelphia Quaker, at his Yearly Meeting, for a revolver. What we think we really need, however, we set about with much energy to obtain.

"But suppose that our territory were not too large to be invaded? Suppose that to the north of us we had a great land with a vast population of more than 100,000,000, under an autocratic government, boasting, even in time of peace, an immense army? Suppose that this land had for many decades shown a restless activity in extending its borders at the expense of its neighbors, where it has found them too weak to resist aggression? Suppose that its population was upon a plane of civilization far less advanced than our own; so little advanced, indeed, that the overwhelming majority were compelled to live in what civilized men must regard as a condition of distressing misery, ignorant, dumb, passive, a tool in the hands of a bureaucratic class which would not be the first to suffer from added miseries entailed by a state of war? Suppose that we had information that this neighbor of ours had for some time been massing its troops upon its borders in a way that could only be interpreted as a menace? * * *

England Rules the Water.

"There is no nation in Europe that can, without asking England's permission sail into the Atlantic, pass the Straits of Gibraltar, make use of the Mediterranean or reach Asia by way of the Suez Canal. The public highway has by a single nation been fenced in and made private property.

"It is a pity that the word 'Navalism' is not good English, for that which it exactly describes has been peculiarly English for a century. 'Navalism' can be a more serious menace than militarism, for the latter threatens chiefly one's more immediate neighbors. 'Navalism' holds a threat over every nation on the face of the globe. * * *

"I make no reference to the neutrality of Belgium, for do I think it worth while to touch upon the question who first formally declared war on this side or on that. In the light of what the world now knows, these have become wholly trivial matters. The explanation of the attitude of the German people is to be sought at a much deeper level. And I maintain without hesitation that we Americans, under the same circumstances, would have done just what the Germans have done. Would it have been right? Would it have been wrong? I leave it to Americans to decide."

Children you will find the first of our Children's House in this issue of the "Evening Times."

Testimony Taken in New York.

Oswego, Dec. 26.—The report of John W. Crandall of New York as commissioner to take testimony in the action of Owen P. Callen vs. Granby Pulp and Paper Co., and Donald Steamship Co., Ltd. was filed in the clerk's office today. Mr. Callen was injured while unloading pulpwood from the steamship "Thyra Menier" and as many of the witnesses are sailors who come into New York on this boat. The testimony was taken by Mr. Crandall at the office of Hunt, Hill & Betts, New York.

MADAME SCHUMANN-HEINK.

Oswego, Dec. 26.—To say that Mme. Schumann-Heink has won a place near the hearts of the American general public is to put it very modestly. The record of the great contralto's early tour shows this very well. Carnegie Hall was crowded from pit to supporting beams, Aeolin Hall has never been the scene of such enthusiasm; Symphony Hall, Boston, was one of her greatest triumphs; the Auditorium, Chicago, had a record box office sale when Mme. Schumann-Heink appeared. These are only a few instances of the tremendous popularity of this great diva. Everyone, whether a student of music or not, is thoroughly familiar with the name Ernestine Schumann-Heink. Someone has said her popularity is based on three reasons. First, Mme. Schumann-Heink is the greatest of all living operatic, concert and recital artists. Second, her voice, which is without precedent, is the most wonderful of all times and never has lost its power to stir audiences with riotous enthusiasm. Third, Mme. Schumann-Heink is a woman beloved by women.

Mme. Schumann-Heink will make her premier appearance here at the State Armory, New Year's night, January 1, 1915, and all who are fortunate in hearing this great singer will enjoy the concert.

CONVICTS ARE FINE RUSTLERS

Texas Aggregation Gets $5 Program Ad for Christmas Show

New York, Dec. 26.—Every business man, large or small, is hounded at this time of year by advertising solicitors for programmes for all sorts of banquets, balls and reunions, ranging from the Woman's Sewing Circle to the Delicatessen Dealers' Defense League and the Pickle Purveyors Protective Phalanx. As a conspicuous factor in the advertising life of the Metropolis, the New York Hippodrome is a shining mark for these assaults—so much so that an iron clad rule has been adopted against all programmes, regardless of their character or worth.

This rule was broken the other day in favor of a programme in far-away Huntsville, Tex., in response to the following letter:—

"HUNTSVILLE PRISON SHOW
"Advertising Department
"Huntsville, Texas, December 12.
"Advertising Manager.
"New York Hippidrome.

"Frankly Sir:—This is the most unusual letter you've ever had——

"It comes from a bunch of convicts! And it is not a sympathy slobber nor a 'pity us' plea. It is an out-and-out appeal to your noble self, combined with just a wee bit of the spirit 'that one touch of nature makes the whole world kin.'

"Listen! Every year here at the great Huntsville Prison, the boys get together and put on a cracker-jack Christmas show, both for inmates and outsiders. Nor is this merely for time-passing, but a vital need for the men, and again it is up to us to keep up our permanent library.

"We've simply got to raise the money so that we may read good books, magazines, and technical literature. We must do this, that we may fit ourselves for the better things in store for us, and it is needless to estimate the incalculable value of good books and healthy recreation.

"Of course, we collect some little coin at the gate—but our best and most deserving support comes from the UNIQUE PROGRAM that we issue for this show. And right here is where we hope to declare you in on our souvenir program—if you will. Hundreds of these splendid, preservable programs are distributed here, and thousands are mailed to business and professional houses all over the country.

"At this season of the year, when most every one is called upon to render thanks for the great benefits of life, health, liberty, peace and good-will to all mankind, we trust you will give the vast army here, who cherish nothing but good-will towards you, a kindly thought—and then help those who are learning to help themselves.

"To all who contribute—we are proud to devote an entire complimentary section of our souvenir program, hoping that you will respond to this worthy cause with a dollar—more if you like or can.

"We cannot stand still! We must go forward! Will you help us keep our library and other recreations? Thanking you, we are,

"Appealingly yours.
"HUNTSVILLE PRISON SHOW,
"Adv. Mgr., E. A. Butler."

The Hippodrome sent a check of $5 and the following ad:

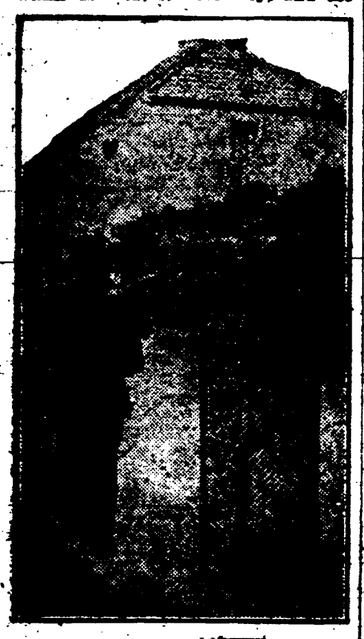
STREET CLEANING AND EFFICIENCY

Must Be Performed In a Systematic Manner.

REDUCED TO A SCIENCE.

The Purpose Is to Remove as Quickly and as Cheaply as Possible All Foreign Matter In Highways and So Conduce to the Health of the Public.



The cleaning of streets, to be properly carried out, should be under the supervision of engineers of experience, as where the work is put in the hands of mere politicians, as a sort of any good fellow's job, the results, as seen in so many American cities, are about what could be expected, says Frank Koester in "Modern City Planning and Maintenance."

The lack of system and want of technical training on the part of the officials in charge make street cleaning unnecessarily expensive, leave the streets in a bad condition and cause the cleaning to be carried out in disagreeable and insanitary ways.

In foreign cities engineers specialize on this subject. Street cleaning has been reduced to a science, and economy, efficiency and the comfort and convenience of the public are considered at every point.

The purpose of street cleaning is to remove as quickly and as cheaply as possible all foreign matter in the streets and thus to conduce to the health of the public by minimizing the circulation of germ laden dust.

The cleaning of streets should be carried out in a systematic and thorough manner. The cleaners should proceed in crews with the necessary apparatus both to clean the streets and the sidewalks as well, if necessary, and the layout of the work should be such that no member of the crew need wait on the progress of the other, but all proceed simultaneously, and when they have passed through the street the work will be done. The method of piecemeal street cleaning, with the householder sweeping the dirt into the street, the street cleaner sweeping it into piles and the piles being removed by wagons, with the occasional passing first on one side of the street and then on the other of some piece of street cleaning apparatus, results in a continual stirring up of dust, to the great discomfort of all concerned, while the street never really gets cleaned.

The number of men in the cleaning crew depends on the kind of machinery used. As no machine is capable of reaching all parts of the street, a certain amount of manual sweeping is necessary, especially when the sidewalks are cleaned by the municipality. Such manual sweeping should be carried on in conjunction with the machine sweeping, so that, as indicated, the whole width of the street will be cleaned at once.

In order that such cleaning may proceed with efficiency and dispatch and consequently with economy the streets must be practically clear of traffic, as the presence of vehicles, especially those standing at the curb, greatly delays the work of the crew.

As the operation of such a crew also hinders traffic and as the public prefers to see the streets clean rather than to see them being cleaned, it is essential to select a suitable hour for cleaning. German cities have conducted numerous tests for finding out the most favorable hour. The city of Dresden adopted the practice of cleaning the main streets in the early morning hours, beginning about 4 a. m. and finishing the business sections by 6 a. m., some 20 to 30 per cent of the entire street area. The cleaning of the remainder of the streets proceeds immediately after the main streets are finished, and the whole city is cleaned by 9 a. m. Only streets in outlying districts are cleaned later in the day, often in the afternoon, but all streets must be cleaned once a day, whether there is much dirt or little, as then. The practice of Dresden has been followed by practically all the German cities.

GERMANY'S FORESIGHT.

Has a Great Central Market in Berlin Under Railway Station.

The important question of how to feed its population is a serious one for the German people even in time of peace. The problem is, of course, a thousand times greater during the present war. Germany now fully believes that it can feed the fatherland for at least a year. The German government, with rare foresight, has always borne in mind that the time might arise when it would have to be fully prepared for such a condition. This is especially true of Berlin.

Right under the famous Stadtbahn (city railroad) on the busy Alexander platz, in the eastern part of Berlin, the Berlin municipality erected its great central market. Let it be remembered that the Stadtbahn was built primarily for military purposes, and when lately the German army around the German capital was mobilized every officer, every soldier, knew his particular seat on the railroad which carried him to the front.

In the same way the great central market supplying most of Berlin's food supply was established right under one of the stations of the Stadtbahn, so that at all times trains could most conveniently bring food supplies from all parts of Germany and from foreign countries; also the direct connection of the markets with the Stadtbahn by means of a viaduct has made possible the rapid unloading of market freight.

The city of Berlin assumed the cost of the viaduct, tracks and depot of the central market, but the Prussian railroad bears the responsibility for the loading and withdrawal of freights. However, the maintenance of the tracks, payment of the salaries of railroad officials and furnishing of materials are left to the city. Elevators also make possible the bringing of the foodstuffs to the lower floors of the market.

Not only goods are now carried by special market trains running to the central market in the night, but are also brought by trains from a distance and pass over the regular state railroads. While originally market trains had to wait until regular trains left, it is now possible that full cars are united and even during the day run to the market halls. In fact, rapid uploading is obtained by a regulation that first trains must be emptied within an hour and a half after bills of lading have been received.

A CLEANUP WEEK.

Value of Such a Campaign Exemplified In a Pennsylvania Town.

If there is any one who doubts the value of cleanup campaigns they might find some enlightenment in the success of such a campaign recently completed in Washington, Pa.

This campaign was worked up gradually, culminating in one big day. The city was divided into wards, districts, blocks and streets in such a way that when cleanup day arrived there was somebody responsible for the tidiness of every street and alley. A carefully arranged schedule was made up for the direction of the transfer wagons for the gathering of rubbish, and thirty teams completed the collections between 3 and 5 o'clock on cleanup day. All rubbish from streets and alleys was loaded on freight cars lying on railroad sidings and shipped out of town. Five carloads in all were shipped away, while twice twenty cars were collected and burned by individuals on private grounds. The total cost, including office expenses, stationery, advertising, transportation, labor and freight, was $204.

Street Cleaning Exhibition.

The department of street cleaning of New York city recently held an exhibition of street cleaning appliances. The purpose of the exhibition was threefold—first, to show the people of the city of New York the types of equipment now in service; second, to give manufacturers of modern street cleaning apparatus an opportunity of exhibiting their various appliances, not only to the citizens of New York, but also to officials of surrounding communities who were invited to attend; third, to provide an opportunity for practical tests or demonstrations of street cleaning appliances. The street cleaning apparatus included all sorts of brooms, brushes, sweeping machines, flushing machines and other equipment or appliances used in cleaning streets and removing snow, garbage, ash and rubbish cans or receptacles used by householders; carts, wagons, motor trucks or other vehicles used for collecting garbage, ashes, rubbish and street sweepings; conveyances for transporting refuse by water or by rail; methods used for the disposal of garbage, ashes, rubbish and street sweepings, including garbage reduction works, garbage crematories, incinerators, destructors, etc. The exhibition attracted a great deal of attention and is worthy of being duplicated in other municipalities.

Commission Government.

According to the federal census bureau, there are 195 cities in the United States with a population in excess of 30,000. Of these 195 cities sixty-nine have adopted the commission form of government, the success of which is evidenced by the fact that, while the average per capita operating expenses of all the cities is $17.34 per year, only five cities under commission government—Sacramento, Cal.; San Diego, Cal.; Pasadena, Cal.; Denver, Colo., and Atlantic City, N. J.—exceed this average. In the case of Denver the expense of operating is offset by the exceedingly low per capita debt of only $9.88.

Inman and Hoppe, Billiard Champions

MELBOURNE INMAN and Willie Hoppe, now touring the country in a billiard tournament, are both champions, Inman at the English game and Hoppe at balk line. The two games are so dissimilar that Inman far surpasses his rival in the one department, while the Englishman has little chance to defeat Hoppe at balk line. English billiards are played on a table with pockets, the table being considerably larger than the standard billiard table. Pocketing the cue ball or making caroms count while pocketing the object ball ends the turn. While the table on which it is played is large, the pockets and balls are small, so that the methods of play differ materially from the balk line or carom game. Inman is on the left in the cut.

LITTLE BITS OF SPORTING CHAT

Three Pennants Are Limit In Baseball.

TEAMS BEGIN TO SLOW UP.

Trio of Successive Victories All Any Pilot Has Accomplished—Eddie Collins Sold For Highest Price In Baseball—Other Stars Who Brought Big Figures.

The reason why a manager cannot win more than three successive pennants under modern conditions of baseball has always been the same and will probably always remain the same until that record smasher of the future comes along and shows us that these conditions do not amount to anything.

In the first place, a team grows old and slows up. That is nature, and against nature even the greatest managers in baseball cannot successfully contend, strange though that may seem. While one team is growing old at the business of winning pennants younger teams are popping up on every hand and making the going harder every day for the old boys.

It might be argued that a manager of a pennant winner might keep constantly replacing his veterans with youngsters, but experience shows that youngsters of sufficient ability cannot be found or developed rapidly enough to keep pace with the general momentum demanded of a pennant winner.

It is generally admitted that Connie Mack had one of the greatest baseball clubs that ever took the field, yet with that great team Connie Mack could not even lift himself to the distinction enjoyed by other managers who had poorer teams.

He could not win three times in a row, let alone four times.

Stallings, with a team that beat out McGraw's three time pennant winners and then whaled the life out of Mack's one of the greatest of all time outfits, may not be able to win his second successive pennant with that team. The Boston Red Sox were able to beat Connie Mack's marvelous aggregation for the pennant and whip McGraw's three timers, but could not repeat on the world's pennant proposition.

Eddie Collins brought the largest figure ever paid for a ball player in the history of the game. The highest price ever paid up to this time was the $62,500 the Pittsburgh club shelled out for Marty O'Toole. Charley Ebbets was to pay $75,000 for Joe Tinker, but of course that did not happen. Chicago paid $18,000 for Larry Chappelle, the outfielder. Mack is given credit for having handed the Baltimore club $11,000 for Lefty Russell a couple of years ago, while Frits Maisel cost the Yankees $12,000. Rube Marquard was another high priced player, netting Indianapolis $11,000 when he first broke into fast company. Cy Seymour when in his prime was purchased for $10,000 by New York from Cincinnati, while the same club paid St. Louis $10,000 for Spike Shannon. Blackburn was bought by Comiskey from Providence for $10,000, and he, like several others of the high priced players, failed to make good.

Fred Clarke, who has signed to manage the Pittsburgh team for his fourteenth consecutive year, has issued a warning to the fans of that city to refrain from boisterous criticism of the young players who are to be tried out next spring. Clarke contends that in order to make the Pirates a pennant contender several positions will have to be filled by young men. He must develop these, and he contends that if the fans insist on roasting and abusing these recruits his task will be an impossible one.

Pittsburgh patrons, or a portion of them at least, have been rather severe in their summing up of some of the players' work. This has been particularly true of the crowd which is within earshot of the first baseman, and as a result Clarke has had a lot of trouble getting a competent man to fill that position. Konetchy, who recently jumped to the Feds, blamed his inability to make good for the Pirates to the crowd which sat near first base and made life miserable for him.

One of the oddities of the recent baseball season arose in a Federal league game between the St. Louis and Pittsburgh teams. Larue Kirby of St. Louis batted out of turn. The bases were filled, and Kirby cleared them with a long hit. The opposing captain was "wise," and when he appealed to the umpire the official called out the man who should have batted, which is according to rule. The runners had to go back and Kirby had to bat over. All he did was to make another solid hit, drive in runs again and win the game.

Mrs. Ad Wolgast has reached the conclusion that it's about time for her husband to quit fighting. The opinion is gaining support among those who follow the game. Adolph has suffered four broken bones in the ring, and that's enough. The only unbreakable thing about Wolgast appears to be his pocketbook. That is re-enforced by an army of iron men 200,000 strong.

"In five years I've handled 150 fighters," says Dan Morgan. "I've had as many as twenty-four fighters at one time. Last winter I had nineteen going. I've handled $400,000, being interested in the gates of over 2,000 fights. I never had a man injured in all those battles."

FOREST FOR EVERY CITY.

Profits From These Would Pay For Many Municipal Improvements.

It is being urged that every city and town in the United States, whether large or small, should have a forest, just as every well managed farm has a wood lot and for the same reason—to save money.

The farmer who has a wood lot does not have to depend on his neighbors for firewood or lumber. He produces all the timber he needs for his own use and often has a surplus, which he can sell at a profit. The town or city which becomes the owner of a forest can accomplish the same things on a larger and more profitable scale. Besides supplying its inhabitants with firewood and lumber at less than they would otherwise have to pay, it can reap a handsome profit from the sale of the surplus products of its own forest to outsiders.

Municipal forests are recommended as the best means of insuring better schools, streets, sewers, lights and water systems and at the same time making taxes lower. The profits they can be made to earn would go a long way toward making sinking funds unnecessary and enabling a city to make needed improvements without burdening itself for many generations with bond issues.

Town forests, although new to the United States, have long been established institutions in many European countries. The city of Zurich, in Switzerland, has owned a forest since 200 years before Columbus discovered America. It is called the Sihlwald and at present is yielding an annual net profit of $8 per acre.

There are many such forests in France, but it is in Germany that they have reached the highest stage of development and show the greatest profit. The city of Baden-Baden owns a forest of 12,849 acres, which last year showed a net profit of $5.25 per acre, or more than $67,000. In Heidelberg, Frankfort, Pforzheim and Forbach the town forests show an annual net profit ranging from $1.70 to $12.14 per acre.

The town forests in Germany cover land which would otherwise be lying waste. Besides the saving they make in taxes they benefit the people by improving living conditions in the towns. They protect the water supplies, cool the atmosphere near them and help break the force of the wind.

There are millions of acres of waste lands in the United States which might profitably be turned into municipal forests by the towns and cities within whose limits they lie. On much of this land fine trees have grown and will grow again if given the chance.

The individual will not reforest this land because he cannot afford to wait for a crop. But a city or town can afford to reclaim this land and let future generations reap the benefit, as has been done in Europe.

In Massachusetts a concerted effort is being made for the establishment of town forests. Laws allowing municipalities to own and operate them have been passed, and the State Forestry association is offering a series of prizes to encourage the work.

UNBEAUTIFUL BROADWAY.

Not a Street, but a Convulsion, Says an Architect.

In an address recently delivered before the meeting of the American Civic association at Washington Arnold W. Brunner, a New York city architect, said that "in its present state Broadway is not a street; it is a convulsion." Mr. Brunner further said that every favorable chance for design on Broadway had been thrown away and that Times square and Madison square are conspicuous instances of neglected opportunities.

"Beginning at Fifty-ninth street, we find Columbus circle a grievous disappointment," he went on to say. "Here is an intersection of important streets, an attenuated monument in the middle and an entrance to Central park in the picture, but the surrounding buildings are distressing, and there is no composition, no harmony. It goes all to pieces.

"The Metropolitan Opera House, where the best operatic performances in the world are presented, has no setting at all and is squeezed in between a bank and a shop. Opposite and up and down for many blocks are hideous cheap structures, built largely of galvanized iron, and billboards. The larger and more pretentious buildings have facades with more or less successful attempts at design, but their too conspicuous sides go bare."

Christmas Community Celebration.

Community celebration of Christmas is gaining ground all over America. This is in distinction from the age old family celebration and the recent custom of making the celebration for others not so fortunate. The new idea of community celebrations includes the well to do and bases the programs upon the development of a fraternalistic spirit.

In a bulletin issued by the extension division of the University of Wisconsin for free distribution there appears a large number of definite suggestions for planning and carrying out a simple or elaborate community Christmas celebration. Here will be found something of the short history of this movement, what it has meant in some communities that have already used it, how to go about arranging it, involving such details as decoration, lighting, caroling and especially the tree itself. Suggestions are also given for the distribution of gifts by the community or charity organizations, and there are lists of games for use in the church, school, social center or home celebration.

FASHION HINT

By JUDIC CHOLLET

This coat with the flaring cape effect and which includes sleeves sewed to the armholes is especially well suited to youthful figures.

In the illustration the material is gabardine in the forest green that is such a pronounced favorite, and the trimming is black velvet.

For simple costumes gabardine, nibeline and broadcloth are favorites, but for the coat one of two materials could be used, chiffon velvet over broadcloth, or one of the new close haired nibelines.

For the sixteen-year-old size the coat will require four yards of material twenty-seven inches wide, with one-half yard twenty-one inches wide for the collar.

This May Manton pattern is cut in sizes for girls from sixteen to eighteen years of age and for small women. Send 10 cents to this office, giving number, 8884, and it will be promptly forwarded to you by mail. If in haste send an additional two cent stamp for letter postage. When ordering use coupon.

PRICES HIGHER IN DULL SESSION

THEY SOARED BUT THE BANKS LOST CASH; RECORD HALF DAY

New York Dec. 28.—The stock market yesterday calls for little comment beyond the statement that it was the dullest half-holiday session on record. Five minutes' trading in active times has often yielded a total as large. So far as the trading had significance it lay rather in the fact that prices advanced than in the extreme dullness into which the market fell. The absence of pressure when traders left the market to itself in the first hour seemed to induce short covering and a little other traders' buying in the second hour. Despite a closing reaction, prices in most instances showed advances which ran to a point or more in a number of issues.

The bank statement reflected the holiday withdrawals of cash and the earlier of the preparations for the January disbursements. The cash holdings of the Clearing House Institutions declined by over $10,000,000, while deposits increased, as did loans very moderately. Reserve deposits with the Federal Reserve Bank rose by over $3,000,000, and thus the decrease in surplus fell considerably short of the decline in cash holdings. The reduction in surplus was $8,176,000, which still left the banks with $117,121,000 above requirements.

With the surplus as large as that, the increase or decrease in any one week has relatively little money market significance. So long, however, as the surplus remains at any such level it will keep money market rates under pressure. With any increase in trade the supply of commercial bills would increase, and with any expansion in speculative operations on the Stock Exchange the demand for collateral loans would rise, but in neither direction is there present appearance of a demand sufficient to halt the downward tendency which has been manifested in all departments of the money market. All that the Federal Reserve Bank statement shows at the moment is that there is no present demand for the rediscount or note-issuing facilities of that institution.

More British Flights Expected

The Hague, Dec. 28.—Private advices received here to-day from Hamburg state that the British aviators caused heavy damage in their aerial raid on Cuxhaven and that panic prevails in several of the coast towns of East Friesland, Oldenburg and Hanover as a result of the attack. On their return flight to the ships awaiting them off the coast the British aviators threw four bombs upon the island of Laneoog, northwest of Wilhelmshaven.

The official reports from Germany declare that no damage was done on the island, but unofficial reports state that fortifications erected there were wrecked by the explosion of two of the bombs.

Hundreds of refugees, say the reports from Hamburg, are fleeing to Harburg and Delmenhorst. They believe that the success achieved by the British fliers will result in another attack in the near future.

Dispatches from other German towns say that the greatest excitement has been caused even in the interior by the aerrial raid, though attempts are being made to conceal the damage that was done. It is said the German people are criticizing the alleged inefficiency of the protective methods used to prevent hostile ships sailing through Heligoland Bight. The British warships supporting the aviators went through this body of water practically without interference.

London, Dec. 28.—While England is rejoicing over the successful aeroplane attacks upon Cuxhaven and Brussels, it is reported that the Germans will make a quick reply, either in the same manner or by another naval attack upon the coast. As a result seven more aviators and their aeroplanes were added to-day to the aerial squadron patrolling the coast. The aviators who joined the Royal flying corps to-day have just finished their training at Salisbury Plains.

While the spectacular feat of the aviators who reached Cuxhaven appeals to the general public, to the military and naval experts the successful invasion of German waters by the cruisers Arethusa and Undaunted, together with their repulse of Zeppelin airships and submarines attacking them, is much morre significant.

These experts see in this dash the beginning of active efforts on the part of the navy to force the German fleet into a fight. They declare such a battle would result only in a British victory and that this would determine the result of the war. The naval incursion was led by Captain Reginald Y. Tyrwhitt, commander of the Arethusia. The Undaunted was commanded by Captain Cecil H. Fox. Both of these men are comparatively young. Fox was promoted to his present rank in October last.

Will Congress Itself Abstain?

Congress has the power to do foolish things. The House voted by a majority the other day for the resolution asking the States to yield their local right to determine whether intoxicating liquors should be prohibited. A two-thirds vote would have validated the measure, so far as the House is concerned. Mr. Hobson is now pressing a bill to make the District of Columbia "dry."

We assume that most Congressmen, and most of those who voted to pass the Hobson amendment, occasionally drink cocktails or other more or less intoxicating beverages. They listened cynically, no doubt, to Mr. Hobson's rhetoric about the fourteen sovereign States that have prohibited the manufacture and sale of intoxicants within their borders, and about the continental United States, "78 per cent. of which is now dry territory." They hardly needed to consult the Statistical Abstract to learn that the consumption of alcoholic liquors per head in the United States has increased enormously while three-quarters of it was becoming "dry."

Unlike Russia, prohibition cannot be imposed on the American people from their national capital. An autocracy has some effectual advantages shown in the reported effects of the prohibition ukase of the Czar. In this country reforms must proceed from the business and bosoms of its men, by the free exercise of their wills. Will each Congressman who votes for Mr. Hobson's bills impose their prohibitions on himself?—New York Times.

RUSSIANS HOLD MANY MOUNTAIN STRONGHOLDS

They Capture German Artillery; Von Hindeburg's Army Halted; Germans Continue to Resist Heavy Blows

Special to The Evening Times

Petrograd, Dec. 29.—While the Austrian army in northern Galicia is in retreat the battle between the Germans and the Russian forces in Poland continues a deadlock with advances at some points offset by retirements in others.

Having cut in two the Austrian army that pressed forward after lifting the Russian siege at Cracow, Grand Duke Nicholas, the Russian commander-in-chief, is now expected to exercise a similar strategy against the German contingent of Field Marshal Von Hindenburg's armies. The master stroke of the Russians has crushed the Austrian forces and it will be some time before they can rally, reform and be in a position to give any materil aid to the Germans.

In the meantime it is believed that Cracow will again be under siege before long.

Official dispatches state that all the important passes in the Carpathians are now held by the Russians. The efforts of the Austrians to transport troops to the relief of the hard driven forces in the Carpathians proved a miserable failure.

It is officially announced that more than 25,000 prisoners, including 250 officers, have been taken in Galicia and Poland during the latter half of last week. A great quantity of war stores fell into Russian hands including fifty rapid firre guns, two ammunition trains, hospital supplies and several heavy pieces of artillery.

Official dispatches say that General Dankl's Austrian army, whose pursuit of the Russian army after the siege of Cracow had been turned into a retreat. Hundreds of soldiers, overcome by the cold weather and lack of food are falling behind in the retreat and are being made prisoners.

Field Marshal Von Hindenburg's army has been halted before Warsaw and the plight of Prittwitz is now more serious than it was before the Russians retired from the region of Cracow.

It may now be necessary for Field Marshal Von Hindenburg to reconstruct in its entirety his plan of campaign, but in the meantime the Russians will be hammering at his line at every point in an effort to pierce it.

Between the upper Vistula and the Pilica the Germans are on the defensive and heavy blows are being administered against them.

The left bank of the Nida is now completely freed of Austrians.

In the region of the upper Vistula the Russians are making progress slowly, owing to the stubborn defense of the Germans.

In the southern theater of war the Russians have crossed the Lansin river, driving back the Turks. The Russians have also driven back the Turks behind a line running from Khamour and Agadane, taking many prisoners. The losses of the Turks in this region have been enormous and they are also suffering from lack of clothing and food.

"The situation in the Russo-Turkish theater of war is favorable to our forces at every point and all along the line our losses are much lighter than those of the enemy," says a military dispatch from the southern field headquarters at Tiflis.

GERMAN SPY SYSTEM FRUSTRATED RAID

Special to The Evening Times.

Harwich, Eng., Dec. 29.—That spies in England gave warning of the British raid against Cuxhaven on Christmas was the belief expressed here to-day by members of the crew of the light cruiser Arethusa.

Bombs dropped by British airmen caused much damage to the municipal gas works and also to the fortifications.

"The Germans seem to have received news of our coming," said Lieut. B. C. Watson of the Arethusa. "It certainly looked as though there had been a leakage of information, for we found a Zeppelin awaiting our arrival when we got off the Cuxhaven harbor. Many bombs were dropped from this Zeppelin ship."

New Fighting, Say Vienna Officials

Vienna, Dec. 29.—A new battle between the Austrians and the Servians is developing in the southern theater of war, according to an official report issued by the Austrian war office. It follows:

"Two new frontier skirmishes have occurred in the south and a new battle seems to be developing. The Servians have blown up the bridge at Semlin.

"North of Duka Pass the Austrians avoided the Russian attacks. Russian attacks in the Carpathians are very severe. An attack by the Russians on the plain between the Dunajec river and the Bania has been repelled."

Semlin is opposite Belgrade.

Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria.

The world hardly expected Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria-Hungary would survive long after the war began. The murder of his nephew, Grand Duke Francis Ferdinand, and his consort was a great blow to the aged ruler, and when the war began shortly afterward he was not able to take any active part in it. A month after the conflict started he was reported near death's door, but he rallied and seemed to improve. The emperor celebrated his eighty-fourth birthday and the sixty-sixth year of his reign about as the war began.

FRENCH TRYING TO [illegible]

Special to The Evening Times

Paris, Dec. 29.—Although a severe storm has been raging over the greater part of the battle front since Sunday night fighting is still progressing at some points. The Germans utilized the stormy weather in an effort to deliver surprise attacks in West Flanders, east of Amiens, and on the heights of the Meuse, but all were repelled.

The French war office has issued an official communique saying that French artillery is everywhere proving superior to that of the German armies. The statement follows:

"In the reports sent from German general headquarters to the Berlin newspapers stated that the French would find difficulty in proving that their artillery could gain the upper hand against the German guns. Have the Germans forgotten the staff order published in the Frankfurter Zeitung on December 8th in which the German commander-in-chief of the South German army congratulated the German troops upon the gallantry they displayed under the most violent attacks of the French artillery which they had been unable to oppose with equal effectiveness?"

French artillery, working in a snow storm, is shelling the works defending Muelhausen (in Alsace) upon the west.

A hard struggle is in progress among the sand dunes of the North sea coast, northeast of Lombartzyde, where the French are trying to extend their lines in the direction of Westende.

It is reported from Furnes that two German aeroplanes have arrived at Heyst "for use in the German aerial invasion against England."

The Belgians have crossed the Yser in considerable numbers north of Dixmude and have strengthened their positions on the right bank.

ENGLAND WILL GIVE WAY TO U.S.

Berlin, Dec. 29.—News of the transmission of a note by the U. S. government warning England against continued interference with American shipping on the high seas created intense satisfaction in official circles today. Belief was expressed on every hand, however, that England would give way to the desires of the United States rather than risk incurring the hostility of the American government. America is powful friend to have at this time.

The German press comments at length upon the protest and takes occasion to say that England has "arrogantly boasted long enough of her domination of the world's seas."

War office dispatches say that storms have interferred with operations in France, but that the French continue to attack on the north seacoast in West Flanders where they have been repulsed. In Poland the dispatches say that there is no decisive development.

APPOINTMENTS DEFERRED

Washington, Dec. 29.—In the Senate to-day Senator O'Gorman of New York asked that the confirmation of Major H. W. Childs as courtmaster at Battleboro, Vt., be deferred on the ground that the courtmaster had violated a written pledge to name a candidate to be selected by the Democratic committee of that State.

The complaint was filed with Senator O'Gorman by J. G. Moore of Albany, Conservation Commissioner of New York. He said he acted for the Democratic organization of Vermont.

MILITIAMEN UNDER ARREST; STATE DEP'T MOVES

Canadian Officials Prompt to Probe the Shooting of Americans; Troops Disobeyed Orders

Special to The Evening Times

Buffalo, Dec. 29.—Careful and complete investigation of the shooting of Walter Smith and Charles Dorsch, the two American hunters, by the Canadian infantrymen yesterday is promised by those in authority on both sides of the Niagara river. Word reached Buffalo this morning that the State department at Washington would send special officers here immediately. Friends of the bereaved Smith family to the number of 150 sent a petition to Washington asking that the investigation be started without delay. Congressman Charles B. Smith, who is a member of the committee on foreign affairs, wired from Washington that he had asked the State department to conduct its inquiry at once.

Vice Consul J. B. Curtis of Fort Erie wired an account of the shooting to Secretary of State Bryan at Washington, but up to this morning had not received a reply.

Commissioner of Militia Sam Hughes, at Ottawa, announced he would make an immediate investigation to find out who was at fault in the shooting. Coroner J. R. Menecke of Bridgeburg impaneled a jury for the inquest which was begun yesterday afternoon and will be continued Wednesday.

The three soldiers who did the shooting are under arrest at the town hall at Fort Erie which is temporarily used as a barracks by the troops. Col. Hugh Rose took statements from the men late yesterday afternoon and later went to military headquarters at Toronto.

Col. Rose, on behalf of the Canadian militia, and Richard Mains, chief of the Ontario Provincial police, gave strict orders for no one to make any statement regarding the shooting. It was learned however, from eye witnesses that Police Chief Delaney of Fort Erie [illegible] and wounded Dorsch. Delaney was asked to verify this but said he could not confirm it or deny it. He said his story would come out on the witness at the inquest to-morrow.

WILSON DEMANDS ENGLISH RESPECT

Washington, Dec. 29.—The President to-day confirmed the report that a protest had been sent to Great Britain by the United States against the treatment given to America shipping on the high seas. The protest was sent to the British foreign office on Saturday but no reply has yet been received.

The President made it clear to his callers that the position taken by the United States is undebatable so far as the theory of international law is concerned. He indicates that the American position is technically and legally above reproach. The same stand that Great Britian herself has taken in former wars he stated, and the President also said that each case of a vessel had been made a ground of protest almost from the beginning of the war, and the present note was only on binding all cases. The message deals with other phases of the matter beyond the fact that damages will have to be paid by Great Britain in all cases of detention regardless of the outcome of the present situation. The sending of the demand is a surprise to diplomats who had no advance information about being prepared. It is expected that the leader of the American government will be followed by other neutral nations.

Washington, Dec. 29.—Secretary Bryan to-day announced that the State department had begun an inquiry into the shooting of American duck hunters near Fort Erie, Ontario, yesterday. Mr. Bryan said that the American Vice Consul Curtis at Fort Erie probably will transmit a full report of the incident.

Wilson Will Have His Hands Full

Washington, Dec. 29.—With a programme mapped out which provides for the consideration of the annual supply bills before any other class of legislation, Congress to-day came back to work determined to dispose of all its business by Mar. 4th.

While open sessions of the Senate will be devoted to the supply bills, the executive sessions of that body will take up the patronage fight with President Wilson.

It was predicted that a big struggle will follow President Wilson's nominations of the members of the new federal trade commission, which are expected to reach the Senate in a few days. Many members of the upper House are known to be pigued because the President has not taken the Senate into his confidence in picking men to nominate. The struggle over postmaster and other nominations also was predicted to be continued.

Between times, when the appropriation bills are in committees or in conference the congressional houses have a little leisure, national defense, conservation and similar propaganda will be debated, but leaders of both bodies are agreed that none of these topics shall be permitted to delay the appropriation measures.

In the House a lively fight will be waged over woman suffrage, but the leaders do not expect that this will consume more than a day. The ship purchase bill also is scheduled for early consideration.

Opinions

Advice Is Cheap.

Diversify! When the cotton planters of the South appealed to Washington for relief because of the large crop of cotton with no market for it excepting at sacrifice prices, they were advised to diversify their crops. Good advice, but of very little use in this emergency. It is the same kind of advice that the manufacturers of the country were given when they were asked what they should do after the tariff had been reduced and the market opened to an invasion of foreign goods. They were advised to diversify their trade and to seek more of it abroad. When these manufacturers asked how they could do this with wages from 50 to 100 per cent. higher in this country than abroad, they were advised to make their work men more efficient. Advice is very cheap, but it doesn't fill the dinner pail or the pay envelope or help to pay dividends.—Leslie's.

John Muir.

John Muir, the famous naturalist, who has just died in Los Angeles, Cal., was born in Dunbar, Scotland, on April 21, 1838. His parents sent him to school at the age of 3. When he was 11 years old the family came to the United States, settling in Wisconsin. John took an active part in clearing the land for the new farm, but his delight was in study, especially in mathematics. From 1860 to 1864 he studied at the University of Wisconsin. He took special courses and did not receive a degree until 30 years later, when Harvard gave him an A. M.

Immediately after leaving college Muir took up his life work as a botanist, geologist and explorer. On foot, with little equipment save a note book and a pocket magnifying glass, he tramped his way over most of the United States, finally reaching California, which for the rest of his life was as much his home as any particular spot on the earth's surface could be said to be. In 1876 he joined the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey and remained in that service five years, during which time he explored explore the western coast of North America from California to Alaska, and discovered in Alaska Muir Bay and the great glacier that still bears his name. In 1881 he served one of the expedition on the United States steamship Corwin, which explored the Bering Straits and Arctic Sea in search of the ill-fated De Long expedition which was lost in the Jeannette. In 1893 he went to Norway and Switzerland to study glacial conditions there. In 1903-4 he went on a tour of exploration that covered Russia, Siberia, Manchuria, northern India, Australia and New Zealand, and in 1911 and 1912 he made extensive journeys in the little known regions of South America and Africa. Some of his travels were in company with John Burroughs. He was a prolific writer for the magazines and the author of several books, including "The Mountains of California" and "Our National Parks," in which works he made an elaborate classification of faunal and floral life.

Muir first attracted national attention as a writer by a description of Yosemite Park. A scientist with the vision of a poet, a passionate lover of nature whose ideals were thoroughly practical, he taught a Nation to respect its own property and to preserve from wanton destruction what man could never replace. To his earnest preaching and personal influence more than any other circumstance the United States owes its system of national parks and forest preserves. But for his persistent efforts the Yosemite today would probably be a barren waste, its mountains denuded and its water-courses arid. What was accomplished there was the starting-point in a great national plan to save from ruin the forests and watersheds on both coasts. The geologist who tramped the Sierras and traced the course of glaciers in distant lands converted working scientists to his views. The dreamer who saw in nature's wonders something to be saved from ruin for posterity's sake overcame the selfish hostility of lumber-men and land-grabbers.—Utica Herald Dispatch.

THE DATE IS SET

Fulton people have heerd John S. Knox of the Knox School of Applied Salesmanship. When in this city he gave a talk that rang through the big Chautauqua tent, and it has been ringing in the ears of many of his auditors' ears ever since. One of Mr. Knox's recent utterances is in effect that ninety per cent of the retail people of this country are making no money, and, to be frank, they have been unwilling to pay the price of success." He adds to this by saying that the mail order people are putting forth tremendous efforts to get the retailers' business.

Mr. Knox has studied the soap plan of one firm and the big plant of another mail order house, in order that he might get their methods. He was told that if the retailers of this country persist in using their present methods the mail order people will soon get most of the business.

These sweeping claims coming from a man who has for years unprofitably, perhaps, fought the mail order houses, impels one to sit up and take notice. Mr. Knox is in the fight against mail order houses as a matter of principle. That his ideas of weapons and methods of using them are of advantage to men in the retail business of the country is found in the fact that his enemies are most zealous in studying them. He tells the retailer, the business men, that they are largely to blame for sitting passively by while the mail order houses are using every means to reach the people. The best advertising writers are employed and tons of literature are sent out. His books written on efficiency in salesmanship are sought by employes of the Chicago mail order houses. Those men study his methods, because the Knox ideas gets next to people. He teaches men to find out what the people want and how to supply them. He teaches men how to beat the mail order houses at their own game.

Knox tells us that co-operation and not competition is the life of trade. In other words, we must enter into our neighbors' problems.

January 1, 1915, is the date set for a beginning. Are the men of Fulton ready for "a long pull, a strong pull and a pull all together?"

BOYS TEACH FATHERS TO FARM

The growth of the boys' corn club movement is described in the report of the General Education Board showing how youngsters in all parts of the country are proving the value of scientific farming methods.

Sporadic clubs, the report says, had been organized before 1908, when Dr. Knapp began to develop the idea. The work was taken up in practically every section of the United States, and every boy was urged to plant an acre of corn on his father's farm. It was planned to organize clubs in every neighborhood, then form county and State groups, and finally a federation of clubs.

Local county and State prizes were awarded annually, and the most successful boys were sent to Washington to meet the Secretary of Agriculture and the President. The boys, however, had to sell their crops, and the prices they received for their products counted as points in the prize award decision.

"As a rule," the report says, "each member works a plot of one acre. The county superintendent of education is usually in charge. Appointed special agent of the Department of Agriculture, with a nominal salary of $1 a year, he obtains the franking privilege, which enables him to disseminate information and instruction among them.

"The growth of the club work is itself the best proof of the enthusiasm excited and the substantial material results achieved. Nor has its influence been limited to the boys, for the crops raised have set new standards and opened new visits for the adult farmer.

"In 1910, for example, the boys' club of Holmes county, Miss., averaged 76 bushels of corn an acre, while the boys' fathers were averaging 16. In the same season 100 boys in various parts of the South averaged 133.7 bushels, and one boy produced more than 200. The following season 100 boys averaged 137.48 bushels; seven boys raised more than 200. In 1911 471 made more than 100 bushels to the acre; in 1912, 493.

"In the awarding of prizes for these notable performances various factors are taken into consideration. Thirty per cent is allowed for yield, 30 per cent for the showing of profit, 20 per cent for the best ten ears and 20 per cent for the best written report."—New York Tribune.

BEWITCHING NET AND SATIN EVENING GOWN FOR THE DEBUTANTE.

The stylish and handsome gown illustrated is of sequin embroidered black net over pale pink satin. A salient style feature is the unique sash. A band of iridescent sequins edges the bottom of the skirt and outlines the decollete bodice. The sleeves are only wispy ones of bows of ribbon.

TO SUCCEED JUDGE ROSS

Judge Cady Will Be Named to Onondaga County Court.

Syracuse, Dec. 29.—Municipal Court Judge W. G. Cady of this city has been recommended to Governor-elect Charles S. Whitman for appointment as a county judge of Onondaga county to succeed Judge W. M. Ross, elected to the Supreme Court. This would give Mayor Will the appointment of Judge Cady's successor and it is said he will name William S. Farmer to the place.

Willard A. Rill, president of the Common Council, is the leading candidate for transfer tax appraiser in Onondaga county.

THE SWEET THING!

This is what a New Orleans writer had to say about Uncle Tom McClary, California fight promoter: "A slim figure that belies the dominant personality that lies beneath—the suggestion of a steel spring underlying his rather delicate figure—eyes snapping with vigor and ready intelligence—mouth firm and indomitable—chin that of a Roman Emperor, while a wide and high brow bespeaks a mentality of a high order—features clean cut as a cameo—strong but delicately moulded face."

ALUMNI VS. HIGH SCHOOL

College and Preparatory School Boys Will Clash New Year's Night

New Year's night the Fulton Alumni and High school basket ball teams will clash at the City Hall court. This is one of the annual attractions of the holiday season.

Tickets will be placed on sale today for the game. Most of the members of the Alumni squad are college boys who are home for the holidays and they long to test their skill against their alma mater. This affair always attracts a large crowd of rooters who are about evenly divided. Keen interest is manifested in the game and there is much speculation as to who will be the winner.

George Ward and Don Cavanaugh of the Alumni are students at Syracuse University, while Thomas Johnson attends the University of Pennsylvania.

Sale of Land for Taxes

Sale of land for unpaid State, County and City taxes for the years 1905 to 1914 inclusive.

In pursuance of and by virtue of an Act of the Legislature of the State of New York entitled "An Act to Incorporate the City of Fulton, N. Y., being Chapter 63 of the Laws of 1902 and all Acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto in reference to the collection of taxes, under Sections 252-259 inclusive of said act, notice is hereby given that I shall proceed to sell at public auction on the 7th day of January, 1915 and such succeeding days as may be necessary, at ten o'clock A. M. in the Common Council Chambers in the City Hall of the City of Fulton, N. Y., the following described parcels of land to satisfy the taxes due thereon for the years 1905, 1906, 1907, 1908, 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912, 1913, 1914, as the case may be.

If said premises or land are not sold on the 7th day of January, 1915, the sale will continue from day to day until the whole amount of said parcels are disposed of, and the taxes thereon satisfied. The amount set opposite each parcel is the amount of taxes due on the same, and the expenses of collection.

No bids shall be received in sums less than said amount.

About Football Mainly

By FRANK G. MENKE

New York, Dec. 29.—Harvard's refusal to give games to Michigan and Washington and Jefferson in 1915 is a clear case of "cold feet"—and something more.

Washington and Jefferson came so close to beating Harvard last fall that they are shivering yet up in Cambridge way. And that green eleven from Michigan put up such a great fight against the veteran Harvard team that the Crimson wants no more of Haize and Blye.

Michigan was offered a game with Harvard for 1914 and Michigan accepted although it looked like a certain defeat for Michigan. Harvard had a veteran eleven—an eleven made up of the greatest stars in the game. Michigan, on the other hand, had two veterans and nine green men. But Michigan was game—Michigan took a chance in the hope that Harvard would give it a chance in 1915 when the positions would be reversed.

But Harvard has crawled out of 1915 game with Michigan with this excuse: A game with Michigan in 1915 would be too difficult."

The Harvard folks are right. A game with Michigan in 1915 would be "difficult"—and it would be something more. It would probably be a walkaway for Michigan, for the Michigan eleven in 1915 will be an eleven that has had the benefit of 1915 experience. It will be a veteran eleven—and it will be one that every team must fear.

Harvard's great 1914 will be shot to pieces by the graduations of Hardwick, Bradlee, Pennock, Brickley, Logan and a half dozen others who brought fame and victory to Cambridge. Harvard enters 1915 with Mahan and a few others of the old guards left and Coach Houghton up against the proposition of building up a powerful team from among a dozen likely looking recruits and just a few veterans.

If Harvard went against Michigan in 1915 the chances of victory would be in favor of Michigan, but the 1914 chances were all with Harvard. Yet Michigan was sportsmanlike enough to accept the game. Michigan was willing to take a chance. They have not cold feet or a yellow streak out in Ann Arbor, but up in Cambridge, it seems they will play only those teams that they are sure they can beat.

Washington and Jefferson was dropped from the Harvard schedule for 1915. There's a reason, and the reason seems to be that Washington and Jefferson gave Harvard too hard a tussle last fall. Harvard beat W. and J. by a 10 to 9 score, and that Harvard victory was a fluke. Harvard won through luck and nothing else. W. and J. outplayed Harvard in every department of the game.

Probably up in Harvard they figured that if W. & J. could make such a showing against Harvard's veteran 1914 eleven, it might go as far as to beat Harvard in 1915. And the Crimson folks are taking no chances. They just ignored W. & J. for 1915. Harvard may offer the excuse that it dropped W. & J. because one of its players was a bit rough during the game. That's a weak excuse, for the action of the W. & J. tackle was not offensive. It was defensive roughness. He has to defend himself against the rough tactics of one of the Harvard men.

Patterson, the W. & J. tackle, was caught while doing a little rough work. The Harvard tackle wasn't caught, and that seems to be one of the excuses Harvard may have for its failure to schedule W. & J. in 1915.

Dartmouth, if you remember, used to play Harvard. And with considerable frequency, Dartmouth used to give Harvard a beating. Harvard stood it as long as it could. Then it severed athletic relations. It refused to schedule Dartmouth for future games. Its excuse was that those New Hampshire youths were too rough.

If Johnny Maulbetsch, who halfbacks for Michigan, hadn't been so rough, maybe Harvard would have given Michigan a game in 1915. But Johnny would get rough. He would bust holes right through the Harvard line. And now Harvard won't play Michigan in 1915. If Spiegel, Fleming and Young, of W. & J. hadn't been so rough, if they hadn't run right through the Harvard line and around its wings, Harvard might have given W. & J. a game in 1915, but they did—and now W. & J. must suffer.

The moral seems to be: If you want to have Harvard schedule you for a game each year, you must be careful not to come anywhere near beating it.

TRIBUTE TO GEORGE DIXON.

Joe Brown, Lifelong Friend, Tells of of Dead Pugilist's Career.

A memorial pamphlet to George Dixon, the dead negro pugilist, has been sent out by a "Joe" Brown, a long-time friend of his. In it he says:

"Dec. 18 was the eighth anniversary of the last appearance in the ring of one of the greatest little fighters who ever wore a glove, George Dixon. The little Nova Scotia black met Monk, the newsboy, in Providence on that occasion and lost the decision in fifteen rounds. He was but a shadow of his former self, and the marvelous skill and generalship which had made him a favorite were absent. After that, "Little Chocolate," who had made a fortune in the ring, sank into abject poverty, and within three years he was dead.

"Dixon's ring career extended over twenty years. He was a little pickaninny of 16 when he started in the game, and he was 36 when he engaged in his last bout. At 20 he became the bantamweight champion of the world, and a little later achieved the world's featherweight title by defeating Nunc Wallace in London, "Australian Abe" Willis in San Francisco, and Jack Skelly in New Orleans. He lost the title to Solly Smith in 1897, but soon regained it, and held the honor until Terry McGovern whipped him in 1900."

BUSH ALLOWED 5 HITS

San Diego, Cal., Dec. 28.—The baseball season is over at last. In the final game between the touring all-stars of the National and American leagues, and Grover Alexander, pitching for the Nationals, won a brilliant duel over "Bullet" Joe Bush of the Athletics, 1 to 0. Each allowed five hits. The Nationals have won two more battles than their opponents in fifty-six encounters.

To Display Motor Cycles.

Philadelphia is another city which this year has planned to have an exclusive motor cycle and accessory show. The exhibit will be held on the Continental Hotel roof garden Feb. 13 to 20. Forty booths have been provided for, and dealers of the Quaker City are enthusiastic over the outlook for a successful show.

GOSSIP OF THE WINTER LEAGUE.

Red Smith of the world's champions writes that his broken leg has mended and that he will go hunting soon.

It is said that Fielder Jones has signed Outfielder Wilhoit of the Venice (Cal.) team for the St. Louis Federals. Wilhoit hit .344 in the Coast league.

Bobby Wallace has a grand batting average of .282 for twenty years. His best year was in 1907, when he hit .339, and his poorest 1914, when he clouted .211.

James A. Gilmore is said to be on the trail of Hank O'Day as an umpire possibility. The Federal league might not be quite as bad as facing Evers, McGraw and Bresnahan.

Butcher boys, caustic fans and easily riled umpires to the contrary notwithstanding, T. Raymond Georgia Peach Cobb, be it noted, belted out enough base hits to flash across the American league batting pan some twenty-four points in front of his nearest competitor, E. Collins of Philadelphia, who hit for .344. If Cobb ever gets through a season without running afoul of any one his average, at this rate, ought to stand for all time.

BROOKE INTENDS TO STAY.

Pennsylvania Football Coach Will Stick to His Post.

An unusual situation developed in college athletics when the members of the football squad of the University of Pennsylvania united in a protest against the retention of George Brooke as coach. Brooke has a contract covering two more years. He was declared to be a failure because of the poor showing the football team made the past season.

Brooke refused to resign. He said that he had done as well as any coach could do with the material at hand and that he was entitled to a chance to prove his ability by continuing in the post. He declared that to leave under the circumstances would ruin his reputation and impair his earning capacity.

The weekly paper conducted by the students of the university took up the fight against Brooke and in an editorial said:

"There will be no sportsmanship next season if Brooke, a repudiated coach, is in charge of the team, which is now on record as believing him a failure. The university is not behind Mr. Brooke."

SUTTON IS AN OLD TIMER.

Billiard Player's Health Has Recently Improved Very Much.

George Sutton, one time holder of the 18.1 and 18.2 balk line billiard championships, was compelled to retire from the game some years ago, and for a time his health was quite precarious. It has recently improved so much that he was able to join in the tournament of the Champion Billiard Players' league, in which games are played in 150 cities scattered over the country.

Sutton was an expert pool player before he took up billiards. He believed that the skill that had won him titles at pocket billiards would also win at caroms, and so he changed his game. His judgment was correct, as was shown by his winning the championship, which he held until he lost it to Calvin Demarest.

Reds Get Infielder Olson.

August Herrmann, president of the Cincinnati National League Baseball club, has signed Ivan Olson, an infielder, who played last season on the Cleveland American league team.

THE EVENING TIMES

How To Keep Up With It

If the reader is a paid-in-advance subscriber for THE FULTON WEEKLY TIMES opportunity is given him to become listed as one of the patrons of the city's latest mark of progress—The Fulton Evening Times—in this way:

Announce by postal card, letter, phone message, solicitor or paper carrier, a desire to have your name stricken from the mailing list for the Weekly Times, and in place of the latter, to have The Fulton Evening Times served at your door each day.

Upon receipt of such information we shall place to your credit upon The Evening Times' mailing or subscription list the amount of unearned cash that has been received by The Weekly Times.

For example:

"Semit" subscribed for The Weekly Times on July 1, 1914, for one year. On January 1, 1915, he shall have remaining to his credit 50 cents.

This sum is the price charged for The Fulton Evening Times for six days a week for two months, which means that "Semit" will by making the transfer from the old to the new list, receive at least 48 pages for 50 cents, whereas by continuing as a weekly subscriber he would not get more than 13 copies and these papers would be extended over a period of six months—a slow process, isn't it?

There is another point for explanation:

Many subscribers for The Fulton Evening Times have been annoyed by the non-arrival of the paper. To one and all the hope is expressed that we shall receive as much indulgence as lies in one's power of endurance for very soon our circulation building plans and their execution should bring the desired relief to the subscriber and publisher.

In the hope that 1915 may bring to our books the names of all of our weekly patrons, and with good wishes to the people of Fulton who are doing their best to co-operate in the publication of "a Herald of Progress," we remain,

THE FULTON EVENING TIMES, Inc.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY DEPARTMENT

A Department Conducted to Meet the Demands of the Alert Home-Makers who Number Among our Readers.

"Right living should be the fourth 'R' in education."

Home-making is becoming a science and a fine art. To simply provide food for the family and a place to sleep is not enough to make a modern home. An up-to-date homemaker strives to render her home so attractive that it can compete with the club and theatre. To do so she must be constantly on the alert for new ideas and new things.

This department of The Evening Times is devoted to the idea of furnishing helpful suggestions to this great class with just the practical information and artistic ideas, and including hints on how, where, what and when to buy.

Suggestions from our readers are invited.

Proper Selection of Diet.

The eminent American physiologist Lusk says that nature, through the device of appetite, usually provides against the use of improper food, but that reason must play a part in food selections. A glass of milk and a piece of pie are poor materials for the brain of an active business man whose sedentary life requires 2,500 heat units or calories to maintain his body machinery.

We need also, water, salts, proteins and certain newly discovered substances called vitamines. All these materials are to be found in milk, beans, bread and other great fundamentals of nutrition. Solutions of cane sugar or of glucose are not the exclusive mainstays of life, and yet glucose taken alone yields 2,500 calories at a cost of 4 1-6 cents, and 2,500 calories in the form of cane sugar cost 8 1-3 cents.

Glucose is the cheapest food fuel known, but, like cane sugar or butter fat is not a complete food, in that it does not contain everything necessary for life. Commercial glucose, is absolutely harmless. A man must have sufficient calories in his diet, if he is to live properly and perform labor satisfactorily.

New Year Surprise Cake.

Cream half a cupful of butter with one cupful of sugar, then add the yolks of five eggs beaten until light, and one whole egg. Mix together one and three-quarters cupfuls of sifted flour, three and three-quarters teaspoonfuls of baking-powder and a quarter of a teaspoonful of salt and add these alternately with half a cupful of cold, sweet milk to the first mixture. Beat well, flavor with one teaspoonful of lemon juice and fold in a tiny silver ring, a bright new dime, a diminutive silver thimble and a small horseshoe. Turn into a buttered and floured cake pan and bake in a moderate oven for forty-five minutes. When cold, cover with cocoanut frosting and decorate with holly.

Old-Style Wedding Cake.

Fruit for this should be prepared in advance as follows: Six cupfuls of currants, washed, dried and picked. Three cupfuls sultana raisins, three cupfuls of citron, cut in fine strips, one-half cupful candied lemon peel, two cupfuls of almonds blanched and cut in shreds. In a warm bowl mix four cupfuls of butter and four cupfuls of sugar, granulated or confectioner's, beat these together until very light. Break ten eggs into another bowl, do not beat them.

Cover a waiter with a big sheet of paper; sift four pints of flour over this, add the fruit and the following spices: Two teaspoonfuls each of nutmeg, mace and cinnamon, one tablespoonful each of cloves and allspice. Mix these together and stand aside ready for use. Have ready in a little pitcher one-half pint best brandy. Select a deep cake tin and grease with butter, line it inside with white paper and on the outside and bottom with four or five thicknesses of very thick wrapping paper, which you must tie on. Have your oven hot and the fire banked so it will not burn out quickly. Now beat the butter and sugar once more, add the eggs two at a time, beating the mixture after each addition. When the eggs are all used, turn in the flour and fruit with brandy, mix thoroughly, pour into the prepared cake tin, cover with several thicknesses of brown paper and bake eight hours, keeping the oven steady and clear.

Remove from the oven and allow it to stand on tin sheet until quite cold. Ice with a thin coat of white icing top and sides and stand in a cool oven to dry, then give it a second coat of thick icing and ornament according to fancy. An icing made of white of egg, a few drops of cold water and confectioner's sugar is the best for the thick icing.

Sugar Cookies.

Two pounds sugar, one cupful butter, one egg, one cupful clabbered cream, one teaspoonful soda, one teaspoonful vanilla extract one teaspoonful lemon extract, one teaspoonful baking powder, flour to roll soft. Mix as for cake, beating soda into the cream and sprinkle sugar over the top and bake in very slow oven. If the dough is allowed to stand 15 to 20 minutes before being rolled and the board and rolling pin are well floured they can be handled much softer than would be imagined and a better cooky will result.

Brown Sugar Cake.

One cupful of brown sugar, yolk of one egg one-quarter teaspoonful cloves same of cinnamon, one-half cupful raisins, one cupful sour milk, add two teaspoonfuls soda to milk, two cupfuls flour. Beat well. Bake in moderately hot oven. Frosting: One and one-half cupfuls brown sugar, enough water to keep from burning, let boil until it threads from spoon, add white of one egg beaten stiff, one teaspoonful of vanilla. Take from stove and stir until nearly cold, then spread over cake.

Old-Fashioned Mock Mince Pie.

For those housewives who for reasons of economy, feel that expensive mince meat is beyond their purse, the following recipe, if carefully followed is excellent. In fact, it hardly can be told from the genuine mince pie. Mix together one cupful of bread-crums, half a cupful of vinegar, one cupful of seeded raisins, one cupful of molasses, one cupful of sugar, ground cloves and cinnamon to taste, and water enough to make it of the right consistency—probably a large cupful. Scald the ingredients and use when cold like ordinary mince-meat with any good pie-crust.

German Bread.

A unique kind of bread is made by an old German lady and has been somewhat altered for our family use. It is a most excellent thing for the housekeeper, as it may be kept several weeks, and with a cup of coffee or chocolate, proves a delicious refreshment. Set a sponge as for three ordinary loaves of bread in the evening, using the ordinary quantity of yeast. In the morning, when fully risen, add a pint of dried apples chopped fine, a pint of broken nut meats, three tablespoons of caraway seeds and one of coriander seeds; mix thoroughly, mold into loaves and when light bake. Dates and dried figs chopped very fine may be substituted for the apples.

Near Possum.

This delicacy will appeal to anyone who has tasted genuine possum in the South. Boil and wash two medium-sized sweet potatoes, season with two tablespoonfuls of brown sugar, one well-beaten egg, a pinch of salt, a bit of butter and pinch of ginger. Lay out a tender pork steak, sprinkle with salt, place the sweet potatoes in the center and tie up into a roll. Bake until thoroughly cooked and brown in a quick oven.

Sweet Potato Breakfast Biscuits.

I make these delicious biscuits the night before. Bake four medium-sized sweet potatoes, scoop out the pulp, add one heaping tablespoonful of butter and press through a colander with one teaspoonful of salt. When the potatoes are cooled, mix them into one quart of sifted flour and moisten to a dough with about one and a half cupfuls of thick sour milk in which half a teaspoonful of baking soda has been dissolved. Roll out quickly, cut into biscuits and lay them in a greased pan until morning. Then set them in a warm place to rise for a few minutes and bake in a hot oven to a rich brown. These are very good when cold—as they become soft and stay moist for several hours.

SENTENCES SUSPENDED

Judge Rowe Holds Adjourned Term of County Court Monday

Oswego, Dec. 28.—County Judge Rowe held an adjourned term of County Court and also a term for motions at Chmbers this morning. This will doubtless be his last term before he retires next Thursday.

Angelo Visco, charged with assault in the first degree and convicted of assault in the second degree, was given a suspended sentence and ordered to report to the probation officer for three years. Visco claims Rome as his residence and is ordered to report to the officer for Oneida county if he returns to Rome.

Raeffele Ditoro, who pleaded guilty to carrying concealed weapons, was also given a suspended sentence.

These men are two of the fifteen charged with conspiracy in connection with the Fulton Black Hand cases and are in jail, where they will remain at least until February, when the trials will be held before Judge Coville.

C. E. Pitts, attorney for the Oswego Mercantile Agency, sought an order of contempt from Judge Rowe against W. F. Carpenter, on alleged failure of Mr. Carpenter to appear for examination in supplementary proceedings before Referee James J. Mahaney. The action was brought by George H. Hant to collect an account for feed. F. T. Cahill opposed the motion and the contending lawyers had a warm and busy time of it exchanging epithets and compliments. Judge Rowe denied the motion for contempt but directed Mr. Carpenter to appear for examination before Jan. 4th.

YOUNGSTER BADLY INJURED

William, the six-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Mirksy, of 506 Erie st., suffered a fractured collar bone and other serious injuries last night about 6 o'clock, when a large sleigh load of pulp logs, being hauled to the Volney Paper Mill, tipped over and pinned the boy against the rail of the lower bridge.

Dr. Joy was summoned and he treated the boy's injuries and ordered him removed to his home. The youngster was walking along the sidewalk when the sleigh skidded in a deep pitch hole, thus causing the accident. George Neusbaum of South First st. was driving the load.

This Popular Bowling Team Captured Three Games Last Night

The tie in the City Bowling league was broken last night when the Non-descripts took three games straight from their rivals, the Onyx team. The latter were trimmed by over two hundred pins.

Hill bowled high score of the evening while Stauring came second. City Sealer, Harry O'Brien, has high score (266) for the weekly prize of a box of cigars. To-night the Pirates and the Cubs of the Amateur league will play on the Onyx alleys.

OPEN MEETINGS FOR OSWEGO

Old Time American Idea of Government To Be Restored; Mayor Hennessey Favors It

That open meetings for the free and full discussion of town affairs are destined to be revived in Oswego may be seen by the following from Monday's Oswego Times:

City officials at the head of departments will have an opportunity to take the public and the taxpayers of the city into their confidence if a plan which is now being considered by Mayor Thomas F. Hennessey and officials of the Chamber of Commerce goes through. The plan is one which has been evolved after considerable thought given to the problem of municipal improvements and the better plan to go about having more public improvements made, and the departments of the city placed on a more efficient basis. It has finally been decided that the plan which offers the best opportunities for city officials to make taxpayers acquainted with municipal conditions is to hold a public meeting in either the theater or the Armory, where all officials will have a chance to explain the workings of their departments, their present and future needs, as well as to explain something of the reasons why there have been shortcomings in the past.

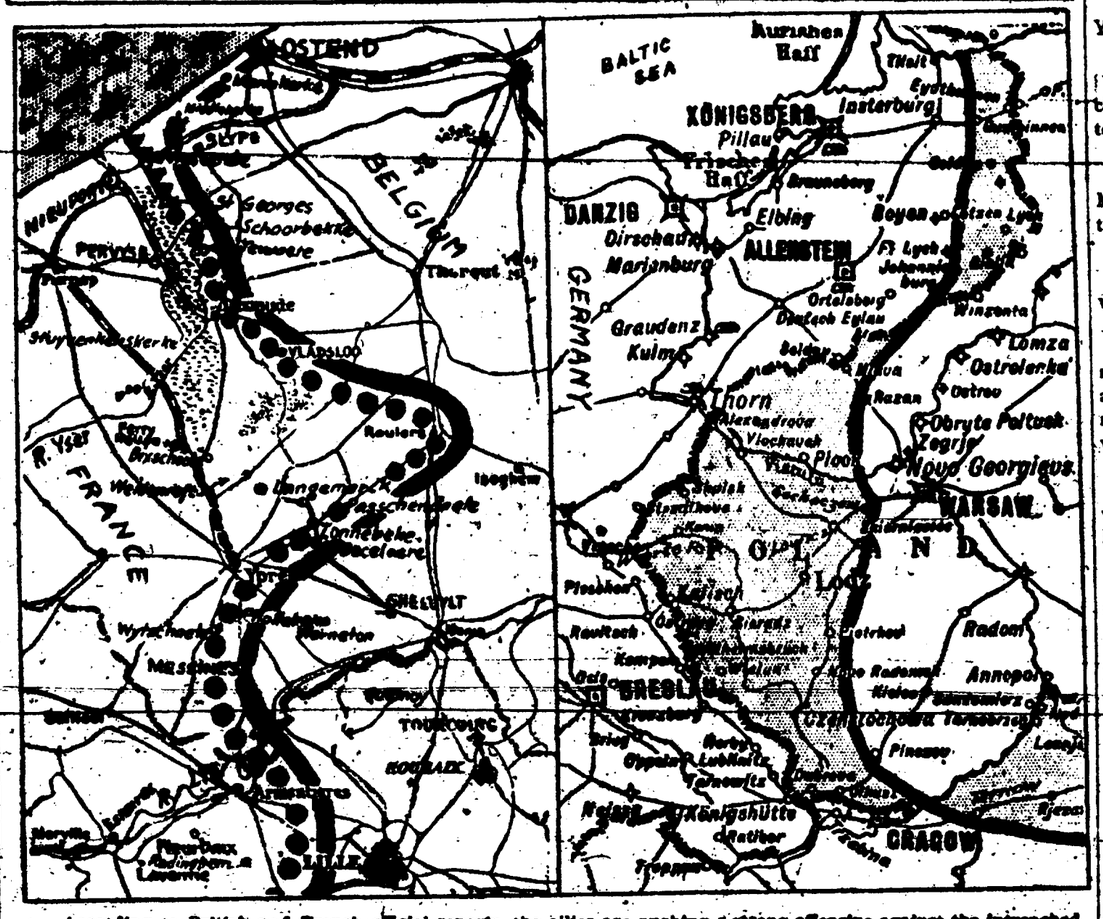
It is conceded that one of the most thoroughly American and democratic forms of government is that of the towns, where at an annual town meeting the leading men of the community have a chance to get together and talk over town matters with the officials whom they are hiring to look after public affairs. Just such a meeting only on a much larger scale is being planned for Oswego, but unlike the town meetings, where only too frequently disturbers have a chance to put officials on the gridiron, the town meeting proposed to be held here will be one sided in that there will be only time enough to permit the head or representative of each department to make the report and the recommendations for improvements.

There are six departments in the city which will probably be a source of discussion at the meeting, and Mayor Hennessey and the heads of the departments with whom he has talked believed it to be a good thing to foster. For some months, or, perhaps, more properly speaking, years, the Department of Works and the Department of Water have been pleading for larger budgets. The department of Works has been given the increase, but with sewers, sewage disposal plants and increased paved areas to be maintained, the budget is now seen to be too small.

The Department of Water has been suffering from such a paucity of funds as the last report on extensions, made public not later than last week, shows that there are petitions on file in that office which call for an immediate expenditure of $18,000, and some of the petitions date as far back as 1907.

The Department of Fire and Police also needs more money, but a deadlock, which has existed for years, and reports of dissension among the members, have prevented the commissioners asking for a budget increase.

The Charity Department can show good results, as can other city departments, but there is a room for improvement in all departments and a get-together talk and heart to heart confidence will do more good than any other measure which has been undertaken in many years. The meeting will probably be held in February, so as to give officials time to prepare comprehensive reports and ascertain just what they will need.



Federal Dis. Attorney Investigating

United States District Attorney H. Snowdon Marshall, of the Southern District of New York, wrote a letter to the Fulton creditors of Lang & Lang, a large dry goods house of New York which went into bankruptcy early this spring, asking for a detailed statement of all their dealing between Lang & Lang as the assignees and the local creditors.

The metropolitan concern has been indicted for conspiring to conceal assets from the trustees. The Federal District Attorney is tracing up all their business dealings. Nearly all of Fulton's leading business houses have had business dealings with this concern.

The Hunter Arms factory, after a shut down lasting until January 11th, will enter upon an eight-hour schedule, five days a week.

Maps of Two Great Battlefields In Europe; Allies Batter at Germans; Russians at Bay.

According to British and French official reports, the allies are pushing a strong offensive against the intrenched Germans from Nieuport to Ypres, making slow gains. German official reports deny that any material progress has been made by the allies. In the eastern field the Germans forced the Russians to take up new positions to protect Warsaw, and a desperate series of battles began, with the capital of Poland as the prize. The Germans heralded the retreat of the Russians along the whole battle front to the Carpathians on the south to East Prussia on the north as the greatest victory of the war. Berlin and Vienna reported that the Austro-German armies drove the Russians back in Galicia to a line skirting Cracow, Przemysl and Lemberg. The relief of Przemysl and the recapture of Lemberg were even hopefully predicted. In Russian Poland the German central column advanced to within twenty miles of Warsaw. In this region a great battle began. On the other hand, Petrograd discredited the claims of a great German victory. The Russian general staff characterized the fighting as not important, but indicated that a general retirement had taken place. Shaded portions on the map at the right show the invasions in East Prussia, Poland and Galicia.

TAX PAYABLE IN TEN YEARS

Highway Tax of Over $80,000 To Be Collected in Ten Annual Installments

Mayor Frank Fox and the aldermanic board met last night in the council chambers at the City Hall as a grievance committee to hear all complaints before confirming the assessments for the improved public highways completed during the past season.

Several taxpayers were present, not to register kicks, but to seek information which was readily supplied. The assessment of Mrs. A. L. Hall, of Hannibal st. was changed from 40 to 35 feet in order to conform with her deed.

Upon a resolution offered by Alderman Quirk the Common Council arranged the term of installment for the paying of the highway tax which amounts to over $80,000. They will be payable in ten annual installments with interest.

City Clerk Scudder was instructed to issue a building permit to the Wallace Bill Posting Co., of Oswego, for the construction of a billboard in S. 1st st. at the intersection of Rochester street next to Kennedy's livery stable. The work has been started.

Alderman's Quirk's resolution was as follows:

By Alderman Quirk:

Resolved, That the assessment of the cost of the improved S. 3d from Oneida to Cayuga; S. 3d, Academy to E. Broadway; Cayuga, S. 3d to S. 4th st.; Buffalo from S. 3d to S. 4th st.; N. 2d from Oneida to Erie st.; W. 3d from Phillip to Cedar st. Schenck from west end of Oneida st. bridge to W. 1st st.; Rochester from 1st to 3d st., as made by the Common Council Dec. 1st, 1914, be and said assessment is corrected.

And as so corrected be and the same hereby is confirmed, and be it further

Resolved, That the owners of real estate fronting on said sections of streets may have the privileges of paying the same in ten annual installments upon filing with the City Clerk within ten days from date their election and agreement to pay the same in that manner, with interest thereon payable annually.

Unanimously adopted.

Workmen are engaged in clearing up the debris on the burnt section of the P. Massaero Macaroni factory.

THE COUNTY BUDGET

Mrs. W. J. Capston of East Scriba has received as a prize for the word contest that was in the Syracuse Post Standard a fifty dollar course, either in shorthand or typewriting. It was given by the Thorpe Business school, Syracuse.

Mrs. Louisa A. Fargo, wife of Andrew Fargo, died in East Palermo December 18th, aged 76 years. She was taken ill with pneumonia and died after only a few days' illness. She is survived by her husband, Andrew Fargo; one son, George Fargo; one daughter, Mrs. Edgar Carpenter; one sister, Mrs. Sarah J. Herrick, and one brother, George C. Steenbergh. Funeral service were held in Syracuse Monday afternoon.

December 25th at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fairfield Flint, occurred the marriage of Miss Edna Flint and Herbert Rupracht, both of East Palermo. Mr. Rupracht is a promising young blacksmith. The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Rupracht wish them a long and happy life.

The two-family house on the corner of Church and Madison streets, owned by Wilber Jordan, took fire from an overheated furnace Sunday morning and ruined the interior of the apartment occupied by W. A. Washburn. The fire company was called out at 8 o'clock and its prompt work saved the other apartment, occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Bert Buck. The damage to building and contents is estimated to be $3,000, partially covered by insurance.

IN THE CITY

The Baker Flower Co. of Syracuse started an action in City Court to-day for a claim of $41.05 against the Fulton Floral Co. A general denial was made and a counter claim filed. The case was adjourned until January 6th.

POLICE COURT FINES $2,100

Great Comparsion Over the Amount Collected By Judge Fanning in 1913

There is quite a comparison in the amount of fines collected in the city court under City Judge Herbert J. Fanning in 1913, and Judge Herbert J. Wilson during the passing year.

According to a report submitted to Mayor Frank E. Fox by Judge Wilson no less than $2,100 have been paid in fines, while under Judge Fanning, convictions swelled the city fund $1,200.

The largest amount paid by any individual this year was $100, in an adultry case, while the remainder was paid for minor offenses. For the first eleven months of 1914, $2,000 was collected and the fines so far this month aggregate $100.

This money is paid into the police fund for the maintenance of this department. When a fine is collected it is handed over to the City Chamberlain and credited to the above mentioned department. This is the first of the municipal reports to be submitted to the mayor.

SCHELLENBERG RECEIVES $200

Manager Daniel Darleigh, of the Quirk theater, announced to-day that over $200 was realized at the benefit performance held last night for musical director Henry Schellenberg, who had one of his legs amputated recently at the Lee Memorial hospital. Both professional and local talent participated in the performance.

Schellenberg wishes to extend his thanks to the public through the press.

STRANAHAN GETS ENDORSEMENT

Phoenix Man Named for Division Superintendent by G. O. P. Leaders

Myron A. Stranahan of Fulton, who will complete his three year term as sheriff of Oswego county on January 1st, was indorsed by the Oswego County Republican committee at a meeting held at the Hotel Danio yesterday afternoon for Division Superintendent of the Oswego canal, to succeed Arthur C. Moyer of Phoenix. The canal job carries a salary of $1,800 with the privilege of appointing a clark at $900 per annum.

Fultonians will be pleased to hear of Sheriff Stranahan's good fortune. Under this new position Mr. Stranahan will be able to spend more time in this city.

Fred M. Bishop, of Oswego, was the committee's choice for secretary to Speaker T. C. Sweet. The salary is $2,000 per annum. This position was held by A. P. Parker of Watertown. William W. Spencer, of Oswego, was indorsed for deputy state election inspector.

Congressman Mott's secretary, F. J. Meagher is slated for a position at Albany which will pay about $5,000.

BANKS ABLE TO MEET CONDITION

That's the Opinion of John Skelton, Who Advises More Reforms

Washington, D. C., Dec. 29.—Comptroller of the Currency, John Skelton Williams draws an interesting comparison between the financial crises of 1914 and 1893 and 1907, showing how well the latest emergency was handled, in his annual report made public here today.

For the 12 months ended Oct. 31, 1914, he says, twenty-six national banks with aggregate capital stock of $2,510,000 failed or suspended payment. The liabilities were $14,177,608. In the corresponding period of 1892-93, 158 national banks suspended with liabilities of $83,042,347. In the six month period October 1, 1907, to April 1, 1908, there were 22 failures with liabilities of $52,443,878. He comments:

"It is worthy of special note that in the crisis of 1914, unlike the panics of 1893 and 1907, there was no suspension of currency payments on the part of the banks of this country, either in the large cities or in the smaller towns. In the panics of 1893 and 1907, in addition to clearing-house checks, many artificial methods of supplying a temporary currency were resorted to, while actual currency commended a premium of from 3 per cent. to 5 per cent.—$100 in currency coating anywhere from $103 to $105 or more, in certified bank checks.

"In 1914 the banks of the country were enabled, as a result of the instant and active cooperation of the treasury department, and through the operations of the act of May 30, 1908, as amended by the Federal Reserve Act, to supply actual currency, even during the period of greatest stringency, to their customers and correspondents, both over the counter and in response to rerquests for shipments.

Whenever any indications were seen of an attempt or disposition on the part of any solvent bank or banks to withhold or suspend cash payments, the subject was then up immediately by the treasury department, and payments of currency over the counter and shipments by the banks upon demand, from the centers to the near-by and far-off districts, and vice-versa, have been maintained practically without interruption throughout this crisis."

Mr. Williams discussed the new currency laws and the Federal Reserve act at length to show how it is that the government and the banks are now in a better position to meet a financial stringency.

Mr. Williams asks that legislation be put on the statue books giving the Comptroller power to remove and discipline guilty bank directors. He says:

"The national bank act provides that if any loss accrues to a bank by reason of any violations of the law, the directors may be held individually responsible if they had any part in making the loans or investments upon which the loss is sustained. As a practical question, however, this redress can not be ordinarily be resorted to.

Banks frequently make loans through negligence or misfeasance of directors, which result in losses to the depositors; but unless the assets of the bank come into the hands of a receiver appointed by the Comptroller and are administered under the jurisdiction of the Comptroller, suits against these directors are seldom if ever prosecuted. If a stockholder had knowledge of such losses and should undertake to recover for the benefit of himself and other stockholders, a run might be precipitated on the bank which would result in suspension of the bank and further losses. In most cases, however, the stockholders have no knowledge of the losses thus accruing, which are frequently charged off to profit and loss by the action of the offending directors, who thus escape punishment for their mismanagement and for the losses inflicted upon the stockholders whose interests they are supposed to safe-guard and protect.

An amendment to the law giving to the Comptroller of the Currency, with the approval of the Secretary of the treasury, the power to require the removal of any director or directors or of any officers of a bank guilty of a violation of any of the more important provisions of the national bank act, and to direct that suit be brought in the name of the bank against such director or directors after they have ceased to be connected with the bank, for the losses sustained by their malfeasance or misfeasance in office, would be salutary, protective, and beneficial.

INDIANS JUST INDIANS.

Commissioner Sells Insists They Are Not Mongolians.

Washington, Dec. 28.—The American Indian is not a Mongolian; he is just a plain Indian or red man, according to Cato Sells, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who declared today that he would not stand for the classification of certain ethnological writers who are anxious to reduce the number of races.

Mr. Sells made this announcement after personal investigation and consultation with Dr. F. W. Hodge, ethnologist in charge of the Bureau of American Ethnology of the Smithsonian Institution in Washington.

Commissioner Sells proposes to do everything in his power to oppose the arbitrary classifications of the Indian as a Mongolian. He is going to issue instructions preventing the teaching in Indian schools of the classification which places the Indian in the Mongolian family; and all school books containing such classification will be dropped from the authorized list of books in the Indian service.

ASKS WILSON FOR JOBS.

Brooklyn Lawyer Points to Whitman's Partisanship.

New York, Dec. 28.—Henry Ward Beers, a lawyer of 44 Court st., Brooklyn, has written President Wilson suggesting that unless Republicans who hold Federal jobs in Kings county are turned out and Democrats put in it will go hard for the Democrats in the county election next fall.

In his letter, Mr. Beers said he trusted that "the regular Democracy of Kings county," will no longer be slighted, and that to the Republicans now holding Federal positions will be immediately accorded, on Jan. 1, the same treatment that Mr. Whitman has promised the Democrats in New York state.

Trial To Vacate Charter.

Albany, Dec. 29.—Announcement was made by Attorney General Parsons today that the action instituted by his department to vacate the charter of the Intenational Sunshine society, will come to trial at the January term of the Supreme Court, New York county. Attorney General Parsons believes that his department has sufficient evidence concerning the alleged irregularities of the society in question to impress a jury with the necessity of terminating its corporate existence. The answer recently filed with the attorney general counsel for Mrs. Cynthia Alden, president of the society, denied that privileges and franchises belonging to business corporations were illegally exercised. The attorney alleged that the International Sunshine society, a membership corporation overstepped the limitations placed upon the charter and engaged in a business which only a business corporation was empowered to conduct.

Received Appointment.

Thomas R. Tetley, Jr., formerly of the Fulton barge canal office and recently assistant resident engineer on the State barge canal work at Waterloo, will leave the State service on January 1st to take a $5,000 job with the Pennsylvania railroad and have charge of the building of the new canal to connect Lake Erie with the Ohio river in Pennsylvania.

DENOUNCE WILSON'S STAND ON THE WAR.

Baltimore Citizens Applaud Critics Who Say Administration Favors Allies.

Baltimore, Dec. 28.—Extremely bitter were the criticisms passed on the national administration by speakers at a huge meeting held today under the direction of the Independent Citizens' Union, which had been called for the furtherance of American neutrality. A number of Irishmen were present, and ex-State Senator Peter Campbell, an Irishman, presided.

Alphonz G. Koeble and John Deveri, both of New York, were the prominent speakers. Local speakers hammered the British without mercy, and then attacked the President and Secretary of State, who were by inference charged with inefficiency and weakness.

It was a distinctly pro-German gathering, and every reference to the opponents of the Allies was heartily applauded. Mr. Koeble took for his text "Peace and neutrality." The war, he said, was one for dollars and cents, England wanting to smash Germany so she could obtain her business.

He then proceeded to criticize in turn the McKinley, Taft and Wilson administrations, all of which, he said, had played into the hands of Great Britain. The Wilson administration, he said, had catered to England right along. He cited the suppression of German messages and permission to England to use the cable without censorship. He denounced the administration for permitting English ships to take Germans from neutral vessels within the three-mile limit.

More than three thousand persons applauded every thrust at the administration's policy. Mayor Preston said the United States owed so much both to the Germans and to the English that the strictest line of neutrality should be maintained.

Resolutions were adopted calling on Congress to stop the exportation of war munitions.

Richards Says In Report Idea Is European; Plan Is Co-operation

Albany, N. Y., Dec. 29.—The Land bank of the State of New York has been organized and is about ready to commence business. State superintendent of banks, Eugene Lamb Richards, will so advise the legislature in his forthcoming annual report. Permanent officers are expected to be selected in the near future so that the bank will be in a position to actually begin business at an early date. In his report Superintendent Richards will say in part, as follows:

"While our statute books have been flooded with regulative provisions in recent years, it is seldom, I believe, that a more important piece of creative legislation has been enacted than the provisions embodied in the banking law authorizing the creation of the Land bank of New York state by local Savings and Loan Associations.

"While based to a large extent upon the European systems of co-operative finance, this legislation is essentially American and is also based upon the experience of the Local Savings and Loan Associations of the state of New York during the last thirty-five years.

"If the benefits derived from the present law of the state relative to Savings and Loan Associations can be extended to strictly agricultural districts and the land bank of the state of New York realizes the expectations of its advocates, the problem of rural credits in this state at least will have been almost entirely solved.

"The law in its present form is the result of the joint labors of representatives of the Savings and Loan Associations of the state and Agricultural interests extending over a period of nearly two years. It received further consideration by the commission to revise the banking law and by a special committee appointed by Superintendent Van Tuyl to co-operate with the commission. Probably a more unfortunate time to initiate this great undertaking could not have been found, for the Savings and Loan Associations as well as the other financial institutions of the state have, to some extent, been affected by conditions created by the European war and the struggles for control of funds incident to the enormous amounts of capital which are being wasted in its prosecution.

"A meeting of representatives of the various savings and loan associations of the state was called soon after the passage of the act and an organization committee appointed. The general plan of the Land bank of the state of New York was thoroughly discussed at the meeting of the state League of Local Savings and Loan Associations, held at Buffalo, in June, and was also considered at the convention of the United States League of Local Building and Loan Associations, held in Washington, in July.

"The organization committee has held many meetings to consider procedure and by-laws for the new institution, and I am glad to be able to report that the work of the organization committee has been duly organized and is ready to commence business. The institution will commence business with the minimum capital of one hundred thousand ($100,000) dollars. It will be farther increased by the inclusion of some associations which had postponed making the necessary amendments to their by-laws until their annual meetings, which will be held in January, 1915. It is expected that there will be a very considerable increase in its capital as soon as an improvement in general financial conditions warrants the issuing of bonds at a low rate of interest. It is hoped that ultimately all the associations of the state may become members of this central institution, and that its bonds may become legal investments for savings banks and trust funds. With the various safe-guards that will be thrown about their issue, these bonds should ultimately sell upon the same basis as good municipal bonds, and, possibly, upon the same basis as bonds of national governments.

"Numerous inquiries have been received from other states with reference to its plans and the principles upon which it is based. If it can be made as beneficial to the people of the state as seems probable, it will undoubtedly serve as a model for similar institutions in other states, and possibly for a still greater institution of national scope."

"GIVE US BACK ALSACE," CRY THE FRENCH

As They Charged Steep Hillside That Became Dyed With Blood; Germans' Deadly Fire

By FRANKLIN P. MERRICK.

Paris, Jan. 8.—With a two fold object in view, the Germans have launched a series of fresh attacks upon the positions of the allies west and north of the River Oise and along the Aisne. The double purpose of the invaders is:

(1) To find a weak spot in the lines of the French and British defending the territory immediately east of Amiens.

(2) An effort to divert the attention of the allies from the northern and southern ends of the 375 miles long battle front, where the pressure of the French, British and Belgians is being steadily increased.

Near Lassigny the Germans are attacking on the part of the line lying nearest to Paris.

(Lassigny is west of the Oise, forty miles north of Paris, ten miles north of Compiegne and seven miles south of Roye.)

Dispatches from the northern sphere indicate that another battle is in progress for the possession of Lille. The fighting in that region is going on along the line of La Basse canal. In West Flanders bad weather still continues and the troops are fighting in mud that is knee deep in places.

News of the violent attacks in the eastern part of the Argonne forest indicate that the Germans are struggling hard to get within artillery range of Fort de Marre and Fort Chiosol, two of the principal works defending Verdun on the northwest.

In the Woevre district the Germans are trying to retake some of the lost ground around Flirey, but they evidently underestimated the strength of the French forces in that region. As the French advance yard by yard, in that region earthworks are thrown up.

The following dispatch from Belfort gives a good idea of the fierceness of the fighting around Steinbach and Altkirch: "In taking the German trenches upon the heights near Steinbach the French had to ascend steep slopes which were slippery with snow and ice, at the same time cutting their way through barbed wire entanglements. The German machine guns played upon the advancing French with unmerciful accuracy and soon the snow upon the hillsides was dyed red.

"Shouting 'Give us back Alsace!' the French continued their advance under this deadly fire and hand-to-hand fighting with the bayonet followed in the trenches. German sharpshooters had evidently been ordered to pick off the French officers, for the list of killed among the men of rank was unusually high. As soon as the heights were taken the difficult task of hauling artillery to the summits was begun. The slippery condition of the slopes made this exceedingly hard. The results, however, more than paid for the hardships, for, when the guns got in action the Germans were soon compelled to fall back from their new positions. Steinbach was bombarded until the French entered the western part of the village then the French artillery had to cease. Steinbach was completely destroyed by the bombardment and resultant fire."

The French troops attacking Altkirch were assisted in their advance from Belfort by armored trains, which felt the way along the railway leading from Belfort through Altkirch to Muelhausen.

Altkirch is being bombarded at present by French artillery.

1,000,000 MEN WILL ATTACK POLAND'S CAPITAL

By FREDERICK WERNER.

Berlin, via Amsterdam, Jan. 8.—One million men have been assembled by Field Marshal Von Hindenburg for a decisive attack upon Warsaw. Final plans for this attack have been perfected and it will begin as soon as the weather becomes cold enough to freeze the rivers and muddy roads that are now hampering operations.

German experts declare that the steadiness with which the Kaiser's forces in Poland are advancing shows that the Russians will this time be unable to prevent the occupation of the Polish capital. With the Germans in the possession of Mlawa, the Russians will be unable to execute any effective flanking movement to delay the assault upon Warsaw.

The experts see no cause for alarm over the French successes in Alsace. They assert that the heavy losses suffered by the Frnch in attacking the German trenches more than offset any temporary advantage that these assaults may gain.

In this connection the Kreuz Zeitung publishes a dispatch from Brussels stating that the Russians up to December 31 had lost 1,000,000 men killed, captured and missing, including officers.

COTTON NOT CONTRABAND

By FREDERICK WERNER.

Berlin, Jan. 8.—By Wireless—Among the items given out by the official German news bureau today was the following: "The American embassy in Berlin has been advised from Washington that France and England have agreed to eliminate cotton from the list of contraband articles. Therefore cotton can be sent into Germany without risk of seizure."

OFFICIAL POLICIES URGED IN MR. WHITMAN'S MESSAGE

Abolition of the office of Fire Marshal.

Abolition of the office of Commissioner of Elections in all counties outside of New York, and, perhaps, Erie, Monroe and Onondaga.

Appointment of a single head of the Conservation Commission, instead of three, as at present.

Creation of a new Highway Commission, non-partisan, of three members instead of one, as at present.

Conferring upon the Supreme Court the jurisdiction of the present Court of Claims.

Passage of the women's suffrage resolution, so the issue can be submitted to the voters of the State.

Adoption of an adequate system for the equalization of taxation.

Curtailment of the appointment of paid legislative commissions.

GOING TO DEFEND HIS SEVERAL POLICIES

By A. M. JAMIESON.

On board President Wilson's train, Denison, Ohio, Jan. 8.—On the first purely political trip he has undertaken since entering the White House, President Wilson passed through this city early today on his way to Indianapolis, where this afternoon he will address a Jackson day gathering, in which speech he is expected to defend his policies.

The President expressed great satisfaction today on making a journey into the "heart of the nation" as he has often called the Middle West. He has not visited it since he became President and is anxious to observe business and industrial conditions with his own eyes.

A group of Indiana politicians are expected to join the President's party at Columbus.

The President was in good spirits when he arose today, the changing from the mild weather prevailing in the capital, to the snappy, invigorating winter weather of Ohio producing a good effect on [illegible].

The President is in excellent shape to deliver what is expected to be the most important speech of his political career.

INDIAN SOLDIERS ARE FOND OF SERVICE

London, Jan. 8.—The enthusiasm of the Indian troops fighting with the allies in France is shown by the following literal translation of a letter received by the editor of The Indiaman from Malik Khan Muhammed Khan, a major in the thirty-sixth Jacobs Horse of Indian.

"Salutations to your newspaper which is full of pearls. We of the faithful and devoted officers of the Thirty-sixth Rissallah, Jacobs' Horse, heartily give thanks for the gifts that have reached us on the battlefield. At the same time we pray that Almighty God may keep us firm in our service and devotion to our superior officers and the government whose salt we eat. Also we desire by all means, to the last breath, to seek honor in and by fighting and vanquishing the enemies of the Raj (Empire) with our relentless swords. A thousand thanks and endless prayers for success and glorious victory for our brothers."

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Nish, Jan. 8.—Attempts by Austrians to occupy the small islnad of Aida Tsigoulia, in the Danube, opposite Belgare, have been frustrated, it is officially announced.

"A fairly large force of Austrians occupied the island on Sunday," says the statement, "but the next night our forces routed the enemy capturing three officers and forty five men. Our losses were significant. Nothing else of importance has happened."

Vienna, via Berlin and Amsterdam, Jan. 8.—That Austrian forces in Bukowina have been compelled to retreat before the Russian troops there is admitted in an official report from headquarters made public here today. It said: "Our advance patrols in southern part of Bukowina had to fall back on the main pass before the superior numbers of the enemy."

(The main pass in southern Bukowina is Borgo Pass, leading through the Carpathians to Hungary.)

"Everything is calm on the Hungarian and Galician frontier. On the Dunajee river (in western Galicia), and in Russian Poland artillery duels have occurred."

Constantinople, via Berlin and Amsterdam, Jan. 8.—Reports that General Jemal Pasha, former minister of marine, had been assassinated were in circulation here today. An official denial of the rumors was issued.

Copenhagen, Jan. 8.—A dispatch from Cologne says that the Turks have concentrated their principal army, consisting of 120,000 regulars and 70,000 Bedouins at Jerusalem for the attack on Egypt.

KAISER'S ARMIES WITHIN 20 MILES OF WARSAW

Germans' Bombardment Too Much For Russians, Who Desert Trenches on the Bzura

By HERBERT TEMPLE.

European Manager of the International News Service.

London, Jan. 8.—The Germans have crossed the Bzura river in Poland and are only twenty six miles from Warsaw. This news, the most important that has come from Russia for several weeks, was received here today. A hint of it was given in an official report issued in Petrograd last night which said that the Germans had captured part of the Russian trenches near the village of Sochaczew. This town is on the east bank of the Bzura.

Petrograd advices received here today stated that the Russians had withdrawn from their first line trenches on the Bzura because of the heavy bombardment conducted by the German artillery. It stated that the Russian forces west of Warsaw were holding their trenches on a front running through Wiskitki and Mszczonow. Both these towns are approximately 26 miles southwest of Warsaw on a branch of the Pisia river.

This would indicate that the Germans have recaptured Rawka and are driving a wedge to the Vistula to Warsaw hoping to split the Russian forces and complete their campaign for the investment of the Polish capital.

A Berlin dispatch says that one million Germans have been concentrated for the Warsaw campaign and that they will move as soon as the weather permits. In view of the messages from Berlin and Petrograd, military observers here are of the opinion that Warsaw will soon be invested.

"SIBERIAN DEVILS" USED COLD STEEL ON GERMANS

By FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY.

Petrograd, Jan. 8.—Russian troops are again attacking the Germans at Mlawa, which has changed hands five times since the war began. The fighting extends east and west from Mlawa over an eighteen mile front and is resulting in heavy losses on both sides. The Russians are slowly but steadily advancing, however.

Resumption of the Russian offensive in the Mlawa region was permitted by the success of the Russians in holding back the German drive upon Warsaw from the west. In their trenches running from the Vistula west of Kazumpolski through Wiskitki and Mszczonow, the Russians are repelling the attacks of the Germans who have crossed the Bzura river.

The slight retirement of the Russians east of the Bzura, which permitted the Germans to cross that stream, was due to the heavy artillery fire of the Germans. This rendered the trenches of the Russians there untenable and thy withdrew to their second line of trenches. These are out of range of the heavy German guns, which cannot be brought across the Bzura while the Russians hold their present positions.

The Germans are conducting regular siege operations in their attempts to take the Russian's second line trenches. Their mass attacks have ceased and their troops, working under the shelter of steel shields are digging advance trenches from which they plan to assail the Russians. They are suffering heavy losses in these snapping operations in comparison with the number of men they attack.

The "Siberian devils," as the Russians are known, took the Germans by surprise and bayonetted all the soldiers in three trenches.

Not content with this feat, the Siberians then dashed upon a battery of machine guns and after a hand-to-hand fight of 15 minutes captured five of the weapons and more than 80 prisoners. On their return they found themselves surrounded by a force twice their number, but they cut their way through and reached their own lines after losing 16 men.

The captain of the company has been recommended for promotion by his colonel.

FLYING RUSSIANS PUT OUT BY AERIAL GUNS

By FREDERICK WERNER.

Berlin, Jan. 8.—By wireless—Russia's flying corps has been badly crippled by the effective work of the German aerial guns in Poland. Co-operating with the artillery forces used to combat aerial raids, the German aeroplanes and Zeppelins have engaged in thrilling struggles with the aviators of the Czar and in many instances have come off victorious.

Official announcement was made today that in the recent fighting in Lodz and Lowicz ten Russian airships were destroyed by the Germans. Seven of these were smashed by the aerial guns and the other three were brought down by other means.

CITY MANAGER PLAN SUCCESSFUL

Has Been Well Demonstrated In Dayton, O.

A BUSINESS CORPORATION.

A Municipality Successfully Planned Must Place Its Operation Under Supervision of Men Who Understand Work of Town Planner.

[By Frank Koester, consulting civic engineer, New York city.]

Success in city planning is proved by the subsequent results of city operation. Convenience, adequate transit facilities, proper distribution of traffic, avoidance of congestion and all the various factors entering into the operation and maintenance of a city are constantly demonstrating the value of the city's plan.

It follows that the city planner must be thoroughly familiar with all of the various results to be achieved by the city's plan, and he must understand not only the artistic side of city planning, but every detail of the operation and maintenance of the city in order that the plan may be a success economically as well as artistically.

A city, however, which has been successfully planned and has had its improvements put into operation by the city planner must in order to take advantage of its facilities place its operation and maintenance under the supervision of a man or a body of men who understand and know how to utilize the work of the city planner.

Every principle and purpose of the plan must be known and every phase of its development understood, for the inadequate utilization of the city's plan is as bad as if the city planner had not planned the city suitably.

To secure proper administrative results is a difficult civic undertaking, but of recent years a system has been evolved which seems destined to revolutionize city administration and which promises to enable cities to obtain proper administrative results.

The system, that of commission government, has taken the place of the old aldermanic system in some 350 cities. Five commissioners are elected, who have both legislative and executive powers and who have entire charge of the city's affairs. They are elected by the voters as a single body, the old division of wards being discontinued.

This form of government centering responsibility in five men is proving very efficient and promises entirely to supersede the old aldermanic method. A modification of it is now coming into practice, since the five commissioners often develop friction, which shows itself in the department of which they have charge. The new plan is the appointment by the commission of a city manager, who is given complete executive authority under the control of the commissioners, who sit as a legislative body.

The effect of this plan is practically that of a business corporation, the city manager corresponding to the president of the corporation and the commission to the directors of the corporation.

Dayton, O., is the first large city to put the plan in operation, and the salary of the city manager is fixed by the commission at $12,500 per annum.

The city of Dayton proceeded wisely in the election of a city manager. Political considerations were ignored, and an engineer was obtained who was not even a resident of the city and whose experience in engineering had fitted him to meet both the technical and executive problems of the city.

The city manager, being a salaried man, with no definite term of office, is naturally give the best service to the city, for the benefit of his term de[illegible]

THE VOGUE OF VELVET.

This Popular Fabric Smartly Combined With Fur In the Elaboration of Gowns.

Velvet has been extremely popular this season. Velvet for street or carriage gowns combines with fur to good effect. A striking velvet gown is pictured here. It is of white velvet, showing the narrow foundation skirt, over which is worn a coat short waisted and fitting snugly over the shoulders and buttoned at left side with huge velvet covered bait buttons. From this hangs a deep ripple tunic shorter than knee length in back and falling in a deep V in the front. An enormous flare collar is edged with sable, as are the long sleeves, coming well over the hands and with a band of fur extending to the elbow. A velvet cord hangs from the waist and is finished with two balls of sable, while a band of sable of unusual width encircles the entire tunic.

NEIGHBORHOOD GATHERING.

Informal New Year's Entertaining That Promotes Good Fellowship.

In a suburban neighborhood a hostess may invite her neighbors to gather at her house on New Year's eve for the purpose of seeing the old year out. The informality and jollity of such a gathering may do much to promote neighborhood cordiality for the rest of the year. No attempt at formal entertaining should be attempted.

Some of the dishes which will be most appropriate for a New Year collation are here given, with a few suggestions as to placing them in artistic array:

First cover the table with the finest of linen, then put a border of leaves, evergreens or some other pretty decoration of green around; then a wreath of smilax in the center of the table. In the center place a pigeon pie, flank the pie on one side with a roast turkey, handsomely decorated, and on the other with a fine Virginia ham roasted; then place on the table at little distances apart bowls of different salads, a boned turkey in jelly, big plates of assorted sandwiches, a cold boiled salmon en mayonaise, pickled oysters and oyster patties, oysters a la poulette, celery, olives and salted almonds. On little side tables serve cakes and ices. On the buffet have a big roast of beef and slices of bread. Serve coffee and other beverages at little tables presided over by some of your friends.

There are many other delicious viands which are suitable for a New Year's collation, which one must be guided by one's circumstances in selecting. It is not so much what one serves as the spirit of hospitality which prompts this social feasting.

Children's Storm Capes.

There is a new storm cape for children. It is so long it is practically a sleeveless raincoat. It is full rubber lined on the inside and plaid cloth on the outside.

CORRECT FOOTWEAR.

Button boots are the correct style.

Bronze slippers are used as much as black for afternoon wear.

Fashion demands that every gown shall have shoes to harmonize.

The top of the new laced gaiter top boot is either of dark gray or fawn buckskin.

Walking shoes are made with cloth or buckskin tops in pale shades of gray or tan.

If the heel of a low shoe slips line the inner sides of the heel with velvet, which will cling to the hose.

For every day there is no better method of dressing a child's feet than in [illegible] black or white shoes, with socks to match.

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

THE SELECTION OF STREET ILLUMINATION.

Better and Cheaper Light Than Ever In Future Is Prophesied.

In the selection of an up to date system of street illumination any community has today a large range of choice, not from inference, but actual example, writes T. Commerford Martin in the American City. One of the best things to do is, of course, to get the help of engineers and illuminating experts, but the whole country may be compared today to a large museum where all the prevalent systems can be studied in full operation. In some places the "old line" arcs shine resplendent with high economies in watts and lumens. In other places the flaming arc bestraddles the sky and belittles the moon and stars. A good many cities have "luminous" arcs on high posts or low posts, and the results are unequivocally satisfactory. On many a thoroughfare the clustered tungsten lamps employed in ornamental street lighting and with handsome electroliers and massive curb posts make one quite indifferent to the coming of the dawn. And now the nonvacuum, nitrogen filled incandescent lamps of large candle power, at the lowest wattage consumption known to mankind, are looming up as the latest addition to the electrical resources with which our streets are all to be made Great White Ways. The future is altogether one of hope, for out of this struggle of the types and methods emerges the assurance that we shall undoubtedly have better, lighter and cheaper lights than ever for our streets, not less than a more perfect electric candle indoors to light us to bed.

The Cost of Smoke.

A cloud of black smoke hovering over a city signifies industry. It also signifies extravagance. A lack of care in the using of fuel is doubly expensive, for the damage it causes costs the city many hundreds of thousands of dollars and wastes for the city an even greater amount of money.

Chicago, for instance, has an actual annual damage bill of approximately $40,000,000. Cincinnati pays $100 a year for every family within its municipal limits. The cleaning of clothes and buildings and the cost of washing, repainting and repapering are the chief items in this expense. But the greatest expense is the expense which comes from the reckless waste of the valuable byproducts of the coal.

One of the chief elements of the remarkable commercial success of Germany is due to the fact that in the fatherland 85 per cent of the byproducts of the burning coal are utilized in many different ways.

How many pounds of these very same byproducts go out of the chimneys of our great manufacturing cities every year can never be estimated. But the facts are that we utilize 20 per cent of the products as compared with Germany's 85 per cent.

Extravagance seems to have had its day with the people of America. Economy is now in order, and one of the first and most apparent economies is that to be effected by a more careful supervision of the use of fuel.—Town Development Magazine.

A Live City.

The Industrial Association of Keokuk, Ia., has purchased an industrial tract, laid it out, decided upon a plant for the city, won a freight rate case, installed a lighting system and started to work on the improvement of the river front. All expenses for these improvements have been met in full, it is reported.

SUBURBANITES IN GET TOGETHER PLAN.

Representatives From Three Counties Unite For Betterment of Conditions.

Something new in the get together line, something destined to play an important part in the betterment of living conditions in the suburbs of Philadelphia, was started the other day in the auditorium of the Ridley Park Civic association. More than 300 persons, men and women, representatives of civic improvement associations of a round dozen communities in Montgomery, Delaware and Camden counties, held their first "suburban symposium."

The problems that perplex the dweller in the suburbs were ably handled by several experts. Particular emphasis was laid upon the necessity for community co-operation in all civic endeavors. Railroads and highways, sewage disposal, architecture and flowers, even historical pageants and mosquitoes, were discussed.

An important address was that of George Sullivan, secretary of the suburban metropolitan planning commission, who treated the sewage disposal problem.

He pointed out the advantage of a single disposal plant for all the suburban towns in Delaware and Montgomery counties to the southeast of Bryn Mawr. This plant, to be located at Eddystone, he said, would do for the section what up to date sewage disposal had done for Lower Merion township—increased its property assessment values from $7,000,000 to $25,000,000 since 1902.

In the past many advantages have been discovered in connection with borough co-operation or borough and township co-operation, and some of the local hardships in the way of community effort were presented by Benjamin Ludlow, president of the Suburban Improvement league, who spoke on "Unnecessary Legal Restrictions on Community Co-operation."

COMMISSION MANAGER PLAN

Discussed by City Manager Henry M. Waite of Dayton.

Henry M. Waite, city manager of Dayton, O., during the session of the National Municipal league, recently held at Baltimore, discussed "The Commission Manager Plan of Government In the Light of Experience." This new form of city government was a success, he asserted, and in answer to his own question as to whether it could be a permanent success he said:

"Its permanency depends upon intelligent citizenship and their continued determination to keep partisan politics out of municipal affairs."

The Dayton plan of five nonpartisan commissioners at large had resulted in the election of sound business men, he said. They selected the manager, who then selected the directors of the five departments—law, finance, welfare, service, safety.

"I cannot tell you the political faith of the commissioners or the directors," he said. "They are selected for their ability.

"In our finance department," he continued, "our new accounting system is the same as would be found in any large business. Our budget is scientific. Every month the head of each department receives a complete financial statement which shows the original allowance, expenditures and balance in each account. We keep our expenditures inside our allowances."

The committee on municipal program which has been at work for a year drafting a new model city charter for Baltimore presented a preliminary report during the convention. The committee proposes that the new model city charter shall provide for a city manager as the chief executive of the city, to be chosen by the council solely on the basis of his fitness. Six administrative departments are provided, each to be headed by a director appointed by the city manager. The directors are to be responsible to him for the administration of their departments and may be removed by him at any time.

The title of mayor is to be preserved, but will be applied to the chairman of the council. This body is elective, its members to serve four years and be subject to recall. A civil service and efficiency board to consist of three members is to be appointed by the council.

Cheap Light and Power.

Winnipeg, Dominion of Canada, has just celebrated the third anniversary of its municipal lighting and power plant, which, it is claimed, provides the cheapest light and power in the world to wholesalers—3 cents a kilowatt hour. The profits for this year have been $60,000 on an investment of about $7,000,000. The Winnipeg plant has 35,000 patrons, an increase of 5,000 for this year. The gross receipts of the year were $1,038,000, and the plant has been increased in power house capacity from 25,000 to 50,000 horsepower.

Federation For Social Service.

Through the instrumentality of the chamber of commerce of South Bend, Ind., the charities and philanthropies of the city have been united into a federation for social service. The organization is modeled after the federations of Cleveland and Dayton, O.

THE IDEAL DINNER

Foods Should Be Selected With Regard to Nutritive Values.

ECONOMY IN MENU MAKING.

At This Time It Is Especially Useful to Know How to Serve Inexpensive Foods to the Best Advantage—Many Useful Substitutes For Meat.

Prepared by the United States department of agriculture.

Dinner, the heaviest meal of the day, usually has a meat or fish dish as its principal item, with vegetables and bread and butter and perhaps a relish, such as jelly, to accompany it and a sweet [illegible] especially when the rest of her dinner is lighter or simpler than usual a good manager often finds it worth while to let a soup precede the meat. This adds to the attractiveness of the meal and need not mean much extra work. Unless it is a thick broth or is made with milk, the soup has little nutritive value, but it is usually relished, especially in cold weather, and is often an economical way of using up leftovers. The serving of a little soup as an appetizer for the first course of dinner is a common custom in homes where somewhat elaborate meals are the rule.

Piecing Out the Meat Course.

A way of piecing out a very simple meat course is to make the vegetables especially attractive and more nutritious, perhaps serving escaloped potatoes, which have milk and butter added, or macaroni and cheese instead of plain boiled potatoes, or, if the family is fond of such things, providing some kind of simple vegetable or fruit salad, perhaps as a separate course. On the other hand, if some expensive cut, such as beefsteak, is the main feature of the meal the other parts of the dinner may be made simpler than usual and the total expenditure kept not far from the average, or an expensive meal on one day may be followed by a judicious use of leftovers the next day.

In parts of the country where good fresh fish is available it makes an excellent substitute for meat, for sea food has a similar nutritive value, usually costs less and is quite worthy of more frequent use than is common. Dried, pickled and smoked meat and fish also have their uses to vary the diet and can often be used for economical dishes. Cheese, eggs, beans and similar legumes and nuts are other foodstuffs which may be used for the preparation of dishes to replace meat if one wishes to do so.

The Vegetable Course.

In choosing the vegetables for a meal it is worth while to remember that potatoes, both white and sweet, the staple carbohydrate vegetables, contain much larger proportions of nutrients than most vegetables. They resemble cooked macaroni, rice and hominy in food value, and these can be used to take their place when convenience or the wish for variety makes this desirable. It would be better judgment not to serve several of this group at the same meal, not because, as it is sometimes stated in popular literature, the body is harmed by receiving several sorts of starch at one meal, or because one would overeat of starchy foods, but because the meal would be better balanced as well as more in accord with good practice if it included other types of vegetables instead of duplicating those of similar composition. Green vegetables, such as beet tops, kale, spinach, chard and other pot herbs, fruits like tomatoes, green corn, green peas and string beans and the highly flavored root vegetables, such as parsnips and turnips, should be used in combination with the more nutritious kinds, not only for the sake of their flavor, but also for furnishing the body with valuable chemical substances, especially mineral elements.

Dried beans, peas, cowpeas and lentils contain a good deal of nitrogenous material as well as starch and can be used with economy to lessen the amount of meat. Thus the old custom of serving baked beans, peas and bacon and similar dishes as the heavy dish of a meal is justified on the ground of nutritive value.

Serving the Desserts.

The custom of finishing dinner with a sweet dessert is almost universal in this country and is, on the whole, a reasonable one. Badly cooked pastries and puddings very often cause digestive disturbance, but the simpler kinds properly made are wholesome and are fairly nutritious, and fruits, fresh, dried or cooked, and nuts are always in order and easy to serve. The desserts that require much time and labor to prepare are usually not worth while for ordinary family use, though suitable enough for special occasions. On days when the housework is especially heavy it may be good management to substitute fresh fruits or preserves with cakes or cookies for a "made" dessert. If the rest of the meal is light a nutritious dessert is in order, and milk, eggs, butter and sugar are ingredients which contribute materially to the food value of such dishes.

Combining Winter Fruits.

Remove the center leaves of small heads of lettuce so as to make a cup. Into this put shredded celery, apple or both with finely shredded red pepper and a few white grapes cut in halves and seeded. This should be mixed and garnished with a smooth French dressing to which has been added walnut meats chopped to a pulp.

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

Story of a Very Little Girl Who Went to School.

A VENTURESOME JOURNEY.

Ran Away From Home When Her Mother Was Not Looking—Games and Information For Small People—A Mystery Trick.

The scholars in a school in Bronx borough, a part of New York city, were delighted not long ago when a little visitor entered the classroom unaccompanied. She walked right into the room and took a seat before the surprised teacher could say a word. She informed the teacher that she wanted to be a scholar. The little miss was in a few minutes Ernestine's mother appeared and took her home. It appears that Ernestine has been anxious to go to school, the sight of her older playmates on their way exciting her curiosity. So on the day in question she slipped out of her house, equipped with a bag and mother's umbrella, and made her first trip to school. As soon as she was missed her mother hurried to the schoolhouse, feeling that the runaway would be there. As it happened, a photographer was taking pictures of the schoolhouse that day, and he snapped Ernestine as she entered the door.

A New "Mystery" Trick.

A trick that will cause a good deal of amusement and mystification among young folks is played as follows:

A small, bare table is placed in the center of the room in sight of every one. Two silver coins—say twenty-five cent pieces—are placed on the table some distance apart, one at the right hand, one at the left.

A member of the company, who may be called Sally, takes her place by the table, and another, whom we may call Jack, leaves the room.

Sally places her hands, or, rather, her finger tips, lightly upon the table before the two coins close to them, but not touching them, one to the right, one to the left.

"Now," says Sally, smiling at the company, "this is an experiment in telepathy. I will move one of these coins, and Jack will enter and without word or sign from me will tell you which coin I moved. Which shall it be?"

The company says, "The coin on your left."

Sally with her left hand takes the left hand coin, raises it above her head and waves it in a mysterious manner.

She then places the coin back on the table just as it was and her hand just as it was and summons Jack into the room.

He enters, glances carelessly at the coins and without an instant's hesitation says, "Left."

The trick is tried again and again. Neither Jack nor Sally can be detected in the least collusion.

Indeed, there is really no necessity for any of the usual signs, for if those present are gifted with the power of keen observation they will notice that the hand that was raised above the board is for the moment very much whiter than the hand that remained on the table.

If the reader will try standing beside a table, allowing one hand to rest upon it while the other is for a moment held aloft, he will find that the test never fails.—Youth's Companion.

OSWEGO FIRE; LOSS $100,000

Albert Schwill & Company's Plant Totally Destroyed By Fire Last Night

Schwill & Co.'s malthouse at Oswego was destroyed by fire last night. The loss is estimated at more than $100,000. Night Watchman Louis Knight discovered the blaze shortly after he went on duty and he sent in an alarm.

Owing to the location of the building on the river bank, the Oswego Fire department had great difficulty in getting their apparatus near the burning malthouse. Chief Blackburn's men found it necessary to drive down along the towpath through an unbroken road for a distance of six hundred feet.

By the time the steamers were pumping the fire had gained great headway and it was impossible to save the structure. The entire city was illuminated and the seething furnace could be seen for miles around. The department fought the blaze until after midnight in order to prevent it from spreading to neighboring factories.

The malthouse is located on the east bank of the river opposite the National Starch Co.'s plant and it was formerly known as Neidlinger's malthouse but was recently purchased by Albert Schwill & Co., leading maisters of Chicago. About 50,000 bushels of malt were destroyed. The loss was covered by insurance.

AMNESTY GRANTED TO HUERTA FOLLOWERS

Washington, Dec. 29.—A new Mexican peril to-day gave administration officials fresh cause for concern. It was the threatened clash between Generals Zapata and Villa over the granting of amnesty to followers of the former dictator, Huerta.

Official advices over night to the Washington government indicated that the situation at Mexico City was full of uncertainties and officials privately admitted that the apparent discord between the chiefs of the North and the South might prove a menace to the peace of the Republic.

According to reports to the State department the Gutierrez-Villa element believes that fair trial should be given to the officers who had served in the army. Zapata followers think there should be summary execution.

The climax of the dispute is expected to be reached at the national convention which is to meet in Mexico City on January 1 to choose a new provisional president, and officials are looking forward to this event with some apprehension.

Making People Better.

There are more people in cities than anywhere else.

When you want to accomplish a certain result you go where there is the greatest opportunity.

To make government better you must make people better.

To make people better you must work where there are the greatest number of them.

Remove the cities, and the country will take care of itself.

In advertising campaigns one district is tried out first. If it succeeds, then the whole country is taken. This saves much money. It reduces the risk.

In this country we are trying to reform too many cities at once. Let us take one at a time.

Begin anywhere.

If New York is too large, take Fifth Avenue. Let all the efficiency reformers in the country concentrate on Fifth avenue. Let's learn on Fifth avenue.

If we can reform Fifth avenue we can reform the world.—Thomas L. Masson in Lippincott's.

Johnson refused it and then jumped to the Federals for a contract calling for $18,000 for two years—total $36,000. Then Johnson jumped back to Washington, getting a two year contract at $12,500—total $25,000.

Poor Refugees From War Stricken Sections Safe on French Barges

Photos by American Press Association.

Refugees from Belgium and from the northern part of France now occupied by the German army are being taken care of aboard barges in the Seine, Marne and Aisne rivers. These boats are partitioned off in many little bunks, and women and children who have lost all live there in safety if not in comfort and contentment. Their lot is truly a hard one, but they are for the most part resigned to whatever fate the future may have in store for them.

FOSTER KNOWS BASEBALL.

was personally acquainted with all the magnates and many of the stars of the diamond.

There is a great deal of work connected with the business end of running a ball club, and all these details concerning the Giants are in Mr. Foster's hands. Just now there are more than fifty players on the payroll of the Giants. These will all be taken to Marlin, Tex., on the training trip next spring, and many of them will be carried until May 21, the date when the National league teams must be cut down to twenty-one players. Keeping track of these players and knowing where they can be placed if they fail in fast company is one of the tasks Mr. Foster has assumed.

Mandot and Welsh to Meet.

Tommy Walsh, the Chicago manager, has concluded arrangements for a twenty round bout between his charge, Joe Mandot, and Freddy Welsh, to be held at New Orleans during the Mardi Gras season. This fight will mark the opening of Dominick Torteritia's new $50,000 arena in the Crescent City.

FRENCH CLAIM ADVANCES

Paris, Dec. 29.—The occupation of St. George's between two and three miles south of Nieuport by the French; further advances by the Allies in the Argonne district, and the repulse of several Germany counter attacks on the heights of the Meuse, were issued in an official statement by the war office this afternoon. In the vicinity of Troyon, south of Berzan, French counter attacks were successful in ousting the Germans from trenches they had previously taken from the French. The French lines are being drawn in closer around Steinbach in upper Alsace.

WOULD STOP BLOCKING.

Jim Moore Thinks Base Runners Should Be Helped.

Jim Moore, who was a crack center fielder more than twenty years ago, still watches the baseball game closely and at times expresses his opinion regarding present day methods. One of the things he objects to is the way some catchers block base runners away from the plate.

"It is certainly ridiculous," he says, "for burly catchers like Chief Meyers and Stanage with their legs protected by shin pads to sprawl all over the plate trying to prevent such little fellows as Maranville and Maisel getting home. If I were those midgets I would take the high slide and spike the big catchers on their fat hands. It is not fair to smother the plate, for it does not give the base runner any show at all to get into the rubber, and it also takes away from the game one of its best features, and that is base stealing.

"What is more exciting and interesting than to see a man coming home from second on a base hit and sliding into the plate on an eyelash play? If the runner was not blocked off he would be able to take a hook slide or a head first dive, and I prefer the latter if the runner can throw his body away from the touch and leave only one hand to be tagged.

"The blocking off of third base should also be stopped, for that, too, spoils sliding to some extent. In fact, anything that tends to decrease base stealing should be abolished and especially the least attempt of a pitcher to make a balk. Umpires should be ordered to choke off that. If they don't they should be fired. There are strict rules now to prevent balks, but how many umpires live up to them to the letter? Not one."

ONE UMPIRE IN THE MINORS.

Small Leagues Will Effect Material Saving in Arbitrators.

The minor leagues are not only going to cut salaries of players and limit the number a club can carry down to a minimum, but most of the little leagues intend to drop the double umpire system and work but one official next season.

This means a big saving, for the umpires even in the small leagues draw on an average $250 a month, and in the Southern league, where they have been carrying eight men, they will save about $1,000 a month on umpires' salaries alone, not to speak of the cut in traveling expenses.

The International and American associations will probably not adopt the single umpire system. The Pacific Coast and the Western leagues, however, are going to make the cut in the month.

CHARLIE WHITE AND JOE SHUGRUE IN THE RING

New York, Dec. 29.—Trained to the minute, Charlie White, the Chicago lightweight, and Joe Shugrue, the clever boxer from Jersey City, are ready for the tap of the gong which will start them off in their ten-round mill at Madison Square Garden to-night. Both boys indulged in light "gym" workouts to-day. They will weigh in at 133 pounds at 6 o'clock. The betting is practically even.

Both fighters are fit to put up the fight of their lives, and the fans are predicting that to-night's bout will be one of the best lightweight contests of the year.

Shugrue and White are anxious to register a decisive victory, as the winner will probably be matched to meet Freddie Welsh in a long distance bout. Welsh will be at the ringside when the pair clash to-night. He has declared that if the winner's showing warrants him a crack at the lightweight title, he will take him on over any distance.

Billy Roche will referee the contest and will have the boxers in the ring at 10 p. m. The preliminaries will precede the main events.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Special to The Evening Times.

London, Dec. 29.—The following news agency dispatch was received at noon from Petrograd: "It is gathered from the latest official dispatches that the Austrian army is nearing dissolution and is surrendering prisoners by the thousands. The Austrians are straggling in disorderly fashion in the Carpathians. The Russians are now holding the Germans in check along the lower Vistula and the Pilica. The German armies were shattered by their futile attacks against the Russian stonewall. The Germans have lost many thousands in killed and wounded during the recent fighting."

Athens, Dec. 29.—France and England have made preparations to occupy Constantinople, it was learned here to-day. A fleet of transports bearing a big allied army has been assembled with the fleet off the western entrance of the Dardanelles. The French and British warships are preparing to launch another severe attack upon the Turkish forts in a supreme effort to force a passage. The chief reason for this great attack, it is said, is the necessity to supply fresh arms and ammunition to Russia.

London, Dec. 29.—A news agency dispatch from Nairobi, British East Africa, says that a German attempt to capture Mombassa was repulsed. All the German settlers took up arms for the Fatherland, the dispatch adds, and made a formidable force. In addition to their rifles they had machine guns. A brother of Sir Edward Gray, the British foreign minister, was wounded in the arm during the fighting.

Berlin, Dec. 28. (Via wireless).—A gain for the Germans near Nieuport and Ypres in the western theater of war and the repulse of Russian attacks in Poland are the chief features of an official announcement issued by the war office this afternoon.

London, Dec. 29. Many deaths have resulted from a severe blizzard which is raging over England. Rail traffic is crippled by snow and the high winds have blown down telegraph and telephone wires and many buildings are wrecked. Several barges and crews were sunk at Margaret.

IT WAS A RUSSIAN CRUISER

Washington, Dec. 29.—It was the Russian cruiser Askolv that threatened to shell the village of Banais near Tripoli on the night the United States cruiser North Carolina was there, according to a cablegram from Captain Oman of that warship received at the navy department to-day. The threat made by the Russian cruiser was due to the demonstration made by residents against members of the crew on the threat of the Turkish authorities to imprison members of the crew on shore leave.

CARS ARE WARM

New hot air heaters have been installed on several of the interurban cars for an experiment. If they serve practically all of the cars will be equipped with the new heating device.

PILGRIMAGE TO-NIGHT

A large delegation of the First M. E. Brotherhood will visit the Minetto Methodist Brotherhood to-night. A special car has been chartered on the Empire United Railway.

Are YOU Keeping Up With The "TIMES"?

DAILY—ONE CENT

The Evening Times Local Newsgathering Force

A number have wanted to know such things as "Have you anyone on the street" (meaning of course, reporters). We're glad you are asking these questions and want to answer this particular one now.

Mr. R. J. O'Sullivan of Oswego is city editor and reporter-in-chief. He has served on a number of dailies. So he will get to know many of you. In the meantime, any courtesy you can extend him in getting located will be appreciated.

Already we have a good number of assistants who, as you will notice, are daily gaining in efficiency. In this connection we are gradually arranging for representatives in each lodge or society of whatever character. The churches, too, are to be represented.

In fact, we plan to provide a more and effective arrangement than any large city daily would care to undertake. As soon as we can perfect arrangements we propose to feature the men's societies on Tuesdays, the women's, Thursdays; the churches, Saturdays; the schools, Mondays and Fridays.

Then, too; special features will appear and arrangements made for contributions from reliable sources.

The woman's side of the community life and the home side will be in charge of Bertha S. Braun. Under her direction a department will appear Tuesdays and Fridays on the subject of household economy.

Any order or society that wishes to co-operate with us can assist greatly by sending a representative to see Mr. Draper.

GERMANS KEPT FROM REACHING WARSAW'S GATES

Austrians Lose Guns and Prisoners to the Czar's Troops; Turks Leave For Asia Minor

Special to The Evening Times

Petrograd, Dec. 30.—Field Marshal Von Hindenburg's latest drive against Warsaw is on the point of collapse and the Russians are fighting desperately to carry out a flank movement against his Germany army. Official military dispatches from Warsaw state that the German armies lying west of Warsaw have been compelled to evacuate some of their first line positions under the battering assaults of Grand Duke Nicholas' forces.

The fighting in Poland and Galicia is being marked by the most terrible slaughter in the history of warfare. It is impossible to estimate the casualties now, but the figures when they are announced, will be staggering.

In western Galicia stormy weather and the muddy condition of the roads are interfering with operations; in the Carpathians the Austrians are falling back leaving many stragglers and many guns behind.

Along the Bzura and Rawka rivers the Germans are fighting desperately to hold their own, but they are facing superior numbers and Field Marshal Von Hindenburg's worn out troops are facing fresh masses of Russian soldiers.

There was a terrific artillery duel along the Rawka which lasted all day Monday and all of Tuesday, but the Germans were finally compelled to retire after several of their batteries had been silenced. The German lines along the upper reaches of the Rawka and north of the Bzura are farther from Warsaw than they were this time last week. The German lines are now extended in the form of a broad circle with the Russian army in the Pilica valley struggling forward in a mighty effort to envelop the southern wing of the invading [illegible]

The weather is very cold and the fields are covered with deep snow. The snow upon the roadways has been trampled by the marching armies until it has turned the highways into bogs.

The Russian forces south of the Pilica river are driving hard toward Tomaszow and have captured a line of redoubts south of Inowladz, which is only a few miles of Tomaszow.

The Russians operating the line near the Vistula have taken several thousand more prisoners together with a number of machine guns. Austrian cannon were found imbedded in the mud, General Dankl's men being unable to move them when the army retired.

The Austrians on the Gorlice-Jaslo line are trying to reform their forces as they fall back, but in this they are doubly hindred by the impassable condition of the country and the constant harassing of the Siberian troops.

Of the 175,000 men in the Austrian army falling back through the Carpathians, fully 50,000 have been taken prisoners by the Russians.

As to operations against the Turks the following official report is issued: "On Sunday the Russian cruiser Askold bombarded the Turkish port of El Asisab, east of Port Said. The cruiser sent a launch to reconoiter near Beirut, but it was fired upon by Turks and driven off."

Other dispatches bringing the following information: "The Turks have withdrawn a large portion of their troops from the Thracian frontier in order to send them into Asia Minor for service against the Russians. Since the sinking of the Turkish battleship Messidieh by a British submarine in the Dardanelles the Turks have withdrawn nearly all their heavy artillery from the forts around Adrianopole and the Chatalja forts to strengthen the defenses along the Dardanelles.

"The defenses at Gallipoli and the works protecting the Gulf of Saros are all being strengthened. No doubt Turkey will continue to maintain a strong force upon the peninsula of Gallipoli because there is always danger of a land attack against the Dardanelles forts. The Turkish army in Thrace (including those on the peninsular of Gallipoli) is estimated now at 300,000 men. Some of these troops comprise the flower of the Ottoman army.

HIGHWAYMEN STOLE $257

Relieved Pedestrian of That Amount in the Shadows of the Milk Station Last Night

Bold highwaymen, believed to be Italians, held up Augusto Ludovisi with a gun in the shadows of the New York, Ontario & Western milk station at 9:15 o'clock last night and relieved him of $257 in currency.

The victim was on his way to the railroad station to take a train to New York to sail for Italy, his native land. The robbery was not reported to Chief of Police Dyer until noon today.

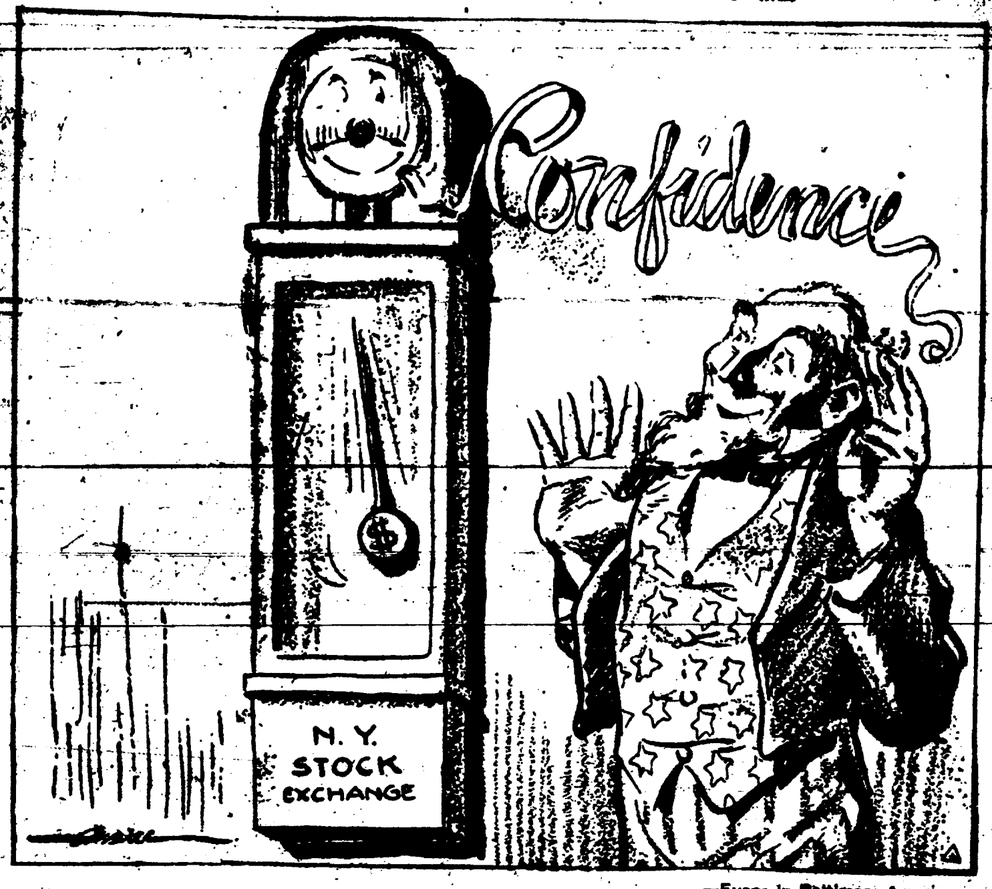
Ludovisi claimed that they pressed a revolver against his temple and warned him not to make an outcry while the second man rifled his clothes. He has seven dollars in his trouser pockets and the remainder tucked away in his inside pockets. He was then ordered to return home and told if he warned the police he would be killed.

When explaining his trouble to the police through interpreter Frank Massaro he was so confused that he could not give a good description of [illegible]

[illegible] numbers by sight and that he has [illegible] seen them about town.

[illegible] case has all the appearances of [illegible] wave and the police will [illegible] thorough investigation. The [illegible]inate man has been a resident of Fulton for the past four years. He worked as a blacksmith two years on the canal and of late has been employed by the Volney Paper Co. He claimed that fifteen minutes before he was held up another attempt was made to rob a pedestrian, but the man was too strong and he scared off the crooks. A fellow-countryman, who planned on returning to Italy with Ludovisi is missing and the police are looking for him.

Austrians Lose in Carpathians



Vienna, Dec. 30.—Admission of the Austrian defeat in the Carpathian mountains was contained in an official announcement from the war office at noon. It follows:

"The Russian army which a week ago began an offensive campaign campaign against our forces across the Carpathians has been re-enforced to the extent that it was necessary for us to withdraw from the plain of the Gorlice. The situation in the north, however, was not influenced by this movement. In the Balkan theater of war the Montenegrins attacked our outer entrenchments at Trebigne, but were repulsed without difficulty. The enemy's artillery was silenced. The Montenegrin bombardment of the fortress at Krewosije has been without effect."

W. J. HARTNETT WILL DICTATE

Oswego Postmastership As He Holds Balance of Power —Pidgeon's Position

Great interest is being manifested [illegible] in Oswego for the postmastership. Among the prominent candidates are William Nacey, proprietor of the Hotel Nacey; Dr. Mary Walker of Civil War fame; County Judge Louis C. Rowe, Clark Morrison, jr., son of the owner of the Oswego Palladium and Attorney John R. Pidgeon.

Pidgeon's candidacy announced yesterday has brought forth quite a little comment among the local Democratic leaders. One prominent politician and office holder said that W. J. Harthett, leader of the Fulton party, who holds the balance of power in the Oswego Democratic County committee, will dictate the Oswego appointment, and he further stated that John R. Pidgeon gained the displeasure of Mr. Hartnett when the former layed down in the last primaries by announcing that he had retired from politics. Hartnett and his followers had much money invested in order to carry the primaries and they severely criticized Pidgeon for his act. There is a big breach between these politicians who were so closely related and who fought arm in arm.

The Oswego "plum" carries a salary of $3,700 and has a four-year term. The term of the present postmaster, J. B. Alexander, owner of the Oswego Times, will expire on February 18th.

Carranza Troops Prove Treacherous

Washington, Dec. 30.—Unofficial reports from Naco state that General Hill's Carranza troops had broken the truce arranged by Major General Scott to-day served to disturb slightly the confidence of officials that the troubles there soon would be settled. It was feared that this action would delay the parleys of General Scott and set back his plans. The reports also stated that General Maytorena, the Villa leader, had asked for another conference before announcing his final agreement to allow General Hill to move his forces.

The administration to-day faced the problem of providing food for thousands of starving Mexicans in the vicinity of Monterey who were reported in distress by Consul Hanna. The message of Consul Hanna was referred to the Red Cross society with the suggestion that the situation warranted prompt measures of relief.

Japan Will Not Send Troops to Continent

Special to The Evening Times.

Berlin, Dec. 30.—Five German airmen made a raid over the Polish city of Sochaczew, dropping forty bombs which did much damage to property and killed many persons, according to a dispatch from [illegible] to-day. Many buildings were destroyed when the bombs set fire to the wooden houses.

It is reported in German dispatches that the Germans have repulsed all Russian attacks in that quarter of Russian Poland.

Among the items given out by official press bureau are the following:

"The British now admit that they made a mistake in flooding the lowlands of Belgium around Dixmude. The inundations are hampering the troop movements of the allies.

"A member of the German government states that talk about peace negotiations between Germany and France is premature. However, it must be admitted that any neutral power is entitled by the rules of The Hague convention to make suggestions and these could not be considered unfriendly by any belligerent power.

"A dispatch from Rome quotes the Japanese ambassador there as saying that the reports of Japan's intention to intervene in the European conflict by sending troops to the continent are unfounded."

Veiled references have been made to a German retirement near Arras where the French have massed about 400 pieces of artillery and the British have about half that number. It is suggested that the Germans withdrew from old positions into new and stronger ones to prevent needless loss of life.

The Kaiser has sent the following telegram to Gen Von Mackenzen congratulating him upon his victory over the Russians on December 17th: "I am full of gratitude to God, who bestowed glorious victory upon your heroic troops. I beg you to accept my warmest congratulations and express the thanks of the Fatherland to your splendid troops. Do not let go until the enemy crumbles into ruin. I promote you Oberst-General for your achievement. (Signed) WILLIAM I. R."

Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria has also sent a telegram of congratulation to Gen. Von Mackenzen.

GERMANS LOSE ST. GEORGE'S

Special to The Evening Times

Berlin, Dec. 30.—(Via Wireless).—An official statement issued here this afternoon says that German troops have been compelled to evacuate the little town of St. Georges in Flanders. Fighting for the town which was taken in a surprise attack by the Allies is still going on.

The official statement follows:

"In the western theater of war we are still fighting for the town of St. Georges southeast of Neuport which we were compelled to evacuate. A storm culminating in a cloudburst damaged positions on both sides in Flanders and in northern France.

"On the Russian defence the day passed quietly.

"In East Prussia the Russian cavalry has been driven back in the direction of Ardkallen. The situation is unchanged in Poland on the right bank of the Vistula river. Our offensive continues on the west bank of the Vistula and on the east bank of the Bzura, and fighting continues on the last side of the Rawaka and also at Imowlodz.

Opinions

The Green Book.

Pancho Villa will soon essay the role of editor of a "Green Book" in justification of his policy toward Carranza. The book will contain many important documents, hitherto secret, which "will disclose the duplicity of the Carranzistas, who sought to make Villa and his military commanders their victims." Also, it will show it to have been the purpose of Carranza not only to repudiate the pledges of the revolution to the people, but also so to establish himself in power that, had he been permitted to continue as first chief, he would have eventually created himself dictator:—Utica Herald Dispatch.

Mr. Perkins Is Good.

By the selection of Charles A. Perkins, to succeed himself as district-attorney, as in that of General Wotherspoon for commissioner of public works, Governor-elect Whitman shows both the desire for efficient public service and a keen eye for the best means of getting it.

If the newspapers had not dug up the information, nobody would have known whether Mr. Perkins was a Republican or a Democrat or a hardy Bull Moose still surviving Armageddon. Excepting patronage brokers, nobody cares. What the public wants is a reasonable assurance of intelligent, hard work, such as Mr. Perkins' experience gives. He has been in the office seventeen years, is an expert in preparing criminal cases for trial and has risen to the head of the indictment bureau. His appointment will follow closely the test of merit.—New York World.

Charles Hall Dead.

Charles Martin Hall, inventor of the electrolytic process for the manufacture of aluminum that made it a common metal in industry, died yesterday in Daytona, Fla. Born in Ohio, Mr. Hall was educated at Oberlin, graduating in 1895. In less than a year, through an interest in chemistry derived from a text book that had been published in 1841 and used by his father, he had developed the process that took aluminum out of the silver class. He began the commercial manufacture of aluminum with the Pittsburg Reduction Co., in 1888, and since 1890 had been vice president of what is now the Aluminum Co. of America, its successor. Before the new process was put into use aluminum sold at $5 a pound. The present price is 18 cents a pound.—Utica Press.

THAT FIRST STREET BILLBOARD

At the present time the business section of this city is free from the billboard nuisance. This is stated advisedly, for it should be known by the people who have an atom of love for the beautiful in nature, and for their fair city, that the Board of Aldermen has given to a bill posting firm the privilege of erecting right in the heart of the city, at a spot that is capable of being improved, a nuisance in every sense of the word; yes, more than a nuisance, for everywhere, in every city and hamlet all over this broad, beautiful land, the modern form of billboard is a recognized menace. It is a menace because it endangers surrounding property. It is a blot upon our civilization because it hides from view the things that God meant for man to enjoy.

It may be, perhaps, unbecoming for a newspaper to decry the use of the billboard. It is an easy matter for the one who is hit by newspaper criticism of the billboard to say that the treasury of the publication suffers as a result of the establishment of the iniquitous things. Such an accusation is false, as it has become a fact beyond question that the real sufferers are those who pay the bills for the advertising that appears on billboards. Indeed, it is the experience of advertisers everywhere—that is, the men who spend their thousands of dollars for publicity, that display boards have no pulling power.

But the Aldermen have thrown down the bars. Permission has been granted a firm whose only motive for obstructing a view of the noble Oswego river is the income that can be derived from posting before the eyes of the people the merits of one of the 78 varieties of beer, whiskey or gherkins. The posts for a billboard at Rochester st., at the intersection of First, are set, and all that remains to be done is to nail upon them the necessary boards, and then, Hooray for an array of art "as is," and not art as was, or was intended. When God made the water and caused it to flow down the Oswego river valley; when He raised into the air those high banks that are capable of becoming veritable beauty spots right in the midst of this city, He meant that man should guard from destruction the noblest works of His hands, the hills, vales, trees and everything pertaining to this vicinity, described so beautifully by a son of the Empire State, James Fennimore Cooper.

Is there not a son of the Empire State who can raise a cry loud enough to put a stop to the desecration of one of this city's assets—its river banks, a spot on one of them that should be allowed to remain free from the taint of the commercial spirit of the times?

If there is not, then 'tis a pity 'tis true.

The thoughts that breathe and burn are the loving and inspiring thoughts that encircle the world and embrace all humanity. Love is service, the joy of service is consecration, and the crowning of consecration is immortality. The greatest souls spring from the greatest struggles. Only they who lose all find all; only they know the joy of triumph and the grace of exaltation. Every homeless brother challenges the validity of my title; every sorrowing sister rebukes my Christless complacency, and every neglected child smites my conscience in the name of Humanity. Not until all are fed are any fed; not until all are sheltered are any sheltered; not until all are free are any free; not until all are civilized are any civilized.—Eugene Debs.

The career of the farmer must be dignified, and the well-being of his family conserved; the farmer's standards of living, of intelligence and of happiness must be raised to those of other callings. The city has ignored the country. Now the time has come for the strengthening of country life, which will mean the strengthening of the nation as a whole.—David Franklin Houston.

The courage to be just; the courage to be honest; the courage to resist temptation; the courage to do one's duty: this is the moral courage that characterizes the highest order of manhood and womanhood—it is the courage without which no great, permanent success in life is achieved.—Samuel Smiles.

The chief reason that everybody is not successful is the fact that they have not enough persistency. Do one thing well, throwing all your energies into it. The successful man, unlike the poet, is made, not born.—John Wanamaker.

Wait not till you are backed by numbers. Wait not until you are sure of an echo from a crowd. The fewer the voices on the side of truth, the more distinct and strong must be your own.—Channing.

H. SCHUMANN-HEINK WEDS.

Henry Schumann-Heink son of Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink, the prima donna, was married Saturday at 5 o'clock to Miss Elsie Straumann, a Paterson school teacher, in the rectory of St. John's Roman Catholic church by the Rev. Edward F. Hillock. The bride was attired in a grown of white silk, with a hat to a gown of white silk, with a hat to match, and carried white roses and lilies of the valley. She was attended by Miss Sadie Green, who wore blue crepe de chene and carried pink roses. Russell Hastings Millward of Washington was best man.

Mme. Schumann-Heink had expected to be at the ceremony, but a concert engagement in Boston necessitated her leaving the city. Mr. Schumann-Heink is clerk of the Recorder's Court in Police Headquarters. In 1905 he went to South America in a government position. He was born in Hamburg, Germany, and studied in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Columbia University. The bride is a daughter of Mrs. Kate Straumann of 168 Liberty st., Paterson. Following a short honeymoon tour the couple will reside in Paterson.

PEPPERY JIMMY AUSTIN WILL PLAY WITH THE PITTSBURGH FEDERALS.

Jimmy Austin, the lively third base man, has jumped from the St. Louis Browns, and next season he will be working for the Pittsburgh Federal league team. Austin was formerly with the New York Yankees. His jump to the outlaw team was expected. The only other player the Browns may lose is Pitcher Baumgardner, as all the others of Rickey's squad have signed contracts.

The Little City of Fulton Is Good Enough For Me

(By Mrs. Isadore E. Hyde.)

One day while walking up the street I heard a fellow say, "What can you find in Fulton, that reminds you of a day,

In May
Well, say!
He's a chump
With a grump.

And if he likes large cities better that's where he ought to be. But the little city of Fulton, is good enough for me.

Last week I felt a sickness. A creeping up my spine; my bones ached, and my muscles to lassitude inclined,

Doctor said—
"You'll be dead;
Or go out west
And take a rest.

If the doctor likes the western air that's where he ought to be. But the zone here in Fulton is good enough for me.

While doing Christmas shopping, a lady voiced her mind "Just what I want in Fulton I surely cannot find,

Out of town,
I am bound
Syracuse,
Oh, the deuce!

If she wants to shop in Syracuse that's where she ought to be. But the local stores of Fulton are good enough for me.

I hear the people all about, complaining of the snow; they say they'll leave the freezing north, and, down to Dixie go.

Snow bound,
All around,
Hear them puff and wheeze;
First they cough then sneeze.

If they like the south-land better, that's where they ought to be. But the temperature of Fulton is just the thing for me.

Some people do not go to church, they say, the church is stale Ah! here's a list of music you gladly would whale,

Violin, flute,
Coronet toot,
Organ linding
Violin blinding.

If you like the movies better that's where you ought to be. But the churches here in Fulton are full of Heaven's melody.

And, now we have a daily—
The Fulton Evening Times.

Our hearts should all be cheerful, and beating in one rhyme.

So now, Hurrah!
This very day
Send in your dime,
Don't bide your time.

Tho' if you like dime novels better, that's what you ought to read. But, our Fulton daily paper is surely going to lead.

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR

Our Girls and Boys are a much More Important Part of the Community Than we Oftimes Realize. This Department is Their Especial Part of the Paper—Older Folks Can Read if They Wish, But Only Those Under Fifteen can Contribute.

The tale we print below is the first of a series of anecdotes regarding the person we announced a guessing contest—for particulars see Monday's Children's Hour.

I.

In a western city there lives a lady who is getting gray and feeble now who delighted to tell this story:

One summer my mother gave me permission to pay a girl chum a visit and when the time came it was not possible for anyone to go with me. In spite of the fact that I had never made a trip on a railroad train, my mother decided to let me go.

But when it came time another complication arose for no delivery wagon arrived as had been ordered for my little trunk, all packed and strapped ready for departure on our front porch.

Naturally, a little girl gets anxious at such a moment. In fact I worried and fretted myself into a fit of weeping. It was while I stood on the front steps vainly trying to supress my sobs that the party came along the street.

Noticing my woeful attitude, stopped a second, then turned in at our gate. Up the walk and an arm reached out with the question:

"What is the trouble? Tell me, perhaps I can help you." So I explained between sobs. Mother came out and soon my sobs ceased for I hear:

"Come little girl, take my hand, I will carry your tiny trunk."

So done our steps and done our walk, turning into the street we went. My mincing little feet trying vainly to keep stride with the longer ones.

Wasn't I a happy girl.

TANGO CONTEST

All of the dancers are here and ready for the contest to-night against Fulton's best dancers. The theater stage is decorated and the dancers had a good rehearsal and all feel confident of winning first prize which the management has offered for the best dancing couple.

The dancers will demonstrate the latest steps as they have different ideas of the art. Fulton dancers will have all their friends present in crowds as they have found out that Oswego will bring a big delegation to cheer their favorites and help them win from Fulton. Indeed, it will be one big night at the Quirk theater. The pictures will be on hand as usual and the dancers will go on at 9 o'clock. The delusion will be the same as always. Also the great English military photo play, "Lord Chumley," in four parts, and other reels.

Upon receipt of such information we shall place to your credit upon The Evening Times' mailing or subscription list the amount of unearned cash that has been received by The Weekly Times.

For Example:

"Semit" subscribed for The Weekly Times on July 1, 1914, for one year. On January 1, 1915, he shall have remaining to his credit 50 cents.

This sum is the price charged for The Fulton Evening Times for six days a week for two months, which means that "Semit" will by making the transfer from the old to the new list, receive at least 48 pages for 50 cents, whereas by continuing as a weekly subscriber he would not get more than 13 copies and these papers would be extended over a period of six months—a slow process, isn't it?

There is another point for explanation:

Many subscribers for The Fulton Evening Times have been annoyed by the non-arrival of the paper. To one and all the hope is expressed that we shall receive as much indulgence as lies in one's power of endurance for very soon our circulation building [plans] and their execution should bring the desired [results] the subscriber and publisher.

In the hope that 1915 may bring [to] the names of all of our weekly pat[rons] good wishes to the people of Fulton who best to co-operate in the publication of Progress," we remain,

About Fight Mainly

By Frank G. Menke.

New York, Dec. 30.—The Ghetto of this here New York town asks you, please, to take a few squints at Johnny ("Young") Lustig, its new idol and "the coming lightweight champion of the world."

Johnny has been making large noises in the pugilistic world recently, and from practical obscurity of about a year ago he has jumped to the fore at such a clip that he is being ranked among the very best scrappers in the lightweight division.

Leaches Cross used to be the idol of the East side. That was before Leaches began to slip. He still might be the idol if he hadn't spurned that offer of $1,250 to fight Lustig for 10 rounds. The East side can understand many things but it can't understand why a man should pass up $1,250 for thirty minutes exercise, unless the passing up is caused by a severe attack of coldfeetitis.

You see, it happened this way. A year ago Leaches was the whole works over in the East side and Johnny wasn't anybody. But that was a year ago. Since then Leaches seems to have lost his old time wallop. He has lost a bit of his speed and stamina. On the other hand, Johnny has advanced from recruit stage to a place near the top. And then it was that Johnny's backers insisted that Leach meet Johnny and settle the championship of the Ghetto. But Leaches ducked. And Leaches continued to duck while Johnny and his crowd hurled defis, challenges, jeers, and a lot of other things at Leach.

"We'll guarantee you $1,250 to meet Lustig in a 10 round bout," was the defi heaved at Leach by Clarence S. Gillespie, Fox Building, New York, who manages Lustig.

And Leach, would you believe it, passed up the money. Oi, yoi! Such a strangeness! The East side couldn't understand it. $1,250 for 30 minutes exercise—and Leach passes it up! Oi, yoi! I!

It was then that the East side did a Walter Johnson—it jumped to support of Lustig. After nosing into the record of Lustig the East side has come to believe that Lustig is quite a scrapper, and it hopes that Lustig will do what Leach Cross failed to do—bring the lightweight championship to New York.

Lustig never has been defeated. The nearest he came to it was when he fought Johnny Dundee. That fight was called a draw—and it was a sizzler of a scrap right from the outset. Lustig went up against one of the very best fighters in the game today and handed out as much as he had to take, which was quite an accomplishment for a man just graduated from the novice class.

Lustig is a favorite with the fight fans because he is a fighter. He doesn't stall. He's aggressive and he's game. No matter how hard the wallops that land on his framework he keeps coming back for more. He bores and continues to bore. He gives the crowd its money's worth of real fighting. And the crowd likes him because of it.

Lustig is a two handed fighter. He carries a husky wallop in either mitt. He isn't exactly a Packey McFarland on the defense, but he guards himself mighty well and he's improving all the time.

Lustig has scored victories over such men as Matty Baldwin, One Round Hogan, Walter Mohr, and Phil Bloom, as well as a lot of lesser lights in the lightweight ranks.

EDITH L. CHESEBROUGH THINKS GOLF IS ONE OF BEST GAMES FOR WOMEN.

Miss Edith L. Chesebrough, the expert California woman golfer, has started a movement to induce more women to take up the game. She believes that golf offers advantages for her sex that no other game has. The one feature that prevents its being more popular is the fact that a large tract of land is necessary for the laying out of a course. With more public courses in the large cities she thinks the number of women who will play will be largely increased.

SYRACUSE MEN ARE LEARNING TO COOK.

Men as well as women will have an opportunity to learn the fundamentals of good cooking when the Committee of Social Service Work at the Fourth Presbyterian church begins its classes in culinery science, Jan. 8, at the parish house.

Mrs. George B. Wood has supervision of this work, which the committee believes will be one of the most far-reaching of its branches. The classes will meet each Friday evening during the winter. The kitchen of the church is one of the most modern and here the instructions will be given, the spacious dining room also being utilized.

Already there are applications from several men for space in the class, and upon investigation the committee has found that there are men who keep bachelor hall or who are widowers, who wish to know how to cook a substantial and nourishing meal. To this instruction Mrs. Wood will give particular attention.

Mrs. Clarence E. Bull is chairman of the Social Service Committee, which has started this work for the parish.—Post Standard.

HOT LINERS.

Lives of boxers all remind us
We might make a pile of dough
If we had the nerve to take it,
For the things we do not know.

The Yankees remain unsold. In the meantime Jake Ruppert's getting a lot of free advertising.

Jim Gilmore doesn't want the Supreme Court of the U. S. A. (which resides in Washington) to make a final ruling on the Walter Johnson case.

Seems to us that Rube Marquard is getting entirely too much publicity for jumping from the New York Giants to the Brooklyn Federals. A million persons make the New York-Brooklyn jump every day and think nothing of it.

Joe Bayley and Johnny Moore battled for 17 rounds up in Canada Saturday night. Then midnight arrived. The laws prohibit Sunday fighting. So they postponed the finish of the match until some later date.

JEALOUS OF GIRL; SHOT LITTLE GIRL.

Millville, N. J. Dec. 30.—John Horn 25, is locked in the jail here today charged with the murder of pretty Beatrice Baily, six years old, of Millville. The child was shot and instantly killed at the home of her grand mother, Mrs. Alice Pettit, in Buckschutum, when a bullet, fired through the window at Miss Alice Pettit, 17, daughter of Mrs. Pettit, penetrated her brain.

According to the police Horn confessed to the shooting at the Pettit home some hours after he learned that the pretty child was his victim.

Detectives Lore and Brady, who made the arrest, say that Horn declared he was jealous of Miss Pettit and he found his attentions were rejected decided to avenge his wounded feelings. Horn will be arraigned today.

The Pettit family was seated at the dinner table, little Beatrice chatting and laughing with the others. She was seated next to Miss Pettit. Suddenly there was the report of a gun. It was accompanied by the crash of a window breaking.

Little Beatrice fell from her seat at the dinner table. The family rushed to her side. They discovered she was dead.

Some hours after the shooting, when the news reached the house where Horn was hiding that little Beatrice was the victim of the bullet, he ran to the Pettit home.

There the family was mourning over the girl's death. As Horn strode into the room the detectives were telling of their efforts to find the slayer.

With tears streaming down his face, Horn walked up to Mrs. Pettit and said, according to the detectives:

"I did the shooting; it was all a mistake."

According to the police, he then told of being crazed by the fact that Miss Pettit had spurned him. So he went to the house with the intentions of using his revolver.

When he fired, he did not know the result of his shot.

LAND BANK ORGANIZED; TO BEGIN BUSINESS.

Albany, Dec. 29.—The land bank of the state of New York has been organized and is about ready to commence business. State Superintendent of Banks Eugene Lamb Richards will so advise the legislature in his forthcoming annual report. Permanent officers are expected to be selected in the near future so that the bank will be in a position to actually begin business at an early date. In his report, Superintendent Richards will say in part as follows:

"While our statute books have been flooded with regulative provisions in recent years, it is seldom, I believe, that a more important piece of creative legislation has been enacted than the provisions embodied in the banking law authorizing the creation of the land bank of New York State by local savings and loan associations.

While based to a large extent upon the European systems of cooperative finance, this legislation is essentially American and is also based upon the experience of the local savings and loan associations of the state of New York during the last thirty five years.

If the benefits derived from the present law of the state relative to savings and loan associations can be extended to strictly agricultural districts and the land bank of the state realizes the expectations of its advocates, the problem of rural credits in this state at least will have been almost entirely resolved."

War: Pathos and Humor

Paris, Dec. 29.—(By mail to New York)—When the Germans made their great march through the provinces of Luxemburg and Namur, in August, a little band of 150 French soldiers were cut off. They took to the woods, and performed wonderful feats of daring in attacks on the Germans from their fastness. The Germans have sent large bodies of troops against them, but have been unable to find them. The romantic story of their escapades was brought here today by a messenger who succeeded in entering the German lines, communicating with the commander of the 150 guerillas, and then returning to Paris. These men are all that is left of the French who for two days resisted the German's advance between the River Semois and the River Liesse on August 22nd and 23rd. On the latter day an order to retreat reached them, but it was too late, as their escape had been cut off by the rapid advance of the Germans. Making a quick decision, the commanders of the 150 survivors led their men into the Ardennes mountains, between the towns of St. Hubert and Givet, Belgium.

A lair was selected which would give them an opportunity to harass the German lines of communication and quickly retreat. Scouts were sent to the nearby villages and the peasants gladly did all they could to help the soldiers, with food, bullets and information. Soldiers, women and children collected 17,000 cartridges from the Leisse-Semois battlefield, for the little band. The commanding officer gave the peasants regular army requisition papers, for what they did.

The Germans believed the country was clear of hostile troops, and their provision trains were lightly protected. Time and again, the Frenchmen dashed upon these trains, killing the guards, and making off with the provisions. These attacks were made at widely varying points. The German cavalry and infantry troops were sent into the forest, but the French soldiers by this time had learned the ground, and the pursuers never got a glimpse of them. On one occasion, a German force seized the Chateau d'Ardenne and was devouring the contents of the wine cellars, when the commander of the French soldiers decided to trap and capture the German commander.

The latter was strolling near the chateau, when, to his astonishment, he met face to face with a French officer in full uniform and was commanded to throw up his hands. Instead, the German drew his revolver, but the Frenchman was quicker on the trigger and shot him dead.

The report brought the soldiers on the run from the chateau. The French, seeing that they were greatly out-numbered, fled, and not one was even wounded. At Beuraing, ten miles from this place, the French killed a German captain. It was after this incident, that the most determined effort was made to round up the band. It was evening when the attacks continued and the Germans neared Houyet, Gebuyne, St. Hubert, Beuraing, and Givet, which have been thrown into a state of terror. No strangers are allowed to pass. The Germans posted the following announcement to the soldiers of the forest, at many points in the district:

"French Soldiers:

"We know where you are, and have full information regarding your strength. In your own interests, we advise you to surrender, and we promise that your lives will be safe. If you refuse, everyone of you will be shot." The next day the Germans were angered to find dashed across the poster: "If you know where we are, why don't you come and get us." Beneath was the signature of the French commander, with his full name, and number of his regiment.

SERENO E. PAYNE LEAVES $75,000

Auburn, Dec. 29.—The will of Congressman Sereno E. Payne, admitted to probate by Surrogate Walter E. Woodin today, disposes of property estimated at $75,000.

The value of the personal property was not named, but the real estate located at No. 3 Orchard st. is worth $2,500. Mr. Payne's own estimate of his estate places the value of all at $5,000.

Letters testamentary were issued to Miss Marion H. Payne and William K. Payne. The legatees named in the will are all relatives and are his son, William K. Payne, and three sisters, Misses Clara A. Payne, Marion H. Payne and Ida A. Payne.

The property in Orchard st. goes to the three sisters; also the sum of $20,000. The residue of the estate is left to the son.—Post Standard.

SUPERVISOR TO FARM IN THE FAR WEST.

Auburn, Dec. 29.—The town of Summerhill will be represented by a new face on the Board of Supervisors after the town meeting next February as Supervisor Joseph A. Ranney has sold his farm of 650 acres to Isaac and Russell Hall of that town for $25,000, and will leave for California some time after March 1. He will not be a candidate again.

Mr. Ranney has served his town for two terms, during 1913 on the committees of footing assessment rolls, and county accounts, education, grand juries, outstanding town and county indebtedness, and chairman of the Committee on Erroneous Tax.

He is undecided where he will locate in California. He has one brother, Walter, who has been in Santa Anna for two years, who has a dairy and is prospering in the milk business. He also has two sisters in Mountain View on a fruit ranch. His daughter lives with them, going to the High school in that place.

Mr. Ranney said today in view of his inexperience in the fruit as grown on the coast he thought the raising of registered Holstein cattle would be more in his line and prove a greater investment.—Post Standard.

DR. SEARS TALKED BEFORE CLUB.

Dr. Frederick W. Sears yesterday afternoon told members of the Ka-na-te-nah club how to prevent disease by keeping the house and premises clean and free from flies and mosquitoes. This was one of the series of municipal afternoons in the year's calendar of the club. Mrs. George F. Crans of Warners is chairman of the committee for municipal days and Mrs. A. H. Sheldon arranged the programme yesterday.

Dr. Sears laid emphasis on the necessity of absolute cleanliness in fighting disease and explained how to obtain this condition which he stated, was much better than trying to stamp out uncleanliness after it once obtained a foothold.

At the close of his talk luncheon was served at a table presided over by Mrs. Sarah Millen and Mrs. John S. Avery, assisted by Mrs. O. D. Burhans and Mrs. John Bates. Among the guests of the afternoon were Mrs. Beatty of Seneca Falls and Mrs. Hills of Mount Vernon.—Post Standard.

COMPENSATION AWARDS TODAY

New York State Commission Holds Its First Hearing For This District At Syracuse

The first hearing of the New York State Compensation Commission for Deputy John Fitzgibbon's district, which includes the City of Fulton, will be held in Syracuse to-day.

Hearings on all the cases that have arisen since this new law went into effect will be heard by the commissioners and awards will be made according to the nature of the cases.

Undertaker Joseph Youngs of this city, who buried an Italian named Matalone, who was drowned at Minetto on October 18th while working for Walter Bradley, the barge canal contractor, will probably be awarded the compensation for his services by the commission.

The sad part of the Matalone case is that his wife had just sailed from the old country when she received word that her husband was dead. She is now in a highly nervous state at the home of her son at Minetto and can not be comforted. Under the Compensation law she will be awarded fifty per cent of her husband's wages, which at the time of his death were about $10 a week.

Many Fulton and Oswego attorneys are in Syracuse to-day appearing before the Commission in behalf of their clients. Requests for compensation have been made by several Fultonians.

OPEN HOUSE AT THE ELKS

An open house will be held by the Fulton Lodge of Elks New Year's afternoon and evening. A fine program has been arranged by the social committee and the guests will be assured an enjoyable time, for the "Best People on Earth" entertain as no others can. Oswego Lodge has announced its intention of sending up their newly organized band to add to the gayety of the occasion. Among them will be such noted entertainers as James, Kelsey, Manor and Wilcox.

STRANAHAN COMMENDED

The custody of the Oswego county jail was turned over to the new sheriff, William L. Buck, of Mexico, to-day by Myron A. Stranahan of this city, The Board of Supervisors commended Sheriff Stranahan for the excellency of the service rendered during his term of office.

GOING TO CANADA.

For the third time in about as many years, Charles E. Stewart, the well known Republican leader of this city, will go to Canada in the interests of the Granby Pulp & Paper Co. Mr. Stewart will leave for Maynooth, Ontario, on Jan. 4 and will remain three months.

SUE THE CITY.

An action will be instituted against the city by Samuel Mirsky in behalf of his infant son, William who was injured Monday evening on the lower bridge, when a load of pulp bound for the Volney Paper Co., tipped over and pinned him to the railing.

The action will be started against the city as it is claimed that the condition of the road was the direct cause of the accident. The driver claims that his sleigh capsized when it suddenly sank in a pitch hole and that he was driving along with caution and he attributes the condition of the bridge to the negligence of the city of Fulton.

TREE FOR POOR

A Christmas tree for the Sunday school pupils of the Salvation Army and any other poor little tots who missed on Christmas that wonderful treat of childhood, will be enjoyed at the Army hall on New Year's eve. A concert will be given and a "Watch Night" service will be held.

In looking over the generous gifts received by the little folks in our own homes possibly a gift or two from the lot could be made to find their way to the Army tree to gladden some poor, forlorn, little tot.

Then, too, there's the blessed time of teaching our blessed children the joy in giving.

Shall the Army tree be scantily trimmed?

THREE HUNDRED BORN PER YEAR

Records of Registrar of Vital Statistics Show One Birth Per Day

It is interesting to know that the City of Fulton averages a birth a day, according to a statement made this morning by City Clerk Leon Scudder, who is Registrar of Vital Statistics. Fulton has an average of thirty births a month while the mortality average is only fourteen.

Besides births and deaths, one other important record is kept by this official and that is a list of the number of persons who launch themselves upon the field of matrimony.

The average is the same as that of the deaths, and those who have experienced it claim that there isn't much difference.

City Clerk Scudder has not compiled his annual report to be submitted to the State Department but will have it prepared within a few days. According to these figures Fulton's population should increase a thousand souls every five years.

LARCENY CHARGE AGAINST FLANIGAN

Justice of Peace Locked Up; Many Checks Involved In the Matter.

Syracuse, Dec. 30.—Eugene L. Flanigan, former justice of the peace at Eastwood, was arrested at 10 o'clock last night in a motion picture theater in North Salina street upon a warrant charging him with petit larceny.

Complaints were made to the District-Attorney's office some time ago, and for several days the assistant district-attorney has been carrying on an investigation. According to the information upon which the warrant is based, Flanigan and Bower post-dated several checks. When these were presented to the bank for payment, in some cases, it is charged, it was found that there were no funds to meet them.

Information furnished the District-Attorney's office is to the effect that several checks were returned unpaid. None of the checks involved was drawn for a large amount, but it is claimed that a large number of them were issued.

Flanigan, whose career in Eastwood has caused considerable newspaper comment, embarked in business in this city about two years ago. With a partner he opened the Umbria theater at North Salina street and the West Shore tracks.

The motion picture house was repaired and besides the regular picture program, several vaudeville acts were added. It was in this theater that Flanigan was found by the officers last night. At the time of his arrest the house was crowded.

Flanigan received the greatest amount of publicity more than a year ago when he fought the trustees of the village of Eastwood to hold the office of police justice after another man had been elected to fill the place.

For several months the fight continued, Flanigan insisting upon his right to hold court. He studied law and equipped himself to continue the contest, but finally gave way to the elected justice, Joseph E. Egan.

ARRIVE IN ATLANTA TO-DAY

Heffron and Loop Met by Friends at Syracuse Station

Syracuse, Dec. 30.—William E. Heffron and George W. Loop will be received at the United States penitentiary at Atlanta at 5:30 o'clock this afternoon. They will be placed in the infirmary immediately upon their arrival.

The two former officers of the Heffron Co., who were convicted of misuse of the mails at Auburn last week, passed through Syracuse at 7:30 o'clock yesterday morning. They were met at the Lackawanna station by a number of former employes of the company, among them several who were witnesses for the government at the trial.

GOING TO THE PONTIAC

A large number of Fultonians plan on attending the New Year's festivities to be held at the Hotel Pontiac, Oswego, Thursday night.

RAMSDEN SUFFERS FROM ILLNESS

Syracuse, Dec. 30.—With the permission of the Monroe county authorities J. M. J. Ramsden, jr., indicted for the murder of his wife, Florence Case Ramsden, spent yesterday in Syracuse.

The main purpose of his visit was to consult Dr. Henry L. Elsner, who has been his physician for several years. Ramsden is suffering from an organic heart lesion. It is incurable, the physician says. Since his imprisonment a tumor has developed in his neck and it was about this that he consulted his physician. It is not a grave ailment.

It was only for the purpose of permitting him to visit his physician that the Monroe county authorities sanctioned Ramsden's visit to Syracuse. While here, however, he went to the grave of his wife. Ever since the tragedy, which resulted in Ramsden's imprisonment, he has spent most of his waking hours in rehearsing aloud his last interview with his wife and the circumstances surrounding her death.

"I thought that if I could visit her grave," he said, "and actually convince myself that she is no longer alive, her memory would not haunt me so much, and I might find some rest. But I keep turning over and over in my mind the suspicions, the fears and the rumors that led to our last quarrel. This visit may change all that."

Physically, Ramsden's condition is not so good as immediately prior to his arrest. There is little change in the condition of his heart, but he is on the verge of a serious collapse.

Ramsden was in custody of Jailer Mathew Schamine and Under Sheriff John Phelan of Rochester. They arrived in Syracuse shortly before noon and spent more than an hour in the office of Hitchcock & Murphy, Ramsden's counsel, and the office in which Hrs. Ramsden, formerely was employed. Mr. Elsner's office was visited early in the afternoon. The prisoner and guards returned to Rochester at 5 o'clock.

"REBEL" OAKES IS GETTING GOOD MEN FOR PITTSBURGH FEDS.

This is E. T. Oakes, manager of the Pittsburgh Federal league club. He comes from the south, and this gave him the nickname of "Rebel" while he was with the St. Louis Cardinals. Next season he will have Ed Konetchy, his former teammate, with him. He has also engaged Jimmy Austin of the St. Louis Browns, and he says he will have an infield in 1915 that will be second to none.

WILL MANAGE JAIL FARM

Lee Summerville a Prominent Granby Farmer Entrusted With This Duty

Lee Summerville, one of the leading farmers of the town of Granby, has been appointed superintendent of the Oswego county jail farm by Sheriff-elect William L. Buck of Mexico.

Mr. Summerville is a practical farmer and a man of considerable experience. He will make strenuous efforts to put the jail farm on a better paying basis than it has been in former years.

Besides supervising the farm work Mr. Summerville will act as guard over the prisoners. He will also have the assistance of other guards, while the inmates of the jail are being worked in the various parts of the spacious farm.

Mr. Summerville is a loyal Republican and deserves the appointment. The Times joins with [illegible] section in extending congratulations to Mr. Summerville.

With the failure of the Board of Supervisors to making changes in the management of the jail farm it will be for the next three years under the direct supervision of the sheriff's office.

MARKETS FOR COUNTY FRUIT

Growers Will Discuss Remedy for Recent Condition of the Market; Meeting in Oswego

Oswego, Dec. 29.—The annual mid-winter meeting of the Oswego County Fruit Growers' association will be held in morning and afternoon sessions in the Court House in this city on January 5th, and one of the most interesting programs ever devised for the mid-winter meetings will be presented. It is now being arranged by Farm Bureau Manager E. Victor Underwood, who has been in correspondence with some of the leading pomological experts in the country, whom he expects to be here to address Oswego county fruit farmers.

Several professors from Cornell university will be on the program, but of more interest at this time will be several addresses by experts on co-[illegible] and marketing. The problem of marketing fruit, especially as, [illegible] increased production in the [illegible] years in this State, there has been a lack of marketing facilities which oftentimes has resulted in farmers selling the product of their orchards for little or no profit, will be discussed. This year was an excellent example of an off year and hundreds of fruit farmers sustained losses in apples when the principal excuse offered by purchasers in large quantities was the curtailment of the European market. The State Department of Marketing at Albany is composed of experts who believe that all of the fruit grown in this State should find ready sale at good prices here, and, in addition, they have evolved a scheme for the elimination of the middle man in such sales which will give the farmer and producer more power and scope in making sales of the product than it is now possible to enjoy.

The coming meeting will be of intense interest to those who derive either pleasure or profit from fruit growing and it will probably be the most practical meeting which the association has yet held. The attendance at the meeting is not confined to members of the association, they will welcome all who are in any way interested and it is hoped that a large [illegible] of pupils will be present and [illegible] interest in the proceedings.

Penn[illegible] Football Coach Will Stick to His Post.

An unu[illegible] situation developed in college athle[illegible] when the members of the football squad of the [illegible]iversity of Pennsylvania unite[illegible] a protest against the retention [illegible] George Brooke as coach. Brooke has a contract covering two more years. He was declared to be a failure because of the poor showing the football team made the past season.

Brooke refused to resign. He said that he had done as well as any coach could do with the material at hand and that he was entitled to a chance to prove his ability by continuing in the post. He declared that to leave under the circumstances would ruin his reputation and impair his earning capacity.

The weekly paper conducted by the students of the university took up the fight against Brooke and in an editorial said:

"There will be no sportsmanship next [illegible], if Brooke, a repudiated coach, [illegible] in charge of the team, which is now [illegible] in belittling him a failure. [illegible] is not behind Mr.

[illegible] BOYS [illegible] TIMES

Maps of Two Great Battlefields In Europe; Allies Batter at Germans; Russians at Bay.

According to British and French official reports, the allies are pushing a strong offensive against the intrenched Germans from Nieuport to Ypres, making slow gains. German official reports deny that any material progress has been made by the allies. In the eastern field the Germans forced the Russians to take up new positions to protect Warsaw, and a desperate series of battles began, with the capital of Poland as the prize. The Germans heralded the retreat of the Russians along the whole battle front to the Carpathians on the south to East Prussia on the north as the greatest victory of the war. Berlin and Vienna reported that the Austro-German armies drove the Russians back in Galicia to a line skirting Cracow, Przemysl and Lemberg. The relief of Przemysl and the recapture of Lemberg were even hopefully predicted. In Russian Poland the German central column advanced to within twenty miles of Warsaw. In this region a great battle began. On the other hand, Petrograd discredited the claims of a great German victory. The Russian general staff characterized the fighting as not important, but indicated that a general retirement had taken place. Shaded portions on the map at the right show the invasions into East Prussia, Poland and Galicia.

SIXTY YEARS OLD ON SUNDAY

Church of the Immaculate Conception Will Round Out Sixty Years of Existence

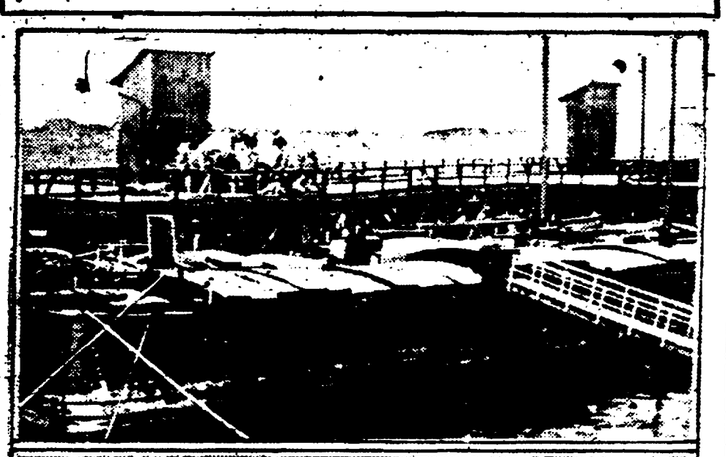
Sunday is the 60th anniversary of the founding of the parish of the Immaculate Conception. The church was established in 1854 by the Rev. James Smith of the diocese of Albany and at that time it included all of the neighboring towns and villages.

Although Sunday is the anniversary of the foundation of the church no special services will be held other than the usual ceremonies. Being the Feast of the Holy Name the members of that society will receive holy communion in a body at the 8 o'clock mass.

The first edifice was erected upon the site of the present church rectory and it served as the place of worship until 1899 when the present imposing structure was dedicated. The rapid growth of the parish has necessitated the erection of a parochial school where the children of the parish will receive both a practical and a religious training. The new school is now under construction.

A remarkable feature of the parish is that during its long period of existence there has been but three rectors: Father Smith, the founder; the Rev. Patrick Kearney, his successor, and the present pastor, the Rev. John L. Lindsman, who assumed charge March 26, 1906.

During Father Lindsman's short period he has accomplished wonderful work and it was through his efforts that the new school has become possible. Father Lindsman prior to taking charge of the Fulton church was assistant to the date dean Barry at St. Paul's church, Oswego.



Father Smith retired in 1879 and died on September 15, 1881. His successor, Father Kearney, took charge in 1879 and was pastor until his death March 11, 1906.

There has been a number of assistants during the past sixty years all of whom are dead with the exception of one, the Rev. J. B. Greene, of St. John's parish, Binghamton. Father Lindsman is assisted by the able clergyman, the Rev. David J. Dooling.

Friday, New Year's day, is a holy day of obligation. First mass will be celebrated at 5 o'clock and high mass at 9 o'clock.

A holy hour devotion will be held at the Church of the Immaculate Conception New Year's morning from 10 until 11 a. m.

Poor Refugees From War Stricken Sections Safe on French Barges

Photos by American Press Association.

Refugees from Belgium and from the northern part of France now occupied by the German army are being taken care of aboard barges in the Seine, Marne and Aisne rivers. These boats are partitioned off in many little bunks, and women and children who have lost all live there in safety if not in comfort and contentment. Their lot is truly a hard one, but they are for the most part resigned to whatever fate the future may have in store for them.

A Judgment was filed yesterday afternoon in the County Clerk's office at Oswego against John C. Hunter of this city in favor of Leonard Ames, of Oswego, for $11,037.43. The action was to recover on a note for $10,000 given on October 12, 1912, and indorsed by Mr. Hunter. The judgment was taken on default, the defendant putting in no answer.

MINETTO WON THEIR HEARTS

Members of the First Methodist church Brotherhood accompanied by their wives and other members of their families traveled to Minetto last evening in a specially chartered trolley car. The car was overcrowded and if the weather had been better two cars would have been required.

They went to visit the Brotherhood of the Minetto Methodist church which has been but recently organized under the direction of the pastor, the Rev. C. F. Miller. The Minetto folks furnished supper before the Fulton contingency arrived. There were nearly a hundred of them.

The program was furnished by our local experts, being in charge of City Judge Herbert S. Wilson. The numbers were largely of a musical nature. The orchestra, male chorus, soloists and instrumentalists, being quite well known to Fulton audiences.

Especially commendable wsa a solo by F. S. Goodjon; a duet and chorus; the male quartette selections rendered by Messrs. Lawton, Joslin, Reebe and Goodjon; the Anvil Chorus and instrumental selections by F. Jesse Newton and Clark Morrill. The Brotherhood orchestra, assisted by the Newtons, produced the music.

The force of habit was plainly illustrated by the director of the program, who continually charged the jury as to the amount of applause that was appropriate or desirable.

A class history was delivered by George Carner, who was as amusing as ever, but evidently suffered from embarrasement (for the first time) for he sacrificed accuracy as to dates to make out his fifteens. Brief addresses were given by the Rev. George Stockwell and the Rev. Miller. The former very properly hit the Judge, and the previous speaker as "end" men.

The party returned to this city at 10:45. The program rendered is to be given on the occasion of a similar visit to another community sometime in January.

E. S. Tatem of Stroudsburg, Pa., when ordering recently, wrote: "In all my experience as trainer and handler of horses I have never yet found anything that would equal Hanford's Balsam of Myrrh."

Leading Doctors Advised Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy.

Nothing Helped Patient So Much—Kept System In Good Condition During Dangerous Illness.

It is seldom that physicians endorse a ready prepared medicine, for they have their own remedies and treatment to prescribe, and we don't blame the doctors in the least. Often, however, they have to admit that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy does the work and succeeds where all other prescriptions. Only a year or so ago such a case happened in Kingston, N. Y., where one of the best known women in that city was attacked with pneumonia, at the age of 68 years. It was an alarming case and was attended by three of the leading physicians in Kingston and by a trained specialist from New York City. Nobody recovered from the pneumonia, but she was attacked by severe nervousness, complicated by distressing and complicated heart trouble. She could not sleep and her entire system was run down, nervous and weakened. It was absolutely necessary to keep her bowels in regular and at the same time sweet and free of top drastic a nature. It was a delicate situation. Now the lady had previously used Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy and she and her family knew of its value. The doctors finally decided to allow her to use it and they found that the results were more satisfactory than from any other treatment they had tried. As they were broad minded and honest men, they advised her to continue its use, in connection with their own general treatment. Added therefore, by Favorite Remedy, the good lady steadily improved and she is now in most excellent health.

We will give the names of all parties upon request. We cite this case as further proof that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is a highly valuable preparation, so safe as it is efficient, for the most delicate person. For nearly 40 years it has enjoyed a steady success in the treatment of Liver, Kidney and Blood disorders. Send to-day for a free sample bottle and valuable medical booklet. Dr. David Kennedy Co., Rondout, N. Y. Large bottles at all druggists.

NATTY NECKWEAR

Much Use Is Made of Collar and Cuff Sets.

SATIN COMBINATION SMART.

Popularity of Dark Costumes Has Helped to Promote Interest in Lace and Embroidered Novelties That Help Set Them Off.

Variety in one's stock of neckwear is useful late in the season when gowns have been worn so often that they are passe. A dainty collar and cuff set often transforms them. Fortunately, just at this time, when white sales are on, many handsome pieces greatly marked down, if chosen judiciously, may be worn next season.

Neckwear is popular at present, partly due to the fashion for black and dark colored street dresses, the majority of which require a dainty bit of neckwear to relieve their severity. Almost every shape of collar is seen, from the extreme plaited and cape backs to the high, severe medici, and cuffs are worn with these in all depths and designs.

Fine [illegible] embroidered sets of the ruffle and of batiste edged with a rolling frill are among the favorites. There are handle sets in flesh, champagne, blue, with a decoration of [illegible] and embroidery or buttons.

Satin and [illegible] sets are among the smart novelties, sometimes cut in points. Flesh colored satin sets are particularly effective with black stocks, very fine in black and white, or in black and white combinations, have severe little frills sometimes combined with tucks in the back. These stocks are worn in an odd way with V neck waists, being simply fastened around the neck, letting the V portion bare. They are adaptable for a low or for a high neck waist.

Fine stocks finished simply with a rose at the left side or with a high rabbit ear effect shaped in [illegible] fashion are smart.

Ostrich and velvet ribbon ruches are also in. The medici collar is pretty when made in very soft, fine lace and chiffon. A very smart touch is the floral ornament for wear at the shoulder or tucked up under the ear on the new high stocks. Single roses are the smartest.

Illustrated here is a pretty specimen of the turned over collar in handkerchief linen. The front is adorned with embroidery. There is a plaited back edged with narrow val lace. The collar is cut in a rather novel adaptation of the sailor effect. It is embellished with embroidered polka dots.

SUCCESS IN COOKING MEAT

To cook tough meats, saute to keep the juices in and then stew until tender. Serve with thick gravy.

Roasted meats have a better flavor than baked ones. The meat should be first placed near the coals to sear and then drawn back to cook at lower heat.

Remember that the success of frying depends upon two things—having enough fat to completely cover the article cooked in it and having the fat [illegible] hot.

Tough meats can often be [illegible] and of a good flavor by [illegible]. They are left in a close covered [illegible] work, stock and [illegible] added slowly [illegible] should be cut very [illegible] heater, hot fire [illegible]. When the meat begins [illegible] they can be [illegible] meat

CARE OF COOKING UTENSILS.

The up to date housewife tabooes all heavy cooking utensils. Those of light aluminium, granite and double plated tin save energy.

Tinware may be cleaned with very little trouble by using dry flour applied with a piece of newspaper.

Pie tins greased with butter will make the bottom crust of pies flaky and prevent them from being soggy.

When using a double boiler the food will cook more quickly if the water in the outer vessel is salted in the proportion of a fourth of a cupful of salt to one quart of water.

An oven that is constantly in use requires to be kept scrupulously clean. It should not only have the shelves scrubbed out with soda occasionally, but in addition the shelves should be painted with quicklime two or three times a year. An oven treated in this way never becomes caked with grease, and there is no unpleasant smell when it is being used.

THE NEW YEAR'S DINNER.

Variety and Excellence in Fare For the Family Gathering.

This suggestion to the busy woman for New Year's dinner will be a change from turkey:

Cream of Tomato Soup.
Stuffed Olives. Celery.
Oyster and Mushroom Patties.
Roast Chicken, Chestnut Filling.
Stuffed Spanish Onions.
Potato Puff with Cheese.
Egg Salad on Lettuce Leaves.
Macaroon Whip. Sponge Cake.
Coffee.

As to the decorations suitable for New Year's day, bunches of holly are the most appropriate. Put them in one of the large bowls of pottery now so much in favor for the center of dinner tables. They come decorated with gayly painted fruits and flowers. These bright tints harmonise well with the holly berries.

Small bonbon favors are now seen in many of the shop windows in the shape of turkeys. Put one at each plate filled with salted almonds or bonbons.

Have each plate card painted with a branch of holly. Candle shades should be red to match the prevailing color.

METALLIC NOVELTIES.

Library Furnishings of Bronze That Are Very Artistic.

In the shops one sees wonderfully pretty things made of bronze. Some of the prettiest and most useful of these are decorated boxes, photograph frames and book supports for the library table.

BROWNE BOOK SUPPORT, FRAME AND BOX.

Some supports are in the shape of Greek athletes with shoulders manfully braced in the direction of the line of books. Well executed models of jungle beasts, lions, tigers, elephants and apes are other models.

Mahogany Frames.

"Small furnishings add so much to the beauty and comfort of a room that they are always especially tempting to the wise shopper. There are some charming little mirrors set in mahogany frames and hung from mahogany frames on a little crossbar swung in two uprights. It is just like a big pier glass, only that it stands not more than two inches high.

Earrings Out of Style.

Earrings are quite out of fashion in Paris for day wear. One only sees them on English women now. Even in the shops frequented by tourists very few earrings are shown, and these only in brilliants for wear at night. Earrings do add years to one's appearance.

CHIC BUT SIMPLE STREET FROCK OF SERGE AND SATIN.

This street frock of navy blue serge and black satin is very simply built, but extremely chic. Over a foundation skirt of satin is worn an ankle length accordion plaited serge tunic, fastened down the center front with novelty buttons of gold and blue. The bodice is a bolero effect, with a pointed vest of satin. The collar and cuffs are of white handkerchief linen, finished with tiny pearl buttons.

ELABORATE FROCK OF EMBROIDERED NET AND SILK FOR DANCE WEAR.

The dance frock illustrated is of turquoise silk, veiled with three tiered tunic of white net, with embroidery in [illegible] beads and [illegible] flowers. The [illegible] frock [illegible] with [illegible] ribbon and [illegible] with narrow val lace. It is [illegible] in [illegible] and gauze.

DOMESTIC HELPS.

Freeze candies before using them to light your dinner table. They will not run and will last longer.

A very little glycerin smeared around the glass stoppers of bottles will keep them from sticking.

In ironing a blouse the sleeves should always be ironed first.

Colored handkerchiefs should be soaked in cold water for a short time before they are washed. This will prevent the colors from running or fading.

If the piano keys are washed with a soft flannel dipped in alcohol they will retain their color and not grow yellow as they do when washed with water.

To prevent pictures from slipping and hanging uneven hang them first with their face to the wall and then twist around so that the wires cross. This will prevent them from slipping.

To wash painted plaster walls add two parts of warm water, one part milk, soaping cloth as usual. After cleansing rinse with clear water and dry quickly.

A flannel cloth dipped in camphorated oil will remove white blister spots from a polished table that come from overheated dishes. Unless spots have gone in too deep this will work.

CHOOSING WALL PAPER.

In Selecting It Consider the Height of the Room.

The treatment of the walls necessarily plays an important part in the correct arrangement of any room and is often the means of bringing order out of apparently hopeless decorative chaos. If the ceiling is very low the walls must be treated in such a way that the ceiling appears higher than it really is. In such cases the use of a paper showing a very pronounced vertical stripe will be helpful if no frieze be used and the paper extends to the ceiling.

A plain surfaced paper sometimes has the same effect, while the use of a very deep frieze or the use of the same paper upon the ceiling and a frieze of perhaps unusual depth has the effect of making even a room with a very high ceiling appear lower because it emphasizes the horizontal rather than the vertical dimension.

KNITTING BAGS.

Dainty Affairs Into Which the Ball and Needles May Be Slipped.

The smart woman is always au fait in the matter of bags or similar accessories to the costume. Unfortunately tempting looking bags are so costly and manufacturers bring out such a great variety of these that one must be not only vigilant, but prosperous, to keep up with the styles.

Nowadays, too, there are bags for every occasion. There is the ever useful hand bag which nobody carries with her when she goes shopping, and there is the bag for the opera, for the bridge party, etc.

Pictured here is a model furnished with the beauty helps that the modern woman likes to have constantly at hand. The top of the bag is of silver, with a mirror set inside. Carried out to match there is a pendent jewel to give a touch of color below.

Now that every one is knitting for the war sufferers, women of course have fancy bags in which to carry the materials for the work. The bag illustrated is a circular affair of natural colored linen drawn up at the top by pink baby ribbon and finished with narrow val lace. It is suitable for [illegible] and [illegible].

Cincinnati's Industrial Survey

Manager, Civic and Industrial Department, Cinnati Chamber of Commerce

The oldest Chamber of Commerce in the United States was organized in Cincinnati seventy-five years ago, in October, 1839.

From its very beginning this institution has taken a live interest in matters of great importanee to this city and nation. Its influence has been widespread. Two things may be mentioned as indicating the scope of its activities. Through it the United States Weather Bureau was organized, and for a year before the government took over the work it was maintained in Cincinnati at the expense of the Chamber of Commerce; it was the promoter of the building of the railroad from Cincinnati to Chattanooga by the city of Cincinnati.

In addition to its function as a civic institution, very early in its history it established a trading exchange where grain bought and sold grain, hay and other commodities and incident to which has been carried on the official weighing, inspection and grading of all grain and hay received in Cincinnati.

The renaissance of this venerable organization has taken place. It has absorbed other bodies and has greatly increased its membership. Retaining its trading exchange, it now has become a modern institution with thirteen distinct departments under expert management: Traffic, Publicity, Civic, Industrial, Convention, Trade Expansion, Foreign Trade Statistics, etc., and also its subsidiary organizations, such as the Hay and Grain Exchange, Traffic Club, Retail Merchants' association, etc. It maintains an active interest in civic affairs and constantly takes steps to promote the industrial and commercial activities of the city. Its policy is to resolve, investigate and do more. Its slogan might be said to be "Results rather than resolutions."

The first of this year the Board of Directors became convinced that it would be well to have an industrial survey made of the city, a gathering together, classification and interpretation of detailed information in regard to the factors which make up the present industrial situation. By this means it was hoped to discover which were the weak and which the strong points of the city, in order that steps might be taken to correct the defects, and that the advantages might be made available for argument in favor of Cincinnati. It was decided that where efforts are to be made to persuade industrial establishments to relocate in Cincinnati, the usual "hot air" process is to be missing, and facts alone presented. The manager of the Civic and Industrial Department was made director of the survey.

First a schedule was carefully prepared indicating those subjects which it was desired to secure detailed information; then followed the development of a scheme for classifying and filing the material. Next came the actual collection and compilation, which has been carried on for a number of months. This has involved the search of many sources for facts about subjects which have either a direct or an indirect relation to the industrial status, such as fuel, power, traffic, housing, education, rentals labor, cost of living, sources of raw materials, markets, recreation, municipal conditions, industrial training, laws and ordinances, etc. Finally came the interpretation of these data, now being undertaken.

The first problem was to be able to give a bird's-eye view of industrial Cincinnati. The result is the "industrial" map which accompanies this article and which as published is 17 x 22 inches in size. It eliminates streets, parks and other details of the ordinary map. It indicates the accessibility of factory sections, potential industrial districts and workmen's homes to street car lines and railroads. It shows the station, warehouse and yard facilities of the railroads and gives a wider range of information than other maps showing shipping facilities only.

In the office of the department is a large wall map upon which about the same information is indicated and the locations of about 1,500 of the most important manufacturing plants of the city are "spotted in" in colors. Different shades of blue represent different kinds of wood working plants; red, metal working; yellow, factories of manufacture from leather, etc.

As far as possible and as rapidly as the facts collected by the survey permit, the working into graphic form, which are here reproduced. These are supplied from time to time to the local newspapers, and some appear with explanatory articles in the Cincinnatian, the monthly publication of the Chamber of Commerce. The originals are drawn upon tracing cloth from which blue prints are made. The blue prints are used to supplement letters to prospective industries and to others seeking information about Cincinnati.

Monographs on the general subjects are being written, such as education, cost of living, transportation, fuel and power, rental of workmen's homes, climate, etc. These will soon be published and ready for distribution.

A distinct section of the survey has been a study of industrial education. This was undertaken at the request of the public schools, with the idea that information would be obtained upon the basis of which the public schools could improve the work of vocational training. The first section of this study, an inquiry into the allied printing trades, has just been completed.

It is the intention to keep the material collected by the survey as nearly up-to-date as possible, in order that the Chamber of Commerce and through it the people of the city, may have at their command a sort of balance sheet showing their industrial situation.

The detailed information in regard to the problems of different lines of manufacture, collected, classified and always at hand, now make it possible to answer promptly the questions of those interested and in reply to give facts instead of guesses. Already this has been productive of tangible results, and the department is being used more and more by residents of the city as a source of information upon civic and industrial subjects.

ENGLAND ACCEPTS U.S. PROTEST; CASE CLEARS

Danger of Friction Eliminated; Other Powers Affected By Great Britain's Attitude Are Watching

Special to The Evening Times

London, Dec. 30.—Officials of the British foreign office are closely studying the American commerce during the war to-day and the indications are that a reply will be made as soon as possible. Members of the diplomatic corps scout the idea expressed in some quarters that the matter will lead to friction between the United States and England.

The foreign office has accepted the protest as a friendly action intended to clear up a situation that might have become serious had it been allowed to continue without a clear understanding. Even the statement of President Wilson that compensation will be asked because of the damage done to American commerce has failed to broil the British press, which is usually quick to take offense.

While the United States is understood to have taken its step without consultation with other neutral countries, diplomatic representatives of Holland, Denmark, Sweden and Norway are intensely interested in its outcome. These countries as well as the United States have been sufferers as a result of the attitude taken by England as to shipping.

The note from Washington which was presented to the foreign office yesterday afternoon has not yet been given out and it will probably be kept secret until the note of reply has been prepared and sent by Sir Edward Grey, the foreign secretary. Immediately upon its receipt a summary of its contents was sent to Sir Edward by Viscount Haldane, who has been acting as head of the foreign office in the absence of the foreign secretary.

Sir Edward is expected to return at once,

GERMANS LOSE HOPE; FRENCH CITIES ARE SAFE

Special to The Evening Times

Paris, Dec. 30.—Over the greater part of the 300-mile front in France, Belgium and Alsace-Lorraine, the terrific battle between the allies and the Germans has developed in an artillery duel on a grand scale.

Despite the gale which is raging over western Belgium and northeastern France the booming of guns is incessant. A Sluis telegram received by way of London, says:

"Since Tuesday morning the thunder of their guns have been dominating the bombardment of the Germans. A German officer who has just returned from the Yser front says: "Our men are falling by thousands under the mighty cannonade of the allies. Never before has an army been called upon to face such murderous artillery fire. I am convinced that we shall never be able to reach Dunkirk and Calais, but we cannot yield because the morale of our troops would suffer too much if we did so."

At the eastern end the French lines have been drawn through Cernaya, Aspach, Thann and Sulz. In the center of this circle lies Steinbach, which is under continuous bombardment. Steinbach is nine miles northwest of Muelhausen. It lies upon a railway line running from Muelhausen into the lower reaches of the Vosges mountains and is a point of considerable strategic importance.

French airmen, operating from Belfort, have dropped bombs in Steinbach and in Maulhausen during the past 48 hours.

From Altkirch to Pont-a-Mousson the battle line lies about exactly upon the Franco-German frontier. At only one point, namely in the region of Mont Donen, is the fighting taking place upon French soil. From Pont-a-Musson the line bends westward to St. Mihiel, upon the Meuse river. Thence it swings north and eastward around Verdun to the forest of Grurie. The Germans have gotten in artillery range of only one of the forts defending verdun.

Infantry fighting is reported from the Combartzyde-St. Georges Dixmude-Ypres lines and from several points in France, notably the Argonne region, but in practically all the attacks the French and British have held their own.

A storm, described as the "wildest gale of the winter," is sweeping the trenches along the Belgian coast, causing indescribable sufferings to the soldiers on both sides. Many soldiers were drowned; others were frozen to death in the trenches. The Germans have commandeered nearly all the stoves in western Belgium for the use of the soldiers in the trenches.

It is announced that Lieut. Garibaldi, grandson of the Italian hero, was killed while leading a bayonet charge in the Argonne region. He was fighting with the French army and his men succeeded in taking two German trenches after their leader fell.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Other Nations May Follow Precedent

Washington, Dec. 30.—The protest made by the United States to the British government against the interference with American shipping by Great Britain to-day continued to be the absorbing topic of conversation in diplomatic circles. Representatives of neutral countries have made further inquiries of the State department relative to the situation and this strengthened the belief that these nations will follow the lead of the United States against Great Britain in interference with over-sea shipping.

It is believed better treatment should beaccorded American cargoes. Opinion prevailed among the diplomats as well as in circles close to the White House that severe measures would not be necessary.

There was no change in the policy of silence adopted by the British embassy, but it was intimated by officials there that the embassy regards the possibility of friction between the two governments over the situation as quite remote.

Administration officials reiterated statements that the note sent to London was not to be considered in any sense as a threat against Great Britain. The point was emphasized that the document contained no statement that could be so construed or that could be used to force the United States into a more advanced position than it is prepared to take at this time.

Amsterdam, Dec. 30.—That Emperor William had a narrow escape from death at the hands of a French aviator while he was at German field headquarters in West Flanders on Christmas day, was the information contained in a dispatch received here today. While the Kaiser was dining with his officers a French airman flew over the German camp and dropped bombs, one of which landed less than 200 yards from the Emperor. The dinner party hastily broke up.

Constantinople, Dec 30.—It is officially announced that another attempt of the British to invade Turkey at Akabah, on the Red sea, has been repulsed. The official statement follows:

"The pursuit of the Russians in the Caucasus is progressing. Large numbers of prisoners and much war material have been taken. We have achieved nother success north of the River Ura, where we took prisoners and some guns."

A HAPPY NEW YEAR

BEST OF INVADING GERMAN ARMIES AT GOMBIN

Turks Hurled Back; Heavy Losses For Them; Steady Advances Made By The Russians

Special to The Evening Times

Petrograd, Dec. 31.—The Russians are now upon the offensive all along the line in Poland and Galicia.

The German armies under Field Marshal Von Hindenburg and Oberst-General Von Mackenzen have been compelled to take up new positions by the vigor of the Russian attacks west of Warsaw.

The Austrian army under General Boshmarmelli, which was sent to reinforce the Austrians retreating through the Dukla Pass and envelop the left wing of the Russian army in the Carpathian mountain district, has been broken up and is in danger of annihilation.

Sorties from the besieged Austrian fortress at Przemysl have been repulsed with heavy losses.

The Turkey army which had advanced into Transcaucasia to Sarikamisch, 47 miles from the Turkish border, has been defeated after a two-day battle and is in retreat.

Those are the salient features of official telegrams received by the Russian general staff to-day from field headquarters at Warsaw in the Russo-Austro-German theater of war and from Tiflis to the Russo-Turkish amphitheater of hostilities.

The Russians' advance has been steady since Sunday, especially in the sphere of operations south of the Vosges. The ability of Grand Duke Nicholas to place fresh formations upon his battle front to oppose the worn out German troops has compelled Oberst-General Von Mackenzen and Field Mrshal Von Hindenburg to change their plan of campaign and to retire to other positions on the Bzura and Rawka rivers.

The defeat of General Boehrmeolier's Austrian army who was hurried forward under forced marching to reinforce the Austrian troops around Dukla Pass, is in retreat. It is passing through hilly country where there are no fortresses to give it shelter. The ground which is being yielded enables the Russians to take up positions of great strength, thus menacing still further the German troops under Von Mackenzen.

Railroads are scarce in the region through which the Austrians are retreating and the roads are so bad that the infantry can make but painful progress. The Russian cavalry, which is in the vanguard of the pursuers, is cutting down hundreds of stragglers and taking hundreds of prisoners of war.

In Poland the Russian positions are satisfactory at every point, thanks to the masterly strategy of Grand Duke Nicholas. Field Marshal Von Hindenburg has been compelled to abandon his assaults on the roads converging at Warsaw and his forces are now on the defensive.

The positions held by the Germans on the right bank of the Bzura a few miles north of Sochaczew has been abandoned by them.

Hard fighting is in progress around Bolimow where the Germans are resisting the advance of the Russians with the courage of despair.

A battle is raging around Gombin, between Lowicz and the Vistula river, where the Germans have thrown forward the flower of their invading army into the fray. The early stages of this engagement have been favorable to the Russians, who captured a whole platoon of quick firing guns.

The Russians are again driving in the direction of Cracow from a point east of Zakliczyn. First, however, they must force a passage of the Dunajec river at that point. Zakliczyn is only 35 miles southeast of Cracow.

There is a hard fight for trenches south of Inowlodz.

The following statement relative to operations against the Turks is given out.

"The Turks in great force, attacked the Russians in the neighborhood of Sarikamisch on December 25th, but were repulsed with heavy losses. They lost many guns and quick firers. After the Russians silenced the Turkish guns the Turks were reinforced. At the same time, however, Russian reinforcements also arrived on the field. The fighting then went on all night with varying fortune. All arms were engaged on both sides. Finally the Turks were compelled to retreat and were pursued by our cavalry.

"Refugees report that the Turks are ravaging the Armenian districts which they pass."

[illegible] Will Punish Offenders

[illegible], Dec. 31.—Turkey must give satisfaction for the violation of the consulate at Hodeide. This was decided to-day at a special council of the Italian cabinet which met to discuss the strained relations between Turkey and this country. It is believed that Turkey will agree to Italy's demands that the Turkish gendarmes who broke into the Italian consulate at Hodeida be punished and that the British consul be released.

Austrian refugees arriving at Milan say that the war riots in Vienna and Budapest have become so dangerous that soldiers have been stationed around all the government buildings to prevent them from being attacked. It is reported that two fresh revolts have broken out in Austro-Hungary, one in Transylvania and the other in Dalmatia. Many revolutionists have been shot.

BRITAIN READY TO MAKE REPLY

Neutral Countries May Be Required to Continue Germany's Bottled Up Position

London, Dec. 31.—The feeling that there will be a speedy and amicable settlement of President Wilson's protest against British interference with American shipping on the high seas was strong here to-day. There was another meeting of the British cabinet at which Sir Edward Grey presided and afterward it was reported that the foreign office is now in a position to draft the outlines of England's reply to the American government's note. The formal reply will probably be delivered early next week through Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British ambassador at Washington.

The solution will probably be this: The British government will make arrangements with neutral countries through which American goods may pass to British enemies which will make these countries "water tight" insofar as the possibility of export therefrom of contraband is concerned. By this it is meant that the neutral governments of such countries as Italy, Holland and Denmark will be compelled to prohibit the passage of godds into Germany and Austria. When this "water tight" arrangement is made England will be able to relax the rigors of searching American and other ships which will obviate the long delays and inconvenience of which President Wilson complained.

British newspapers continued today to discuss the American note at length. The Standard in its leading editorical warned the country that the American protest is a serious one and should not be treated lightly. The Standard goes on to say that the sentiment in the U. S. in favor of the allies is less pronounced than it was three months ago and that it is yielding in favor of Germany as the underdog in the fight against great odds.

"Therefore," the paper says, "If any solution is possible the United States should be met halfway."

The Morning Post contends that American copper exporters have by no means been ruined, declaring that in September and October, 1913, they sold 10,000,000 pounds of copper to Italy, Holland, Norway and Sweden and that in the same months this year they sold the same customers 50,000,000 pounds.

ROBBERS' RICH HAUL

San Antonio, Tex., Dec. 31.—The three bandits who held up the Pullman passengers on the Sunset Express on the Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio line of the Southern Pacific road Wednesday, secured $7,040 and jewelry valued at $3,000, according to reports made to the railroad. The robbers boarded the train at Cline and got off at Spofford, from which town they were chased to the Mexican border by a posse. Jose Martinez, a wealthy Mexican from Durange, who with his wife and daughter occupied a drawing room, was overlooked by the bandits.

Martinez had $14,000 in gold in his possession.

EASTERN WAR ORDERS

Boston, Dec. 31.—New England manufacturers are working their plants day and night turning out $10,000,000 worth of goods now engaged in the war. Many plants formerly working on a short time schedule have started overtime work with large gangs of extra help.

A few of the largest contracts are: Manchester, N. H., $1,000,000 order for cotton goods and $1,000,000 worth of tent cloth.

AMBASSADOR VISITS FOREIGN OFFICE

London, Dec. 31.—American Ambassador W. H. Page visited at the Foreign office this afternoon and had a talk with Sir Ed. Grey, the British Foreign Minister, relative to President Wilson's note protesting against British interference with American shipping and seizures by British warships.

BATTLE ISLAND FREIGHT WRECK

Northbound N. Y. C. Train Derailed This Morning and Not a Soul Injured

The train crew miraculously escaped injury, possibly death, in a disastrous freight wreck which occurred at the sulphite switch, Battle Island, before daybreak this morning, in which four loaded freight cars were derailed.

The New York Central extra freight was proceeding toward Oswego at a rapid rate of speed when one of the brake arms dropped, thus causing the accident. A peculiar feature of the wreck was that the locomotive did not leave the track.

As the loaded cars of merchandise piled up the crashing noise could be heard for a half a mile and residents of that vicinity were aroused from their beds and they rushed to the scene to see whether or not they could be of any assistance.

The four cars were piled across the roadbed and their contents were scattered about. Two of the cars tipped over and the other two remained intact. A caboose and five others cars did not leave the rails. The accident occurred at 5:25 a. m., the train being bound from Syracuse to Oswego.

The wreck tied up traffic for several hours and the northbound mail, passenger and paper trains were late. The New York Central wrecking crew had the debris cleaned up enough to continue traffic at 8:30 o'clock.

FIRE TO-DAY

The Fulton Fire department was summoned to the home of Guy Pershaw, 311 Pratt street at noon to-day to extinguish a slight blaze which started from a gas stove in an improvised laundry in the basement of the house.

Rejects Order For Material; Action of a Scientist

New York, Dec. 31.—An order for $2,000,000 worth of shrapnel to be used in the war in Europe has been rejected by the Commonwealth Steel Co. of Granite City, Ill., it was learned to-day, because Clarence H. Howard, president of the organization, believes warfare should not be recognized.

Mr. Howard, who lives in St. Louis, is a Christian Scientist and is known all over the country as the "Golden Rule Steel man" because he tried to run his plant in accordance with the Golden Rule by sharing profits with the employes, is stopping at the Biltmore hotel with his wife and son Thorne.

Although he talked freely of the trouble in Europe, he frowned at the report about the $2,000,000 shrapnel order, and then said with blazing eyes:

"Why our company would not accept an order for $15,000,000,000 worth of shrapnel. Would it be a laudable thing to make these shells and then send them away so that men might murder one another with them? No, a thousand times no. War itself is a bitter shame. It is something that does not belong in the general scheme of enlightened humanity. If men would only think in unison and think purely and strongly, the abolishment of the war would soon develop.

"The peace meetings recently held in the churches here were a fine thing. I tell you the secret of life is at our very doors and we do not realize it. What is that secret? Is that there is nothing but good in all the world. It is something that might be successfully applies in religious life and to end this horrible warfare."

WEATHER FORECAST

Cloudy to-night and Friday. Probably snow flurries. Moderate southwest winds.

FRENCH ENTER STEINBACH; TAKE GERMAN TRENCHES

Republic's Troops Get New Position At Argonne; Blowing Up German Mines and Trenches

Paris, Dec. 31.—The French army has been investing Steinbach in upper Alsace and has entered the city occupying half of it. After a serious hand-to-hand conflict with the Germans in the streets. Official announcement to this effect is issued from the French war office to-day.

At the same time it was admitted that the Germans had made a gain in the Champagne district where two lines of French trenches were blown up. At Mesnil-Les-Hurnus, 27 miles southwest of Rheims, the French have taken the trenches of the second German line. In the Argonne the French blew up a mine and occupied the excavation. Between the Meuse and the Moselle rivers German trenches about 150 meters in length fell into the hands of the French.

Amsterdam, Dec. 31.—The village of St. Georges, south of Nieuport which was occupied by the Allies early this week and has been described by German artillery, according to reports received here to-day. The Germans are establishing a new aerial base 4 miles from Ostend. Germany troop movements are again under way in West Flanders. 1,000 German marines arrived from the front yesterday. The German government is transporting troops into Belgium for training duties. About 17,000 Germans aged 18 to 20 are being drilled near Liege and Namur.

BRYAN WILL NOT TELL WHEN TO EXPECT NOTE

Special to The Evening Times.

Washington, Dec. 31.—Secretary of State Bryan announced to-day that the full text of the American note to Great Britain would be made public here as soon as it is given out by the British government. He added that it will be released at Washington and London [illegible], but will not indicate when.

[illegible], Dec. 31.—Administration officials to-day while waiting for a reply from the British government to the protest of the Nnited States against interference with American shipping, turned their attention to suggestions that came from various sources relative to measures the Washington government might take to cooperate with Great Britain to remove as far as possible the necessity for search on the high seas.

It was pointed out among other things that legtimate cargoes might be certified before the ships carrying them leave the ports of this country. Such a procedure, it is argued, would make these charges immune from detention and seizure.

No concern was expressed by officials over reports from London that the answer of the British government to the American note will be delayed and that guarantees may be demanded from this government as to the honesty of the bills of consignment. It was believed that a mutual understanding will be reached between the two governments after a diplomatic interchange of views.

The fact that the note sent to London contained nothing of a peremptory character, but merely was a frank statement of the troubles of American shippers due to the activities of British men-of-war, was the basis for this optimism on the part of the administration, it was stated.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Paris, Dec. 31.—It is reported from St. Omer that a British and a French airmen flew over Thouront, in West Flanders, dropping bombs on the German aviation depot there. The airmen were driven off by high angle guns, but their bombs are believed to have wrecked several Taube machines.

Venice, Dec. 31.—It is reported here that the Austrian battleship Viribus Unitus has been torpedoed by a French submarine in the harbor at Pola but that the warship succeeded in reaching her dock. It would have been necessary for the submarine to dive under several rows of mines to accomplish this feat. The Viribus Unitus is one of the biggest men-of-war inthe Austrian navy, having a displacement of 20,000 tons and carrying a crew of 1,000 men.

London, Dec. 31.—Reports that Emperor William is dangerously ill are again current but they are, without any foundation.

London, Dec. 31.—The following news agency dispatch was received here to-day from Paris: "A report from Switzerland which was published here to-day states that Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria, has abdicated the throne of the dual monarchy."

It was impossible to obtain any confirmation of the rumor and it received little credence in London.

IMMIGRATION BILL AMENDED

Washington, Dec. 31.—The Senate to-day rejected by a vote of 26-34 the Cummins mendment to the literary test clause in the Bernett immigration bill. The amendment provided that aliens should be exempted from the literacy test where they prove to the satisfaction of immigration officials or the secretary of labor that they are seeking admission to the United States in order to avoid "Religious political or racial persecution whether such persecution be evident by over acts or by discriminatory laws or relations."

Upon the announcement of the defeat Senator Cummins offered the amendment with the phrase: "Whether such persecution be evident by over acts or by discriminatory laws or regulations" is stricken out. The amendment as thus modified has been defeated by a vote of 36 to 28.

Opinions

The Sneerers at Prison Reform.

Mr. Thomas Mott Osborne's arraignment of his critics is quite human and certainly was not unprovoked. He is a theorist, but he is the kind of theorist who is willing to test his theories with a practical application. No harder test of any ideas about prison reform could be devised than to apply them to Sing Sing. At the very least Mr. Osborne is entitled to a fair trial of his, and to a fair comparison of the results of his brand of administration there with the results of the old style.

This state has nothing to be proud of in the way its prisons have been managed and its prisoners treated. It has taken many years for the idea to spread abroad, that it was penny wise, pound foolish, to send men out from prison so broken in health, so bitter in spirit, so reeking with the atmosphere of crime that they could not possibly be anything but criminals again. Yet the idea has spread and can never be killed. Whatever mistakes may be made in schemes of prison reform will be regrettable. They cannot be half so regrettable as the sneers at any honest effort to help men in prison and so help the state which owes a duty to them.—New York Tribune.

Better Reduce It.

It is said that a movement has been started in several cities of this state to let down the bars as to the limit at which cities may go into debt. Some of them wishing to go deeper into debt, would make the limit higher. The constitution provides that "no city or county shall be allowed to become indebted for any purpose or in any manner to an amount, which, including indebtedness, shall exceed 10 per centum of the assessed valuation," etc. The effort will be made, it is understood, to induce the delegates to the constitutional convention which meets in April to increase this to 15 or 20 per cent., to the end that larger debts may be piled up.

This should be resisted on every side. The debts of cities are high enough already for their prosperity and for safety of their securities. If any change whatever is to be made, it should be toward reducing the debt limit. It might better be six or eight per cent. than 10 or 12.—Danville Press.

The Contraband Dispute once More.

Our manufacturers and exporters undoubtedly have cause for complaint against Great Britain by reason of that country's stretching of the rules of contraband. Yet from what has been made public it is difficult to analyze the precise grounds of President Wilson's note of protest. Apparently no fundamental dispute as to the law of contraband has arisen. But that is the worst feature of this nebulous portion of international law. Even if general rules are agreed upon the opportunities for haggling over guilt in particular cases are endless.

So far as appears in the Washington dispatches the chief source of trouble has been the much mooted matter of conditional contraband. Under the declaration of London it was made entirely clear that the doctrine of ultimate destination had no application to conditional contraband shipped between neutral countries. That is to say, foodstuffs or other products not necessarily used for military purposes could not be seized as contraband if proceeding from America to Holland, for example might be shown to be the armies of the Kaiser. The one exception made to this rule was when the country of delivery had no seacoast, and this, of course, could not be applied to Germany. But England did not ratify the declaration of London and the earlier rules are by no means as clear cut.

The country will support the President in his general stand. Since this country is neutral its citizens are entitled to the full rights of neutral traders. We are confident that Sir Edward Grey will see the situation in the same light.—Herald Dispatch.

FORESTRY AND FULTON

Throughout the country, one by one modern schools are adding to their curriculum the course of agriculture combined with elementary forestry. Back of the whole plan the idea is not so much to turn out armies of farmers and foresters as it is to work out our great economic questions which confront us through the farm and forests.

In a recent lecture Prof. Frank Moon of the Syracuse College of Forestry stated the teachers of the state can aid greatly in spreading the gospel of better forests throughout the country.

"The big problem before us is to create sympathy and interest in forests," said Prof. Moon, "and, if we are to educate the next generation, we must educate the children in the schools today."

In regard to an added course of such study in the school curriculum the Professor did not deem it necessary. Nature studies from the forestry point of view he suggested as the solution. He stated further:

"There is the question of Arbor day. Instead of planting one tree or a dozen trees, let's get our children to plant a thousand. Or if not a thousand, let us plant five hundred. The work could be done by school children in half a day, and the result would not only be shown in a growth of more trees, but in the pupils themselves.

"There would be a psychological result of such work. A boy who has worked strenuously all day planting trees is going to be more careful of trees and forests later. He is going to remember the work, and he won't set fires or destroy timber thoughtlessly."

Our city has as great a need for this healthy sentiment as any other locality. Arbor day is not too far away to plan. Young trees can be obtained gratis from the state department, and a trained man from the College of Forestry would supervise the work without remuneration. For the effort expended barren, ugly spots along our river banks and in other places could be beautified, the boys would receive a lasting impression, and the whole community benefited.

Then why not a bit of forestry for Fulton?

THE TURNING OF NEW LEAVES

Good resolutions have almost gone out of fashion. On the last night of the year we no longer sit down to review our past lives and resolve to be "better and wiser" than we have been in the past. "It is of no use making resolutions, I never can keep them," is the plea that is usually proffered. This is a mistake, however. It is commendable to resolve (an alarm clock helping one) to get up half an hour earlier than usual in the morning, even though it results—as, alas! it too often does—in one getting up half an hour later. It is what one aspires to be that counts.

If people could live more in the present it would help them enormously in the keeping of good resolutions. So many people persist in being just a little ahead of the time.

"Tomorrow," they say, "we will reform," but the tomorrow of their imaginings never dawns.

Ancient and modern philosophers have agreed as to the dangers of procrastination. Such widely diverse people as Horace, the Latin poet who flourished in 65 B. C., and pushful persons who flourish (exceedingly) at the present day, join issue in this particular.

"Who begins, possesses half the deed," says Horace.

"Dare to be wise; make a commencement."

"Do it now," is the curt command of the modern apostle of "Hustle." Again, Horace says, "If you are ignorant how to live aright, give place to those who have learned the lesson."

"Get on or get out," says a mannikin, following in more concentrated, if less courteous language the same line of thought on a somewhat lower plane. The one was concerned with the things of the soul and the spirit: the other with worldly advancement. There are some who contend that the two cannot go together, but if (as has been contended by many men of wisdom) what a man is of more importance than what he has, it is well to make spiritual advancement as the years go by. If we have not made progress, we have gone back. The soul never stands still. Time has no terrors for those who have learned wisdom.

Pass thou, wild heart,
Wild heart of youth that still
Hath half a mind to stay.
I grow too old a comrade;
Let us part
Pass thou away.

Some people drag the follies and immaturities of youth into old age. There is wisdom in adjusting oneself to time, to profit by past experiences, and to acquire that sense of proportion which refused to magnify trifles into tragedies, and to worry over the inevitable.—Contribution.

GLYNN ACTS; NO CHARGES

Has Dismissed Accusations Against the Commission; No Proof of Errors

Governor Glynn has dismissed the charges preferred by the civil service reform association against the state civil service commission.

In dismissing these charges Governor Glynn says:

"I have carefully weighed and considered the charges against the state civil service commission. I have examined the papers in the case with much care and my conclusion is that no proof of misconduct has been put forward which would warrant summary action on my part.

"On March 20, 1914, I received a copy of a letter from the civil service reform association to the State civil service commission preferring a complaint against the members of the state civil service commission and criticising the administration of the civil service law.

"In April I forwarded the correspondence in my hands of the state civil service commission with a request to report thereon.

On June 16, 1914, the commission filed an answer to the allegations contained in the letter of the civil service reform association.

"This answer was complete and specific taking up in detail the charges preferred by the reform association. From a consideration of all the papers in the case and from what information I have been able to gather from other sources I have concluded to dismiss the charges against the commission.

"In view of the extensive and important duties confided to this commission it would be impossible for them to entirely avoid criticism and resentment. So far as I can discover they have administered their office conscientiously and well on the whole and it would be unjust to permit the members of the commission to rest under charges either trifling or unproved.

"I have therefore ordered that the complaint of the civil service reform association as contained in its letter of March 20, 1914, be dismissed."

YESTERDAY IN THE BANKRUPTCY COURT

Oswego, Dec. 30.—Referee in Bankruptcy A. S. Wright this morning fixed January 16, as the date on which he will hear arguments in an application made by Henry Rubino, attorney for the John Kam Malting Co., for a certificate of criminal contempt of court against Henry T. Neidlinger. No specific charges of contempt are made but it is understood that the application is based on answers Mr. Neidlinger made to questions asked him by counsel during his examination before Referee Wright last spring. One application for a certificate of civil contempt was denied by the referee several months ago.

Referee in Bankruptcy Avery S. Wright this morning granted an order directing John S. Parsons, as trustee for Henry T. Neidlinger, bankrupt, to sign over, and permit Mr. Neidlinger to execute a quit claim deed in favor of R. A. Downey, John W. Downey and Grace B. Downey, constituting the firm of R. Downey & Co., to the undivided one-fifth of the premises known as 423 East 50th st., New York city. The order is granted and the deed will be given for the purpose of perfecting the title of R. Downey & Co., to one-fifth of the estate of Mr. Neidlinger's father; Downey & Co. pursuant to an order granted some time ago in U. S. Court, having released all of their rights in the bankrupt's estate in court and become owners of Mr. Neidlinger's interest in his father's estate, of which the real estate mentioned is a part.

Mr. Neidlinger's mother died some weeks ago, she having held the estate of her husband in trust for the five children. Mr. Neidlinger assigned his interest in the estate to R. Downey & Co., in return for a loan of $100,000, several months before his financial affairs became complicated enough to bring about bankruptcy proceedings. The affairs of the estate are now being settled up and the payment of the one-fifth interest in the property of the elder Neidlinger will be made to Downey & Co., within a few days. George N. Burt appeared before the referee this morning as attorney for Downey & Co.

SCIENCE COURSE ARRANGED FOR PEOPLE OF SYRACUSE

Planned After Example Set by Cooper Institute of New York

Syracuse, Dec. 31.—The establishment of a course of demonstrations in popular science, offered free of charge to the Syracuse public by Syracuse university and the Technology club, was announced yesterday.

The first of the series of demonstrations, which are to take place at Fobes Hall Thursday evenings, is scheduled for January 14th. Men connected with the university and the club, who are promoters of this new educational enterprise, explained yesterday that the project has been under consideration for a long time, and that the hope of all interested is to make it a permanent institution.

That Syracuse shall have a public meeting place for free education in the arts and sciences, on the lines of the Cooper Institute in New York city, is the idea back of the undertaking. For this winter six demonstrations by men, each of whom is an expert in his particular department of activity, have been arranged. The demonstrators, or lecturers, give their services without charge.

Chancellor James R. Dey of the university is heartily in accord with this plan for giving the public an opportunity to obtain scientific information. It is part of the movement to foster a greater degree of cooperation between the city and the university, incidentally giving to the people downtown the advantages afforded by the institution on the Hill as far as practicable. The Chancellor encourages efforts in that direction.

As far as the Technology club's interest in the demonstrations in popular science is concerned, public-spiritedness is the only factor, Prof. Albert R. Acheson, the secretary, said yesterday. The course has no relation to the lectures given at intervals before members of the club.

In connection with yesterday's announcement of the adoption of the Peter Cooper Institute plan, in modified form, for this city, the following statement was made:

"This series of demonstrations in popular science is offered for the man in the shop and the factory and the boy in the grade and high school, who has not had many opportunities for getting acquainted with popular science. It is felt that these demonstrations will help these men to understand science by seeing how gas and electricity are produced and applied, how wood decays and how bacteria work for health and disease."

1914 LEADS OTHER YEARS

In Farm Produce; 1913 Was Second; Apple Crop the Heaviest Ever Known

Washington, Dec. 31.—With the total value of $9,872,936,000, the worth of all crops, farm animal products and farm animals sold and slaughtered in 1914 by far surpassed any previous year according to the Farmers' Bulletin issued today by the Department of Agriculture. The previous high year was 1913, which was $83,000,000 less than this year. The total values of all farm products in 1914 was more than twice the value of the output of the farms 15 years ago.

The estimated value of all crops at the farm this year was $6,044,480,000, which is $88,279,000 less than in 1913, chiefly on account of the reduced value of cotton. Except for 1913, the total value this year is $200,000,000 more than the highest total heretofore reported.

The apple crop is also the largest ever produced in the United States, the bulletin says, the output this year being estimated at 259,000,000 bushels as compared with 145,000,000 bushels in 1913.

Considerably higher sugar yields per ton of cane in Louisiana than an any recent year, also are indicated in the reports to the department, but it is pointed this is largely offset by a decline in the average yield per acre of cane. A preliminary estimate for this year indicates an average yield of about 15 tons of cane per acre against 17 tons in 1913.

The level of prices paid producers for the principal crops decreased about 3.6 per cent. during November. This compares with an average decrease for the past six years of 2.5 per cent.

On December 1, the index figure of crop prices was about 7.9 per cent. lower than a year ago, but 0.9 per cent higher than the six years average.

FIRE AND POLICE DEMAND DUTY

Policemen or Firemen Will Not Be Compensated For Lost Time Other Than Vacation

Hereafter if any member of the police or fire department is absent without consent of the commissioners they will not receive compensation for the time that they are off duty, according to a resolution unanimously adopted by the Board of Fire and Police at a meeting held this morning.

This action was brought about following the reading of the monthly report of Chief of Police Dyer which showed that several members of the force were absent from duty during the month. "The men will have to secure the consent of the board or show a physician's certificate," said President W. H. White.

Chief Dyer's report showed that there had been 59 arrests made during the month, thirty of which were for public intoxication, ten for assault in 3d degree, two for petit larceny, three for burglary, 3d degree, one defrauding hotel keeper, and three for disorderly conduct and one for carrying concealed weapons. Fifty were convicted, 8 not disposed of and one held for the Grand Jury. Fnes imposed, 99; collected, $65; uncollected, $34.

UNCLE TOM'S CABIN

At last the manager of the Quirk has secured for his patrons the much talked of Harmount's Big Scenic Production of that Old Southern drama, "Uncle Tom's Cabin." This company is considered the largest and best company of its kind on the road today, carrying their own concert band; pack of Siberian blood hounds, among which are the famous dogs, Prince and Keno. All their own special scenery from the rise of the curtain until the close of the performance, presenting life-like scenes of Phineas Fletcher's tavern; the ice gorged Ohio river by moonlight; Eliza's escape, pursued by fierce man-eating Siberian blood hounds. Mr. St. Clair's southern home, showing the tropical gardens with the oranges and magnolias in full bloom. The arrival of Miss Ophelia, from Vermont, the woman who tries to enlighten the child that never was born, Topsy. The great levy scene, showing the bales of cotton; the New Orleans wharf; the sale of St. Clair's negroes, among which is the faithful old slave, Uncle Tom. Simon Legree's plantation on Red river; the whipping and death of Uncle Tom. The grand transformation scene; little Eva in the realms of heaven. Watch for parade Monday at 11:30 a. m.

Allies Claim Gains Near Nieuport

Paris, Dec. 31.—Gains of the Allies in Flanders are officially announced in a statement issued by the war office this afternoon. The official statement follows:

"In Belgium we have gained a little ground in the region of Nieuport to the north of Lombartzyze. The enemy has violently bombarded St. George's which we are placing in a state of defense.

"We have captured a point of German support southeast of Vounedeke on the road from Deveiadre. In the Argonne we have made slight progress. In the region of Four de Paris, between the Argon and Moselle river, there is an artillery engagement along the whole front and particularly on the heights of the Meuse.

OFFERS STOCK TO EMPLOYES

Telephone Company Arranges Sale at $110 Share

Syracuse, Dec. 31.—Notice was received here Wednesday that the American Telephone and Telegraph Company has made arrangements by which employes of the Bell Telephone system who have been two years or more in the service, may purchase stock of the company at $110 a share on easy terms of payment. The terms will be $2 per share a month, beginning with March, 1915, and the quarterly dividends paid on the stock will go toward paying for it after deducting interest at 4 per cent per annum on the unpaid balances.

The company has paid 8 per cent dividends for seven years.

ONE THOUSAND GUNS IN BIG ARTILLERY DUEL

Paris, Dec. 31.—Counter attacks delivered by the Germans in an attempt to capture the position on the Becelaere-Passchendaele road, in West Flanders, which was taken by the allies on Tuesday, have been repulsed. The Germans attacked at night but were driven off by the French and British, who had erected fresh earthworks along the highway.

The point of German support captured by the allies was a patch of woodland, a half-mile east of Zonnebeke, which had been used by the Germans to screen some of their artillery. It lies north of the roadway and about five and a half miles east of Ypres.

The German bombardment of St. Georges continues.

A gigantic artillery duel is in progress along a thirty-two-mile line stretching from a point east of Arras to Rosieres-En-Santerre east of Amiens. About 1,000 guns are in action there.

The Germans are again bombarding Rheims.

In the Argonne the hottest fighting is centering around the Four de Paris, the forest of Grurie (the burned forest), St. Hubert and Apremont. All these places lie between the Aisne and the Aire rivers at the extreme northern part of the Argonne forest, approximately 20 to 24 miles west of Verdun. The Germans are trying to cut their way southward by means of bayonet attacks and sapping operations, until they can reach the lines of communication touching Verdun on the west.

The French forces attacking the Germans west of Muelhassen have made progress at Upper Aspach, in Upper Alsace.

Colder weather has followed the storms which swept over the greater part of the battle front for three days. The abatement of the storms has been followed by a recrudescence of aerial activity on both sides.

It is reported from Calais that part of the city of Dunkirk was burned by fires started by the bombs of German airmen who raided the city, killing about fifteen persons.

German prisoners, especially those from the northern front, are in pitiful condition. Their clothes are rags and their bodies are covered with vermin. Many of them are suffering from frozen hands or feet. Many of them collapse when they get away from the firing line.

The battle has now been in progress 110 days and to-morrow the operations will stretch over into the New Year.

FINAL MEETING OF CREDITORS

Jones Creditors Were Allowed a 5 Per Cent Dividend by Referee Wright at Oswego

Before Referee in Bankruptcy Avery S. Wright, at Oswego yesterday the final meeting of the creditors of the Nellie A. Jones estate was held. A 7½ per cent dividend was declared and allowances made to attorneys, appraisers, referee and trustee and for disbursements.

Proven claims against the estate amounted to $12,800.

The Jones' interest in the Gaylord homestead, valued at between 110,000 and $12,000 was bid in for $1 by Attorney C. E. Guile, representing the First National Bank of Fulton, a creditor to the extent of $8,00 for $1.

Celia Gaylord has started a foreclosure action for land contract. Mrs. Jones, the bankrupt, formerly conducted a women's and men's clothing store here, filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy June 18th, 1914.

C. E. Guile was attorney for the trustee, John F. Cullen for the bankrupt, H. L. Gilman for certain creditors and A. T. Jennings acted as trustee.

MASONS WILL BUILD HOME

Mount Sinai lodge, 864, F. and A. M. of Syracuse, has voted to build a home costing approximately $15,000 to house all Masonic bodies of the city.

Definite decision on the most recent proposition for the erection of a Masonic temple in Syracuse has been hanging fire for a number of months. Two of the four blue lodges of the order in Syracuse—Salt Springs No. 520, and Central City, No. 305, had previously indorsed the project, the latter at a meeting held Tuesday evening.

Involved in the question voted on by members of the affected blue lodges was the election of a trustee from each to act in conjunction in the formation of a corporation under the provisions of the Benevolent Orders law for the erection of a new building.

Although it is certain that the Masonic Temple will materialize, its location has not been determined. Options have been acquired on seven different pieces of property in down town sections of the city.

WHAT'S WHAT FOR THE BABY

You May Look for What Is Given You During Year Just Ushered In

New York, Dec. 31.—The advent of the new year causes pretty nearly everybody to hope for the best—to look forward to a luckier return in the wheel of Fate. Quite a flock of persons and organizations who are doing that just now can do so with a lot of confidence.

Let's take the Cleveland Naps, for instance. They are hopeful that they won't finish any worse in 1915 than they did in 1914. They won't hope in vain. The Naps finished eighth in 1914. There will be but eight clubs in the 1915 American league race, so, you see, the Naps can't finish any lower than eighth.

Yale is instance number two. Yale is confident that Harvard can't give her a worse football beating than it did in 1914. Most of the 70,000 folks who saw Harvard do it in 1915 are equally confident about that. The Harvard follows rushed up and down that field until they had reached the limit of human endurance. The limit was 36 points. Therefore, Harvard can't go beyond the human limit in 1915, and so there is every reason for Yale to be confident.

The American polo team is confident that it won't get a beating in 1915. The reason is that there won't be any international match. The same thing goes concerning our Davis Cup team. The team, as many will remember, was beaten by a pair of Australian fellows lawst summah. If the Australian fellows got a chance in 1915 they might repeat. But they won't get a chance. They are too busy shooting projectiles to think of toying with tennis balls.

Willie Ritchie is confident that he won't lose his title as champion light weight of the world. Willie hasn't got ing at the fe n shipments to a certain extent, but right here in America they are putting out some mighty tasty brands of champagne. Hooray for home industry.

Jack Johnson is happy. The new year brings him a chance to earn some easy money by exercising for a few rounds before landing a knock-out punch upon the jaw of one Jess Willard. Money and exercise—those are the things that the dark complexioned battler needs. And 1915 brings them to him.

A large flock of fellows who used to cavort on Organized baseball diamonds are happy. They jumped to the Feds and 1915 brings them a series of bigger pay envelopes than any season in the past.

John McGraw expects to have a happy new year. At the commencement of 1914 A. D. it was supposed that John was happy. His fourth straight pennants prospects were bright. But John knew all about the jinx concerning four pennants in a row. That made John unhappy in secret. Now John hasn't any fourth straight jinx to buck against— and John is hopeful concerning the October, 1915, outcome.

1915 begins well—very well—for a lot of folks because it gives assurance that things can't be any worse than they were in 1914. And so it looks like a Happy New Year all around.

Clean Barber Shops Demanded.

Albany, Dec. 30.—The State Health Department has put the ban on the public towel and, after March 1, it will be a misdemeanor to have one in a store, office, railroad train or any other public place handy for use. The public drinking cup must also go and spitting in public places is to be punishable by a heavy fine. Barbers must immerse brushes in an antiseptic solution after each customer's hair is parted. They must also sterilize their mugs and razors, and chiropodists and manicurists must be prepared to give their customers treatment without any danger of infection.

DIED AT 90

Syracuse, Dec. 31.—Mrs. Fanny Weller, widow of John Weller and for 60 years a resident of the vicinity of North Syracuse, died Wednesday morning at the home of her son, George A. Weller.

AUSTRIAN FORTS FALL BEFORE CZAR'S TROOPS

Germans Pressing Forward to Relieve Their Allies in Carpathian Mountains; Austrians Bottled Up

Special to The Evening Times

Petrograd, Jan. 2.—The capture of the Austrian fortifications around the Galician village of Mshonka and Mshonka itself, together with 3,000 men, sixty-eight officers and ten guns was officially announced here to-day. The official statement follows:

"South of the Pilica fighting is proceeding in the vicinity of Lopushno, Michalagera, Wolsie and Polikhno, which command roadways leading toward Kielce in Galicia. Russian attacks are being delivered near Remy, in the region of Goslice and in the districts around Mshonka and Ropczyce. In spite of stubborn resistance we have stormed and captured the fortifications and the village of Mshonka, taking 3,000 men, sixty-eight officers and ten guns. The battle continues with the Austrians delivering furious counter attacks, supported by attacks from armored trains. So far they have been repulsed with the bayonet and hand grenades. In the Bukowina region the Russians have occupied Storonice and Radauck, capturing many prisoners."

According to the dispatches from Warsaw General Von Mac-Kenzen, commander of the Ninth German army which has been in the thick of the fighting during the past six weeks around Lodz and Lowicz, is pressing toward the southeast in an effort to relieve the pressure which the Russians are exerting against the Austrians in the Carpathians and northern Galicia.

This indicates that Field Marshal Von Hindenburg's next campaign will be directed to save the Austrian troops and to prevent the reinvestment of Cracow.

It is reported that the Russians are invading Hungary from four different points, showing that the situation in the eastern part of Austro-Hungary is more serious than it has been at any previous time.

Heavy troop movements are under way on the border of East Prussia and Poland. It is reported that six German army corps are being withdrawn from the front to repel a possible Russian attempt to cut the German line of communications between Lowicz and Thorn.

It is believed that the Germans have lost at least 220,000 men since their present operations were begun.

The following statement was given out by the war office relative to operations in the southern sphere:

"Severe fighting is still in progress around Sarikamsch in Transcaucasia. The Turks attempted to develop a fresh offensive movement in the direction of Olty (in Transcaucasia) but has been repulsed."

The weather in Transcaucasia is very cold and in some places the snow is from four to seven feet deep.

but the fact that it is being waged almostly entirely in alien country prevents them from realizing that they are fighting for what must eventually prove a losing cause. They believe firmly that Russia has suffered a decisive defeat. In fact, it is reported, on Dec. 18th, the Germans had all the bells in Ghent tolling to celebrate the capture of 500,000 Russian prisoners."

The account has this to say about the weapons in use on the firing line:

"One pattern of the factory made grenade in use among the Germans consists of an iron globe, about four inches in diameter and weighing one and a half pounds. The surface is cored with deep grooves which cause the metal to fly in fragments when they explode. They are loaded with powder and explode with a slow burning compound fired by a friction tube before the bomb is thrown.

"Some of the bombs are attached to a stick like the handle of a lady's hand mirror and are swung before being thrown in order to give them momentum. The fuse is lighted before the grenade is thrown. The trench mortar bombs are made of thin metal and are constructed in the form of cylinders weighing from four to eighteen pounds each. They are loaded with a high explosive and charged with strap iron."

GERMAN SUBMARINES SUNK FORMIDABLE

Special to The Evening Times

London, Jan. 2.—That the British battleship, Formidable, which was sunk in the English channel off Devonshire yesterday, was destroyed by one or more German submarines was established to-day. According to information secured from survivors, the battleship was attacked on the fishing banks off Dartsmouth and was torpedoed both fore and after, sinking within less than five minutes.

Although the admiralty announced that at least seventy-one of the crew of 750 were saved by another light cruiser, it is believed that more survivors were picked up by fishing boats that were in the neighborhood and that the loss of life will be between 625 and 675. Some survivors were taken to Torbay, others to Dartsmouth.

The loss of the Formidable, the twentieth big ship to be lost by England since the war broke out, caused gloom throughout the United Kingdom and has emphasized the fact that the admiralty must exercise more caution than ever before in moving warships through English waters.

The point where the battleship was sunk is about 300 miles from Zeebrugge in Belgium, from which point the German submarines have been operating.

The destruction of the sixteen year old warship is another success for the German submarine in its "shooting down" process. Naval experts, writing in [redacted] papers, declare that the policy being [redacted] by England [redacted] inevitable so long as England elects to hold [redacted] seas.

Opinions

Taking it Back.

There is a little town in Kentucky that has set a good example for the whole country. At the suggestion of a citizen who knows human nature, the town recently celebrated a "Take-it-back Day," when everyone was supposed to return whatever articles he had borrowed.

The plan proved to be wonderfully stimulating to sluggish memories. Everyone entered so heartily into the spirit of the occasion that an amazing amount of property found its way back to its rightful owners. Neighbors who had kept borrowed articles so long that they had been ashamed to return them found sudden courage in the avowed purpose of the day, and so people recovered valued articles that they had supposed were lost forever. It was a day of fellowship and good will, for which everyone felt the better—more content with himself and better pleased with his neighbors.

Every neighborhood needs a take-it-back day. The occasion requires no ceremonial, for simplicity is the best assurance of success. An occasional observance would lead to that happy condition where no further observance would be necessary.

And when neighbors return borrowed articles, they might also take back any unkind words that they may have said. Taking back unkind words does not undo all the harm, but it helps, and makes it easier to refrain from bitter speech in the future. The trouble is that there is not always a chance to take them back. They usually come back—a good deal quicker than the lawn mower or the ironing board that you let your neighbor have.—Youth's Companion.

IS IT A STEP FORWARD?

Concerning certain expressions in this column printed in Wednesday's issue, The Times and those persons who believe that billboards are relics of a period of "inocuous desuetude," are accused of fooling themselves.

Replying to the accusation of a person indirectly interested in the billboard business, if advertising, which is and should be, legitimate publicity is not making good, remember, a flaring poster stuck upon an eyesore and a blot upon the landscape, will not make up for the inefficient manner in which many men conduct their advertising campaigns.

That authorities disagree upon the merits of different forms of advertising, is known to everybody, but withal, we are bound to accept and respect the ideas advanced by certain experts, one of whom, a spender of thousands of dollars annually in advertising, says: "The one great medium of advertising is the newspaper. All other mediums are supplementary to this one."

One of the country's largest hardware firms tells of advertising on billboards, clocks to be sold for 85 cents; result, 75 clocks were sold in 30 days. The company inserted the same "copy" in a Buffalo evening paper; result, 200 clocks were sold in one day.

But the Times is not actuated in a commercial sense in its denunciation of the billboard nuisance, for a nuisance each and every one surely is. We have one motive only, and that is, that billboards standing anywhere, in city, town, hamlet, hill or valley, are blots upon civilization, and then some more.

Ever since there came an awakening and a stimulation of the public pulse to matters of civic and local pride, to improvement in the conditions that surround us in town or on the farm, progressive persons and communities in America have been hanging higher than Hamaan the laws permitting construction of the nuisances. "Billboards have got to go," has become the slogan in hundreds of progressive communities.

If billboards have got to go in progressive communities, then why in the name of common sense are they tolerated in "the biggest little city in New York"?

Once upon a time Rochester st., was not good to look upon, no matter from what point the street was viewed, but the present progressive city administration has been the means to the end, and today one may stand with back against the new emblem of bygone advertising ideas, and, looking toward the rising sun behold one of this town's prettiest thoroughfares. Reversing one's position to look toward the setting sun beyond Oswego river's high banks, so often softened by the twilight's haze, and then along the top of the ridge where the shadowy trees outline themselves against glorious evening sky, making pictures that no billboard artist on earth can paint, one is brought face to face with what——

Fulton's latest acquisition as landscape breaker.

Must that billboard remain where it should not stand? Is the administration, noted for its progressiveness, to remain accused of fastening upon a leading street a thing of ugly appearance and dimensions?

An Ode to Genuine Gas Coke

The reasons why I think that coke is so fine
I will try to explain in this poor little rhyme.
In the first place it's clean, friends, no clinkers or dirt
To collect on your furniture, carpets and work.
You can lay out your silver in all of its splendor,
For in coke there's no gas—it won't tarnish, remember.
It's lightness to handle makes stoking a pleasure;
The users of coke have indeed found a treasure.
No pesky old clinkers, no stones and no slate
To collect in your furnace and clog up your grate;
No ashes to sift and to grind and to pick
Until daddy is weary and back-sore and sick.
For in coke there's no waste, this, kind friends, bear in mind,
And tell, if you can, where the like you will find.
It's price is below other fuels you buy,
And a ton in the bin seems to mount to the sky.
And as for it's heat! why, dear men-folk and ladies,
It is truly the hottest thing this side of Hades!
It is really a boon to humanity given
And to tell it in rhyme I have earnestly striven.

HUNTER AFFAIRS

Further Objections to Sale of Battle Island Co. Made.

Further objections to the sale of the plant of the Battle Island Paper Co. in the form of affidavits from Attorneys Davies, Stone and Auerbach, of New York, and William Nottingham, of Syracuse, have been filed with Judge Ray at Norwich.

The opposition of the sulphite plant, free of the mortgage of $500,000 held by the Knickerbocker Trust Co., of New York, is in the interests of the bondholders represented by M. Nottingham and the Trust Co. represented by the New York firm.

Trustee Bonney, Costello & Bonney are anxious to dispose of the plant at the earliest possible date. They declare that the extraordinary demand for sulphite at this time, during the war in Europe, would make it certain that the mill could be sold at a better price now than later.

The foreclosure of the mortgage, they contend, would be an expensive proceedure, whereas the funds from the sale might be applied on the mortgage and should be of as much benefit to the bondholders and mort

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS.

"To abolish polygamy is a pretty big order for a handful of women," said Mary Shaw, who is acting in a much discussed play dealing with that baleful subject, "That is actually funny, a few thousand average everyday gentile women abolish a church and an organization which is said to be as strong as Tammany hall were its head a Rockefeller."

Miss Shaw is an ardent suffragist and insists that her play, "Polygamy," is a strong suffrage argument.

According to the secretary of the Oregon Child Labor Commission, Mrs. Millie K. Trumbull, the woman's vote was an "anxiety" to politicians in that state in the recent campaign. More than that, it was a calamity to a sheriff, who had refused to modify his treatment of women prisoners along modern lines, for the woman vote defeated him.

Women voters practically hold the balance of power in Oregon; the minimum wage law was recognized as a woman bill; the legislative committee of the state federation of women's clubs did not attend a single session of the last Legislature in marked contrast to the need of similar committees in states where women cannot vote; an Oregon solon vouched for the fact that to disregard the women's wishes meant the political graveyard; all this and much more Mrs. Trumbull wrote to Alice Stone Blackwell who, as editor of the Woman's Journal, spread the glad tidings throughout the suffrage world so that there might be an answer ready when troublesome friends asked, "What do you want to vote for anyway?"

Abraham Lincoln did not say that the negro question was local and not to bother him about it. And we think that Mr. Wilson ought not to say that the woman suffrage question is local and, "Don't bother me about it."

Mr. Bryan has jumped over the suffrage fence enthusiastically landing on all fours. We wish Mr. Bryan would give Mr. Wilson a few lessons in practical politics, if in nothing better. Before long even practical politics will lead to woman suffrage by the straight road of selfishness, and then we shall see Mr. Wilson following Mr. Bryan over the fence.—New York Journal.

In Chicago again the women voters have been able to hold Ella Flagg Young in the office of school superintendent in which her services have been invaluable. This time it was by means of the secret ballot that her enemies planned her defeat. Petitions from the women's organization to Mayor Harrison secured the open ballot and Mrs. Young's re-election.

"I'm going where the women don't vote, and I'm going to make New Orleans the greatest sporting center in the world," said Uncle Tom McCarey, a famous trainer of prize fighters, in a farewell interview as he was about to leave Los Angeles because the recent law against prize fighting had ruined his business in the state of California.

"I'm not holding any grudge against them though," he added, because grudges aren't allowed in my game. Only—well, I can't just say what I'd do if they should ask me to vote on the woman suffrage in New Orleans."

Modern Philosophy

By Mrs. Isadore E. Hyde.

We sturdy sage philosophers,
Think teachings we digest,
We weigh their words, their pros and cons,
And then, we do our best
To concentrate our minds and wills,
"Oh, dear! Let's take a rest.

Some people try to put the blame
Off on the other guy;
The sinews of their arms are lame,
A hoisting on the sly,
The very things they're of
Off on the other guy.

Give me the optimistic clan,
The alchemistic crew;
The fellow who can laugh and play,
When things are looking blue;
The one who has the strength to say:
"Hard luck, I never knew."

The man who will not whine at pain,
His mind can conquer all.
E'en tho', perchance, he lose his stake,
He will not rage and bawl;
The man who whistles when he's broke,
Won't laugh when others fall.

MUSINGS FROM THE OLD ARM CHAIR

(The column is an exclusive feature of the Fulton Evening Times)
Copyrighted 1915.

"Day unto day uttered speech".

In beginning these articles, which it has pleased my fancy to style "musings," I have the modest hope that there will be enough in them to merit at least the same appreciation in the years to come that the hero of an incident I recall once secured.

This particular writer poured forth almost daily a "column" of slangy philosophy—at least he styled it that—on about every topic that one could imagine. And, moreover, he secured commendation from a section of the public because he championed the causes that are ordinarily frowned upon. That expression scarcely describes the practices he tried to uphold, the faults he would have one condone.

Well, after seven years of this, the paper became involved in a slander suit brought by a city official who became offended at some of "Hanks" open charges.

When the suit came to trial, this celebrity "disappeared." Three days afterward the paper on which he had worked heard from him by letter. They threw a fit of hysterics and next morning the city was stared in the face with a "sob" story. Their Hank had sacrificed himself for his employers welfare. If he had appeared at the trial as was expected his testimony would have subjected them to quite heavy damages. (As it was they were imposed to the extent of $1,000.)

This letter, their appeal to him to "come back," to the public to help locate him, their threat to prosecute the "mean" fellow who through insinuation caused him to think he must flee, filled one day's issue. The next carried scores of letters, testifying to the public's confidence in him. Even when it was disclosed that he was living under an assumed name, had served a term in states prison he was welcomed back, after the period of mourning about "'Hank' come back" had expired. That tale ended in a wedding—for he married a young lady who was a resident of that community but 3 short weeks after his return.

Truly speech doeth reach from day to far different days—just as the Bible says of the praise of the Lord.

For one to disregard the repute his or her forebears left as a heritage has always seemed to me as expressing too much self-esteem. Likely enough it is true that one must depend on his own ability and "recourses"—but pray tell hence cometh that ability you may be so proud of secretly. (Musing No. 1.)

So I propose to treat of Fulton's past, as the editor of the "Times" will so ably handle affairs concerning the city's present and future. To the many who have lived and grown up here, whose fathers have lived there perhaps—the city's past history and the achievements of those who have gone before live as a noble heritage close to their hearts. So to come many of these Musings will have a tender interest.".

The scoffer, the indifferent one may be careless of past events to such as I who love my old arm chair they are items to be cherished in one's memory.

What number of Fultonians can, for instance, tell who and when and where the first brick structure was erected? What relics of such a building or pioneer constructor remain. It will be my pleasure to read any contributions those who are in possession of them, care to send me (in care of this paper) or if any care to question any statement because they think they have more accurate knowledge—all right, do so.

Well, if you can answer that so well, you surely can picture a man of short stature traveling back and forth between this village in its early days, horseback with mail bags as his saddle bags. Speak up you who knew this man, and so many of you do and tell offhand who 'twas.—James.

REPUBLICAN EDITORS TO MEET IN ALBANY.

John A. Sleicher, Editor of Leslie's Weekly, President; A. O. Bunnell, Secretary.

The twenty-first annual meeting of the Republican Editorial Association of the State of New York will be held at the Ten Eyck Hotel, Albany, Tuesday, January 14, 1915, commencing at 10 o'clock. The great Republican victory of 1914 in this state and the promise of a still greater victory in the nation in 1916 will give a special interest to this meeting, which will include a reception to Governor-elect Whitman and the other state officers and leaders of the legislature. Chairman Tanner of the Republican State Committee and other leaders of the state ar expected to be present.

Every Republican editor of a weekly and daily paper in the state should make it a point to attend this meeting as it will be one of the most important meetings held in the state in twenty years. The time has come when the Republican editors of the state should become more active, should take a greater interest in the organization with a view of making it a more potent educational factor.

It is because the editors of the country allowed the sensational journals and demagogues to mislead the people that we are now suffering from business depression and commercial paralysis.

Minetto House Burned.

Clements A. Pfeiffer and family were rendered homeless Thursday morning when their residence, south of Minetto, was destroyed by fire. The family was driven out before much of value could be saved and the house and contents are a total loss.

The fire is believed to have started from a defective kitchen chimney. It was discovered between 6 and 7 o'clock this morning, by Alfred Doolittle, a neighbor, who was breaking a road across the fields. Mr. Doolittle aided in carrying Mrs. Pfeiffer and child from the burning house. They were taken care of by hospitable neighbors. There were no means of fighting the fire and nothing could be done toward saving the house.

Motor Drawn Fire Apparatus.

Chief H. C. Bundy of the Watertown Fire Department has devised a plan whereby there will not be a horse drawn piece of fire fighting apparatus in Watertown within five years. The motors do even better work in deep snow than the sleighs, the chief finds, after extended experiments.

FULTONIANS

Birthday Biographies.

Jan. 3, 1915.

Today is the anniversary of the birth of a man who spent his entire life, practically, in this city, living here from 1826 (Jan. 3, 1850) and dying less than six months ago.

Sheldon B. Mead was a record for integrity, whose upright, stalwart figure, was so familiar on our streets has left behind him universal respect, and esteem. The old Fulton Continentals which won such fames as a drill corps when political campaigns had uniformed parades was one of his cherished projects.

The son of Washburn and Adelia A. Mead was educated at Falley Seminary; he took up a mechanical line for ten years. He was one of the many local sons who "read" law in Judge Tyler's office, being admitted to the bar in 1879. He was a partner of N. N. Stranahan (1884 to 1891) and district attorney of Oswego County, as well as surrogate.

POWER COMMISSIONER

Oswego, Jan. 1.—Mayor Hennessey yesterday announced the members of the Municipal Power Commission to take up the matter of developing the power at the new High dam as follows: John D. Higgins, chairman; T. H. King, J. C. Churchill, E. B. Mott, F. B. Shepherd, T. F. Gleason, J. R. Pidgeon, J. T. McCaffrey, R. A. Downey, Clark Morrison, T. P. Kingford, A. B. Ames, F. D. Culkin, W. J. Dowdle, C. N. Bulges John Dougherty C. W. Linsley, James F. Flanigan, Dr. J. E. Mansfield, F. M. Riley, J. B. Alexander, John W. Schaefer, John Fitzgibbons, W. A. Edwards, Ezra Barnes.

Estate Valued at $5,000.

The will of Dewitt Clinton Salladin, who died a week ago, was filed for probate in Surrogate's Court Dec. 31th. Mr. Sullivan makes his brother, Alfred Salladin, his sole beneficiary and executor, bequeathing to him his estate, amounting to $2,000 personal and $3,000 real. The will was made in 1909.

The gross estate of the late S. M. Coon was $13,989.24, and the debts amounted to $1,319.23, leaving a net estate of $12,670.01, all of which went to the widow, Mrs. Mary F. Coit Coon. The tax is $84.63.—Oswego Times.

RIDICULE FOR VOLUNTEERS

Given Fancy Dress; Regulars Get Proper Attention; Bitter Feeling Exists

By BURTON L. FRAZIER

London, Dec. 31.—There is a perfect furore for organizing volunteers corps throughout Great Britain, and the war office is getting broadsides of criticism on account of the way it is treating these well-intentioned efforts. No less than one thousand unrecognized volunteer organizations are drilling.

The war office has just announced that it will grant recognition only to volunteer military organizations which become affiliated with the Central association Volunteer Training corps, of which Lord Desborough is president, and that Lord Desborough's corps is the only one which will now, or any other time receive official recognition.

I expect that most of the volunteer organizations will follow the instructions of the war office, but there is much hard feeling at the present.

It is argued that the home defense army should form part of the military forces of the Crown, so as to be recognized combatants, whereas the rules framed by the war office seem to keep them outside the pale. The enemy, it is feared would call them "francstireur."

For instance, these soldiers must by no means dress so as to look like army regulars.

It is urged that the government has made it so that to form such a force increases the risk of a man's wife or daughter being butchered, or worse.

A lot of fun is being made of the badges which the war office has handed out to volunteers. Here is an amusing letter on the subject, written to a London Daily newspaper by a cynical volunteer:

"Sir,—The 'authorities' have failed to kill the enthusiasm of the new volunteers by direct means, and as the 'foolish million' continue to train and drill (without expense to anybody but themselves) in spite of these 'authorities'—the next step apparently is to kill the voluntary corps by ridicule (if possible).

"The new War Office 'badges' have arrived. They are six inches deep, a bright red, with 'G.R.' in black. They are to be worn upon the arm. They are cleverly contrived to suggest in one effort a shaeblack, a postman, an obesity belt, and a hot-water bottle cover.

Being issued by the 'authorities,' the color naturally runs—the rain on Saturday made a charming effect, and the tailors will be pleased. It will mean thousands of new suits.

"We shall certainly no longer pain the authorities by using the military term 'uniform.' We shall speak of term "uniform." We shall speak of wearing our fancy dress.

"If the Central association accept these badges we shall know what they really think about the movement they are supposed to be fathering.

"One of the Badge-Red."

FRUIT GROWER'S MEETING.

Fine Program Arranged by President Russell Quonce, of Scriba.

A fine program has been arranged for the annual meeting of the Oswego County Fruit Growers to be held at the Courthouse, Oswego, January 5th. The meeting will be called to order by President Russell Quonce and there will be an address in the morning on Co-operation and Cold Storage, by M. W. Cole, of the state bureau of co-operation. The election of officers and in the afternoon there will be an address on some of the more important plant diseases and insects pests, by Dr. Donald Reddick, of the College of Agriculture, Cornell. Dr. Latten and J. S. Beckwith, two of the county's most prominent growers, will be in attendance and will discuss informally the matter of marketing and answer practical questions in relation to the industry.

BEGAN YEAR WITH 5 CENTS

Oswego, Jan. 2.—Commissioner of Works Linsley reported yesterday that he turned back into the contingent fund of the Common Council five cents that he couldn't use this year, while in the permanent improvement fund, which is not turned back, he had remaining $4.84 to start business with in 1915. In the lighting fund there remained $143.72, notwithstanding the fact that the commissioner did all in his power to come out even and recently added a number of acres for street lighting and put new arc lights on the bridge. In the park fund there were twenty-eight cents and in the sidewalk fund $13.57, the smallest amounts in any of these funds ever turned back by a commissioner or Department of Works. There are now 423 arc lights in the city.

MOVIES AT NORMAL

Motion pictures are to be shown at the Oswego Normal and a kinetoscope has been ordered from the Edison Co. as an adjunct to the methods of teaching nature study, history, geography and other studies. The machine was to have reached Oswego before Christmas and would have reached there in time for demonstration during the Christmas holidays, but the machine, all-boxed and ready for shipment, was destroyed in the fire at the company's plant. It is altogether improbable that a machine will be secured now for several weeks.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY DEPARTMENT

A Department Conducted to Meet the Demands of the Alert Home-Makers who Number Among our Readers.

With the butter question, which is a daily one, many capable housekeepers, are including in their grocer's order a package of one of the good brands of oleomargerine far use in cooking. This has been found a better substitute than the cheap grades of butter. The old time prejudice for "oleo" has taken its departure, the economical housekeeper has found its value.

The Ingredients of Oleomargarine.

While the law permits practically the incorporation of almost any fat or oil in oleomargarine provided the resulting product resembles butter, in point of fact the ingredients of the oleomargarine of commerce are very limited in number. They consist essentially of: first, neutral lard, which is a pure, refined lard of high quality, from which practically all the free acid has been removed; second, beef-fat of various kinds; third, vegetable oils, especially cottonseed and palm oil.

The vegetable oils are frequently chilled and pressed to remove the products of a low solidifying temperature, such as the pure oils, and retain the products which crystallize at at a higher temperature, such as the stearins.

Various coloring matters are also used in the manufacture, of oleomargarine. Some oils have themselves a yellow tint, or the yellow of eggs, or annotto, or yellok coal tar dyes are employed. All oleomargarines are either treated with a small quantity of genuine butter, or are churned in milk or cream, or both, to incorporate a sufficient quantity of these products to give the flavor and general character of butter. The ingredients are so chosen that the melting point of oleomargarine is not very many degrees above that of butter itself.

The Wholesomeness of Oleomargarine

Physiologists, as a rule, have found no objection to oleomargarine prepared from the wholesome, fresh fats of animals, or oils or vegetables. Any one who eats the fat of the hog or of the beef, either in the meat or in any of its products, or eats oil on salads, is practically eating the same materials as are found in the greater part of the oleomargarine of commerce. Statements have often been made that oleomargarine is less digestible or less nutritious than butter, but these assertions do not rest upon solid scientific knowledge. The fact that a certain body digests a little more slowly than another is no proof that it is less digestible or less nutritious, as nature has intended that a considerable time shall be consumed in the digestion of food products so as to distribute them to the system over a considerable interval, thus supplying constantly the necessary nourishment and fuel for the conduct of nutrition and the supply of animal heat. On the other hand, wholesomeness and digestibility depend to a certain extent on flavor and aroma, and, judged by this standard, butter is certainly to be preferred to any of its substitutes.

Olive Oil.

Olive oil was at one time regarded as a luxury, but today the followers of domestic science regard it as a necessity. At one time it was used in salad dressings exclusively, but now its use in the culinary department is indeed unlimited. Following are two exclusive dishes directly from Sunny Italy, the home of macaroni and olive oil.

Creamed Macaroni.

Have a good sized saucepan of boiling water well salted, drop in three fourths of a pound of macaroni, an onion stuck with two cloves and a tablespoonful of butter, cook rapidly for 45 minutes, then drain, remove the onion and replace the saucepan with a quarter of a cupful each of Parmesan and Swiss cheese, grated, a dash of pepper and nutmeg and a half pint of well seasoned broth, and four tablespoonfuls of cream. Cook five minutes, and serve before the cheese gets ropy.

Rye Breakfast Cakes.

One cupful of molasses, one cupful of milk, one-half cupful of sour cream, one teaspoonful of soda, one-half teaspoonful of salt. Make the mixture about as stiff as a gingerbread dough, with one part of white flour to three parts of rye meal. Bake it in hot gem pans and serve with butter. Caraway seeds may be added when making the cakes, for afternoon tea.

Smooth Gingersnaps.

Two cupfuls of molasses, one cupful of lard, one cupful of sugar, one-half cupful of sour milk, one tablespoonful of ground ginger, two eggs, three and one-half teaspoonfuls of soda and enough flour to roll thin. Instead of rolling with flour, grease the rolling pin and dough-board well with lard, roll until the dough is thin and bake it in a quick oven. These gingersnaps can be rendered more fancy by the addition of chocolate or vanilla icing, or by sprinkling them with sugar.

Polenta.

Into three pints of fast boiling water put a tablespoonful of olive oil and a pinch of salt, sprinkle in gradually one pint of corn meal, stir and cook until smooth, then allow to cook two hours or longer. Stir occasionally, and cook in a double boiler, then there is no fear of scorching. Have ready some thickened gravy and a half pint of strained thickened tomato. Fill a baking dish with the cooked mush, gravy, and tomato, alternating them with grated cheese, place in the oven and cook until brown.

Delicious Oyster Salad.

Take one quart of very small oysters, one pint of celery, two tablespoonfuls of French salad dressing and one cup of mayonnaise. Parboil the oysters in their own liquor, remove from the fire and allow them to stand in the liquor until cold. Drain and add the French salad dressing. When ready to serve combine the celery and the oysters, add the mayonnaise and garnish with cooked celery.

Chocolate Gingersbread.

Mix well one cupful of molasses, one-half cupful of sour milk, two teaspoonfuls of soft butter, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of soda dissolved in one tablespoonful of water, two cupfuls of flour sifted with one teaspoonful each of ginger and cinnamon, and four tablespoonfuls of grated chocolate. Bake this in a loaf, in a steady oven, until a straw inserted comes out dry. This will be greatly improved by the addition of vanilla or chocolate icing.

Boston Brown Bread.

1 cupful of rye meal.
1 cupful of corn meal.
1 cupful of graham flour.
3-4 cupful of molasses.
2 cupfuls of sour cream or one cup of cour cream and 1 cup of sour milk.
1 teaspoonful of salt.
2 teaspoonfuls of soda.
Steam 3 1-2 hours.

Put the cream, or milk and cream, into the bread mixer (or mix in the usual way), reserving only enough milk to dissolve the soda. Add the salt and molasses and stir a few times. Then add the flour, and the soda, dissolved in a little milk. Stir thoroughly and pour into a tin with a funnel through the middle and steam steadily for three and one-half hours.

THE JANUARY TERM.

Grand Jury Will Investigate the Fatal Granby Wreck.

The first day's calendar for the January term of Supreme Court which opens next Monday at the Court house, Oswego, Justice L. C. Crouch presiding, is as follows: Chas. Peterson vs. F. C. Wolever, libel; Lena B. Hengerer vs. Louis and Joseph Levi, contract; E. J. Guirey vs. Salmon River Power Co., negligence; Patrick Burns vs. James Stewart, Inc. negligence; Henry Kelly vs. James Stewart, Inc., negligence.

The investigation of the D. L. & W. wreck at Granby, October 17, will engage the attention of the Grand Jury. Charles Campbell, a former inmate of the institution for feebleminded at Syracuse, has been charged with the crime. Two other youths have been held as accessories. The charge against Campbell is murder in the first degree.

The D. L. & W. Railroad Co., has not yet paid the $3,000 reward offered for the arrest and conviction of the perpetrators. Fred Carey, who gave the information leading to the arrest of Frank Becker, one of Campbell's associates, has applied for the reward. Friends of Chief of Police Dyer of Fulton, who made the arrests, believe him to be entitled to a share in the reward.

Final Decree Entered.

Oswego, Jan. 1.—Surrogate Miller has entered a final decree in the matter of the estate of the late George H. Goodwin of Mexico. Charles A. Peck, the executor, was discharged and the securities released and the final accounting shows that of the total of the estate amounting to $57,600, $54,000 was paid to legatees and the remainder utilized for expenses, fees, etc. George N. Burt, as attorney for the executor, was granted an allowance of $1,000.

Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Owens entertained 25 members of the W. N. K. club at dinner, at their home in W. 1st st., New Year's eve.

CONTRACTOR GETS SMALL JUDGMENT

Plaintiff Awarded $422.75 on Mechanic's Lien; Counter Claim Allowed.

Oswego, Jan. 1.—County Judge L. C. Rowe has handed down a decision which is practically in favor of the plaintiff in the action of A. Charles Harding, a contractor, vs. A. Howard Barnes, to enforce a mechanic's lien to recover on a contract for building a house for defendant. Mr. Harding claimed that the contract price was $3,300 and that Mr. Barnes paid him but $2,800. He sued for the balance of $500 and interest, amounting to $664.23. The defense was a counter claim of $800 on the ground that Mr. Harding did not fulfill the specifications in the contract, particularly as to an attic floor.

Judge Rowe decided that Mr. Harding is entitled to recover $422.75. He allows a counter claim for $75 but disallows the remainder of said claim and also makes other deductions. He also observes that the specifications and plans were not definite and that many changes were made in the course of construction which cannot be charged to the contractor. Harry M. Stacy was attorney for the plaintiff and Ezra A. Barnes appeared for the defendant with John R. Pidgeon as counsel. The action was tried several months ago.

Judge Rowe has disposed of practically all matters before him and will move tomorrow to his new office in the Grant Block, recently occupied by Stoppani & Hotchkin.

PUT IN REQUISITION.

Pheasant Eggs Can Be Had for Stocking Public Preserves.

Preparations are now being made for the restocking of the State this spring and summer with pheasants by the State Conservation Commission, which expects to distribute several thousand pheasants' eggs and a large number of young birds.

Farmers who wish to get these eggs can obtain them by making application to the Conservation Commission at Albany. Application should be made for eggs before March 1st and if young birds are desired these applications should be made early, as the young birds will be distributed early in June.

The season for rabbits closed today and the duck season in this state will close January 10th.—Palladium.

SUFFOCATED BY COKE GAS

Alfred Arduini Was Found Dead This Morning at the Bottom of a Deep Pit By His Brother

Alfred Arduini, an Italian employed at the American Woolen mill plant, was found dead this morning in the wheel pit by his brother, Phillip, and another amploye, Dennis Woods. The discovery was made about seven o'clock as his brother was anxious to learn why he had failed to report for supper at midnight.

Death was due to suffocation by coke gas. The unfortunate man was employed on construction work and the contractors had just completed the building of the pit and they maintained two small stoves at the bottom to dry the concrete. It is said that Arduini went down into the twenty-foot pit last night about five, o'clock to replenish the fires and that was the last heard of him until his body was discovered.

When found he was lying face downward with his lantern under his body and the light extinguished. Coroner E. J. Cusack who investigated the case, pronounced death due to suffocation. He had probably coaled the fires and was waiting for them to pick up before he checked the drafts and the large amount of gas generated in that small space overcame him.

Arduini, who was 26 years of age, resided with his brother, Phillip, in Union street and has been a resident of Fulton for the past five years.

Besides his brother, Phillip, he is survived by a mother and two other brothers, who reside in Rome, Italy. Coroner Cusack ordered the remains removed to Brown's undertaking parlors. The funeral will be held Monday morning at 9 o'clock from the morgue and at the Church of the Immaculate Conception a half hour later. The Rev. John L. Lindsman will officiate. Burial will be made at St. Mary's cemetery.

MAYOR'S APPOINTMENT

Mayor Frank E. Fox filed the appointments of the new members of the municipal boards with the City Clerk to-day. They take affect immediately.

They are as follows: Hospital board, Dr. H. M. Doane and H. L. Paddock; Board of Health, Dr. S. D. Keller and Frederick Miller; Board of Education, Dr. E. A. Gladman and Joseph Conners. City Clerk Scudder said he did not believe that Mr. Connorers would be retained on the board as he was about to change his residence from the 6th to the 4th ward.

ARRESTED FOR MAYHEM

The case of Peter Saba, the Italian who was arrested charged with mayhem, has been postponed until next Wednesday morning. He was arraigned before Judge Wilson yesterday afternoon.

Saba bit baggageman Daniel Seper of the New York, Ontario & Western depot yesterday afternoon when the latter tried to eject him from the station for loitering. The wound on his arm although not of a serious nature is quite deep.

BURGLARS AGAIN

The Charles Schaffer home in S. 3d st. was broken into last night and as Mr. and Mrs. Schaffer are with friends at Batavia, the articles taken cannot be ascertained.

NILES SUCCEEDS BAKER

Howard P. Baker, president of the county board of elections for the past three years, retired to-day. Mr. Niles failed of reappointment by the Democratic county committee, which was controlled by the Gray-Hartnett-Fitzgibbons' forces, and which named Supervisor Thomas D. Niles of Parish. Mr. Baker has been an able and conscientious official and his friends and all parties regret that the exigencies of politics compels his retirement at this time. Mr. Bakers' home is at Lacona. He has not yet made his future plans.

Commissioner Niles will take office to-morrow. He has a wide acquaintance throughout the county, having served two terms as supervisor from Parish, and he has the best wishes of all in his new office. DeAlton O. Whitney, the Republican member of the board, was reappointed and will continue in office.—Oswego Times.

TROLLEY CO SUED

William Mirsky has instituted an action against the Empire United Railways in behalf of his infant son, Samuel, who was injured Monday evening on the lower bridge, when a load of pulp tipped over on top of him. Attorney Abelson was in this city yesterday in behalf of the trolley company. It is claimed that the street car company is accountable for the defective condition of the street at the point where occurred the accident.

Villa Pledges His Support

Washington, Jan. 2.—Reports reaching Washington from unofficial sources that the convention planned to meet in Mexico City yesterday to choose a new provisional president, had been delayed, were viewed by diplomats to-day as an ominous sign of condtions in the Republic.

Zapata's reported refusal to agree with Villa in the matter of military executions was declared to be a serious stumbling block in the path of peace. It is said the southern leader still insists on the summary killing of all the chief followers to the former dictator Huerta and objects to the proclamation granting general amnesty issued by Provisional President Gutierrez.

General Villa has pledged his support to Gutierrez in this matter and this deadlock is expected to hinder seriously the efforts of the Mexico City factions to get together.

Meanwhile reports to Carranza headquarters assert that his troops are advancing on the capital, and officials look for much bloody fighting before a government strong enough to control the country can be set up.

A QUESTION OF ROADS

A retort that shows something of the attitude of Russian and Austrian officers before hostilities actually broke out, is reported by the Petrograd correspondent of the London Times.

In the course of his last interview with the Russian military authorities before the war, Prince Hohenlohe, the Austrian military attache, expressed surprise that the Russians should be requisitioning so many automobiles the extensive use of which since then may help to explain the rapid alternations of fortune of engagements that have so often proved confusing.

"Your roads are too bad," the Austrian remarked. "Of what use are automobiles?"

"Ah," replied the Russian, "but you must remember that your roads are very good!"

LAST NIGHT'S BOUTS

New York, Jan. 2.—Tom McCarthy, the Montana heavyweight, knocked out Sailor Fritz in the third round.

Waterbury, Ct., Jan. 2.—Gunboat Smith outpointed Battling Levinsky in ten rounds of tame fighting.

Pittsburg, Jan 2.—Patsy Brannigan, Pittsburger, outpointed Johnny Kilbane, featherweight champion, in six rounds.

Albany, Jan. 2.—Knockout Sweney of New York and "Wild Bill" Fleming of Oldtown, Mo., fought a ten-round draw.

Rochester, Jan 2.—Tony Ross outfought Fireman Jim Flynn in ten rounds.

JUDGMENT TAKEN

A judgment by default was entered in city court this morning for $15, in favor of the Fails Lubricating Co. of Buffalo, against Joseph Newton of this city on account of purchase of automobile supplies.

CHIEF WAUGH'S ANNUAL REPORT

The Fulton Fire Laddies Responded to 57 Alarms During the Past Year

Chief of the Fulton Fire Department, Harry L. Waugh, submitted his annual report to the Fire & Police board yesterday at the first annual meeting of the year.

According to the chief's report, 57 alarms of fire were sounded during last year. 33 of which were sent in over the fire alarm system, while the remaining 24 were received by telephone.

Although $490,500 insurance was carried on the property damaged, only $15,000 was allowed by the insurance companies. It is estimated $895 damage was done to buildings not covered by insurance.

The Preshaw dwelling which was the scene of Thursday's fire was covered by $2,500 insurance, while the furnishings which were damaged were not insured.

The board appointed a successor to Floyd Adel, the department's electrician who was killed at work at few weeks ago. Lewis Keeney, aged 33, formerly emergency man for the Niagara Power & Transmission Co., a man of considerable electrical experience, was appointed.

PRES. MURPHY RETAINED

There was quite a shake up in the municipal plumbing board. President John C. Murphy was the only member retained for the ensuing year. Mayor Fox appointed two new members, Bernard Buell and William Harper to succeed Joseph Mehegan and Henry Anderson.

During last year the board appointed a plumbing inspector, Joseph Donovan, who has made a thorough investigation of the local system and has made many suggestions and improvements for the safeguard of the public.

Are YOU Keeping Up With The "TIMES"?

DAILY—ONE CENT

The Evening Times Local Newsgathering Force

A number have wanted to know such things as "Have you anyone on the street" (meaning, of course, reporters). We're glad you are asking these questions and want to answer this particular one now.

Mr. R. L. O'Sullivan of Oswego is city editor and reporter-in-chief. He has served on a number of dailies. So he will get to know many of you. In the meantime, any courtesy you can extend him in getting located will be appreciated.

Already we have a good number of assistants who, as you will notice, are daily gaining in efficiency. In this connection we are gradually arranging for representatives in each lodge or society of whatever character. The churches, too, are to be represented.

In fact, we plan to provide a more and effective arrangement than any large city daily would care to undertake. As soon as we can perfect arrangements we propose to feature the men's societies on Tuesdays, the women's, Thursdays; the churches, Saturdays; the schools, Mondays and Fridays.

Then, too, special features will appear and arrangements made for contributions from reliable sources.

The woman's side of the community life and the home side will be in charge of Bertha S. Braun. Under her direction a department will appear Tuesdays and Fridays on the subject of household economy.

Any order or society that wishes to co-operate with us can assist greatly by sending a representative to see Mr. Draper.

JEWISH WOMEN GIVE RECEPTION

Mrs. David Katz of this City to Assist in Receiving Guests

The Council of Jewish women of Syracuse will give a reception and housewarming to-morrow afternoon and evening at the Marshall Memorial Home in Cedar st.

Each year since the founding of the Settlement Home it has been the custom of the council to have such an event early in the new year of the Gregorian calendar as many persons are home for the holidays and desire to take advantage of the housewarming.

A color scheme of pink and white will be used in decorating. The dining room table will be decorated in harmony with cut flowers, ferns and tall tapers in silver holders.

Mrs. Moritz Mayer, president of the Council of Jewish Women, will welcome the callers and will be assisted by Mrs. Mark Gais, Mrs. Max Thalheimer, Mrs. Adolph Guttman, Mrs. Henry L. Elsner and Mrs. D. Katz of Fulton, all past presidents of the council; Mrs. Benjamin Marshall and Mrs. Benjamin Stolz, members of the governing board of Communal Home, and Miss Rosenberg of the Women's Auxiliary of the Young Men's Hebrew association.

The general arrangements have been under the direction of Mrs. Adolph Guttman, who will assist in extending the hospitality of the council from 3 o'clock in the afternoon until 10 o'clock in the evening.

It was through the efforts of the council that the first settlement home in this city was established a few years ago, although for nearly a decade the band of women has been working to better the conditions of the Jewish boys and girls of the city. So fruitful was the work of the early years that the young Hebrew men of the city followed suit and organized to help the older boys. The Womens Auxiliary was the third organization to be formed. All three of these societies will assist in making the New Year reception a success.

News Oddities

It was early morning on the Sound boat. Willie awoke in the upper berth and looked out the window. "Get up, daddy," he called "Here's New York." "Go back to sleep," growled his drowsy father. "We haven't reached New York yet." "Yes, we have," the boy insisted. "I can see insane asylums."—Exchange.

"You've read 'The Heavenly Twins?'" asked an Englishman of an Irishman. "Yes, I have" "And 'The Sorrows of Satan?'" "Yes." "And have you read 'Looking Backwards?'" "How the divil could I do that?" said Pat.—London Evening Standard.

"I like this quaint little mountain village of yours, waiter. I suppose I can get plenty of oxygen here." "No, sir; we've got local option."—Sacred Heart Review.

When the devil observed that the allies and the Germans all went to heaven together hand in hand, he rushed to St. Peter and inquired angrily: "What do I get out of the war?" "The rulers," replied St. Peter.—Exchange.

"This bell," said a well-meaning sexton, when showing the belfry of an interesting village church to a party of visitors, "is only rung in case of a visit from the lord bishop of the diocese, a fire, a flood or any other such calamities."—Exchange.

Some men at the club were telling dog stories after a day's shooting. After some time, when the tales had got very "tall," one little man, who had been quite silent, said:

"I have a dog that makes all yours seem fools. I generally feed him myself after dinner, but the other day a friend dropped in and the poor animal slipped my mind. After the meal we went into the garden. The dog scratched up a flower and laid it at my feet, with the most yearning look in his eyes—it was a forget-me-not."

Nobody told any more dog stories that evening.—Tit-Bits.

GOVERNOR TALKED WITH SPEAKER SWEET TO-DAY

Albany, Jan. 2.—Refreshed after a good night's sleep, Governor Whitman kept his engagement at 11 a. m. to-day with newspaper men. The interview was short and crispy. The Governor was asked: "Did you see any of the bosses to-day?" "No, I saw them all yesterday." "Have you any engagement with Speaker Sweet?" "Yes, I expect to talk with him to-day."

He intimated there will be no news for a few days.

The Governor had a string of callers to-day and when he entered the chamber it took him several minutes to get through the crowd.

State Comptroller Craddock had a long line of visitors when he reached his office to-day as did Secretary of State Hugo and Attorney-General Woodbury.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH NOTES

Milton George Buck, D. D., Pastor.

Services at the "church of the cordial welcome" are growing in interest and size. The Bible school is having the largest attendance in years. The goal for the present is an average of 300 in attendance with the motto: "Every member of the church in Bible school and every member of the Bible school in church."

One hundred and fifty new chairs have had to be purchased to accommodate the increasing number, and fifty new hymnals came this week for the church services.

The "Help one another" class of the Bible school held a New Year's eve social in the lower chapel Thursday, closing with a prayer service as the old year passed out and the new came in. During the evening pictures of old time friends taken in years gone by together with scenes of Lake George and vicinity, were shown on a screen by Mrs. Wadsworth. Box lunch was served by the women present.

The organ recital given on last Sunday evening by Leon Foster, a Fulton young man and a student at Syracuse university, was enjoyed by all as was also the anthems given by the choir under the direction of Mr. Royal Schaffer of Syracuse, director of the choir. This is only the beginning of the music to be given on Sunday night. Come and enjoy it.

The services for Sunday next are as follows:

Deacons' and choir prayer service, 10 a. m.; Communion and right hand of fellowship given at the regular service, 10:30; Subject of sermon, "The Gift of Christianity to the World;" Bible school, 12 m.; Christian Endeavor, 6 p. m.; the pastor will lead, subject, "Thoughts for the New Year." A short song service will precede the regular meeting.

Evening service, 7 p. m. Evangelistic service with after meeting; subject of sermon, "The New Birth."

Commencing Monday night, the Week of Prayer will be observed; Meetings every night except Saturday, held in the lower chapel. You are cordially invited to come and participate in any or all of these services.

Christian Science

Subject for Sunday is God; Golden Text, Psalms, 145:1; responsive reading, Pslams 81:1-5, 7-16.

Congregational Church

The Intermediate Department of the Sunday school held a sleighride on New Year's day, followed by supper and an interesting program of entertainment. There was a large attendance.

Next Sunday morning the communion service will be held. The annual meeting of the church and society will be held on Tuesday evening, January 5th, at which time the various organizations of the church will make their report for the work of the preceding year. The gathering will open with a banquet to which all members of the church and society are invited.

DARING RESCUE BY PLAYMATES

Nine Year Old Ralph Dolbear Was Saved From the Icy Waters of Oswego River

But for the prompt action of his playmates, Ralph, nine-year-old son of F. G. Dolbear, the West Side grocer, would have lost his life in the Oswego river yesterday morning.

The youngster in company with two other boys, were skiing down the steep hill near the Newell farm, about a half of a mile north of the city. Young Dolbear lost one of his skiis in the river and it was in making the attempt to get it that the ice broke and he plunged into the icy waters. Shouts brought the other boys to his assistance, and he was rescued with great difficulty after going down the second time.

The young heroes were Charles Nettleton and Phillip Davenport who will be rewarded by the father of the rescued youth.

Young Dolbear was rushed to a neighboring house were he was given stimulants and he was then taken to his home. He suffered a severe chill and is quite nervous as the result of the dousing.

BUMP!

Whenever a town girl gets too proud to marry a man with 100 acres of good land and twenty red pigs, just because he wears blue jeans and can't tell the tango from any other vegetable, you can set it down as a fact that she will either die an old maid or marry a $6 per week clerk with a head full of ozone and one change of socks. We would just as soon be hooked up to somebody who wears 49c overalls and knows where to hit the top markets as to be yoked to some pampered son of society who plays the mandolin, smokes Egyptian cigarettes and lives on his father's pension.—Ex.

About Sports Generally

New York, Dec. 31.—And now we wig-wag a farewell to 1914—the twelve months that ever will be known as the most amazing year in the history of sport.

1914 surely was a year of upsets—a year when it seemed that "dope" ever was wrong. It brought about stronger results in the sporting world than any year in the past, and as we move along into 1915 we find that 1914 has established some records that may never be beaten and has whizzed into the various championships some men and some aggregations that didn't seem to have a look-in at the beginning of the year.

Probably the most remarkable upset of the year—or, rather, the most remarkable achievement—was that of the Boston Braves. From a tail-end place in the league they breezed along until they had won the pennant and then won a world's championship in record time.

Harvard's 36 to 0 victory over Yale—the worst beating Yale has ever received—was another remarkable upset. Yale's victory over Harvard on the River Thames was a big surprise for at the outset it didn't seem as if Yale had a chance.

Columbia upset the talent on the Hudson river by winning the June regatta, and Cornell furnished another upset by finishing third. Pennsylvania, in that same event, furnished a third surprise by finishing second. It had been picked for fifth place—and nothing better.

The American polo team went down to defeat at the hands of the English invaders, much to the surprise of the sporting world. England wasn't figured to have a show—but England won, and it won in handy fashion, too.

The American Davis Cup team was beaten by Australia, after some thrilling sets. It can't be said that this defeat of the Americans was so much of an upset because the Americans weren't figured to have a real "edge" over the wonderful Australians.

Probably one of the very biggest surprises of the year was the defeat of Maurice E. McLaughlin by R. Norris Williams in the battle for the tennis championship of the United States. Williams is a great player, but he wasn't figured to have a chance against the brilliant, dashing McLaughlin. Yet, Williams won—and his victory wasn't a fluke.

In the swatting game, the biggest surprise was the defeat of Willie Ritchie by Freddie Welsh and the resultant shift in the title of lightweight champion of the world.

Ritchie's defeat, however, shouldn't have occasioned so much surrprise. Ritchie fought Welsh in England where they count points for the man who ducks and runs away. Welsh was a better runner than Ritchie—and Welsh got the decision.

Kid Williams, the Baltimore bantam, dethroned Johnny Coulon, who held the title for many years. That result was to be expected for Coulon has been slipping for some time.

John McGraw, of this town, is among those who were upset in 1914. John had started on his way for a fourth straight pennant. He was almost there—and then somebody heaved a wrench into his machinery.

Honus Wagner, the old Pittsburg ruin, was upset in his ambition to hit .300 for the 18th successive season. He hit about 40 points under that mark. The same is true concerning Larry Lajoie, of the Naps, who hit around .260 in 1914—the lowest batting record in his long major league career.

Ban Johnson was upset. So was Garry Herrmann. The comical pair laid plans for the burial of the Feds. But they were foiled.

It was a great little year of surprises, was 1914, and the sporting clan hopes that 1915 won't begin where 1914 left off. The sport lovers can stand a certain number of shocks—but they've stood just about as many in 1914 as they will be able to stand for another three or four months, at the least.

WHO WAS BEST MAN?

There is a wide diversity of opinion in New York over whether Young Joe Shugrue of Jefsey City or Charlie White, the western lightweight had the better of their ten-round bout at Madison Square Garden, Monday night. The consensus of the newspapers in Gotham is that Shugrue had the better of the fight, but the margin was slight. Freddie Welsh, the champion, gave the fight to the Jersey City scrapper.

After the bout the spectators themselves were for both lads—the western contingent at the bout claiming that White had won, while the eastern men stated that there was nothing to it but Shugrue.

As to the fight itself neither lad showed any marks of punishment. Shugrue led in the early rounds and forced the westerner to back ground, but the Jersey City lad lacked the punch. In the closing rounds White came back strong and forced the milling, but the advantage that the eastern fighter piled up in the early rounds more than offset the advantage the westerner gained toward the close of the fight.

It will take more than a ten-round bout to decide who is the better fighter. From last night's showing either could be picked to meet the champion in a title bout.

HOT LINERS.

By Frank G. Menke.

Charlie White, Chicago lightweight said: "I hope to beat Freddie Welsh and thereby bring back to America and a native son the lightweight championship of the world."

You won't be able to appreciate Mr. White's remarks until you are "Jerry" to these facts: Mr. White isn't Mr. White at all. He is Charley Anchowitz, a Russian and his birthplace is Liverpool, which is in England.

"The Phillies have been heavy losers in two baseball wars".
They've battered and spattered the Belgians,
They have pounded them all black and blue,
But here is a case right under our face,
For the Phillies are all used up, too.

The Germans are claiming a great victory over Great Britain since the discovery that Lee Magee, new manager of the Brookfeds, isn't Lee Magee at all. He is Leo Huntsmeyer, a grand, little German name.

Why not?
Dear Sir: Why not call it Agonized baseball, instead of organized baseball?

"Ex-President Taft in giving rules for playing golf says that one should never indulge in profanity as it will impair his efficiency at the game."

If your lofter plows a tee,
Do not swear;
If your neighbor bangs your knee
Only stare;
For it does no good to cuss,
Or to rave or to start a fuss,
Yes, it only makes things wuss
If you rear.
If you smash your finest brassie,
Do not swear.
If you foozle with your mashie
Don't you care
Do not do things profane
For your words will be in vain
And you cause a lot of pain
You could spare.

THE SHOES ARE ON FED FEET

They Cause Some Yowling and Gnashing of Magnate's Teeth

By Frank G. Menke.

New York, Jan. 2.—Those organized baseball magnates ought to resolve to quit whining and yowling about "broken faith" whenever one of their ball players jump to the Feds. The players who jump their contracts are doing nothing worse than those same magnates used to do before the Feds came along and gave the players a chance.

The conditions that used to exist before the Feds came along were just the reverse of those of the present-day. Then it was the magnates who busted contracts—and they busted them at will. They had just as much regard for a contract that bound them to treat a player squarely as Germany had for the contract that called for the neutrality of Belgium.

Back in the old days the magnates were the Simon Legree's of real life and the players took the part of Uncle Tom. The magnates held the whip—and they applied it as often and as ruthlessly as they pleased. Every time they gave a player a raw deal and that player whimpered they slammed him a few more slams with the whip and told him if he didn't keep quiet they would shove him right out of baseball.

Things are different now, and how the magnates whine and bellow. The players who jump their contracts and go to the Feds are committing no worse breach of faith than the magnates did for a long flight of years. But it's the magnate who is feeling the business end of the whip. And he doesn't like it—not a bit.

The players who jump their contracts are doing only a natural thing—grasping the opportunity of bettering themselves financially. If they can get $5,000 a year for doing the same work which they are getting only $3,000 now why shouldn't they loop-the-loop? Wouldn't you do it?

Before answering you may murmur something about a contract and about broken faith. You're right—that should be considered under ordinary circumstances and when dealing with fair and faithful employers. But those baseball magnates in organized baseball are not fair. The past has shown that. In the old ays they cut a player adrift whenever past has shown that. In the old days they pleased. He had a contract calling for a certain salary for a certain period—but the magnates snapped their fingers at it.

Baseball history is replete with cases where magnates broke their contracts and thought nothing about it. Miner Brown brought more fame and glory to the Chicago Cubs than any other man who ever wore a uniform. His pitching made the Cubs a pennant winner—and a big money winner. And what was his reward? He was hooked to the Cubs by a contract that called for $5,000 a year. The Cub management decided to get rid of him and they turned him over to the Louisville club, which club contracted him for $1,800 a year—a drop of $3,200.

Brown claims that the contract he had was an agreement whereby the Cubs were to pay him or to guarantee the payment to him of $5,000 salary per year. And when the Cubs decided to get rid of Brown they ignored that contract and put up to him the ultimatum—play with Louisville for $1,800 a year or you don't play at all. That was a year before the Feds came along? When the Feds came they offered Brown a job at a salary around his old Cub wage and he jumped.

The Brown case is but a sample of the way the magnates treated the players before the Feds came along and offered the players a heaven of refuge. The magnates sold, traded, released or blacklisted players, just as they chose. Whether the player had a contract that called for a certain salary didn't make any difference with the magnates. He was lord of all he surveyed—and he certainly lorded things to the limit of his then lordly powers.

Is it any wonder now that players who had to swallow whatever the magnates put before them in the past are forcing the magnates to gulp down a few of their own bitter pills?

TOMMY GETS GOOD RATIONS

He Has the Usual Jam and Other Preserved Things; and Tea, Too

By Herbert Temple.

London, Jan. 1.—A curious complaint about soldiers' food in the field has just been received. An officer writes home to lament the number of pounds he has added to his weight in the trenches, saying he feeds almost too well without sufficient exercise.

Napoleon, who said "an army fights on its stomach," would be astonished at the enormous demands upon the endurance of the men in this war, for he was never able to give his men the strengthening food well regulated armies receive nowadays.

I call attention, for instance, to the Battle of Lule Burgas. The Turks lost because they had been starving for four days. The Bulgarians had their stomachs full. The Turks were willing, but could not fight and on their retreat many died of sheer starvation. The Belgians and in many cases the Germans in Belgium, have been weakened by lack of food although the German system in general is excellent. But the British soldier has gotten his meals with great regularity. Here is a list showing what each British private receives every 24 hours:

One and one-fourth lb. of fresh meat, or 1 lb. preserved meat; 1 1-4 lb. bread; 4 oz. bacon; 3 oz. cheese; 4 oz. jam; 3 oz. sugar; 1-2 lb. of fresh vegetables or 2 oz. dried vegetables; 5-8 oz. of tea, coffee or cocoa; 2 oz. of tobacco or 50 cigarettes per week.

This allowance is the result of careful study on the part of the scientists. They have found that 2000 calories or energy-making units are required to keep a man alive if he is lying in bed without mental or physical exercise. The British soldier receives 5,000 calories so he has 500 to spare.

In former British wars there has been enormous corruption and chaos, and the soldiers have often gone hungry. Luckily, for two years before the war broke out the director of supplies and his staff had been studying every detail of the new method so that when the great call came the whole scheme was complete and perfect both as regards supplies and transport.

The contractor or middleman, the source of much corruption, in the old days, has been removed and the war office deals directly with manufacturers.

Acting in connection with the local government board, tens of thousands, of health officers all over the world inspect the factories and analyze the food to prevent adulteration, impurity or bad quality.

Another clever device is the method of delivery. The manufacturer must send his stores to the railways without knowing their destination. If this were not so he might be able to load inferior goods in ships for the continent, knowing well that the boxes would be opened up too far away for inspection or complaint. Under the new system these supplies must go to the government food depots at Liverpool, or Leads where they come under the eyes of health officers and analysists.

The army had large reserves of food when war broke out but in ten days these had been doubled. A stupendous plan was put into operation and it worked wonderfully. In France and Belgium one sees the army service corps and passes their convoys on the roads. Interminally, the motor trucks hurry from the bases to the fighting lines with Tommy's daily meals, with fresh bread baked on the railways and often even with fresh fruit from the south.

Deer Herd With Cattle.

Pulaski, Jan. 1.—Deer are plentiful in the woods about seven miles northeast of Orwell, is the declaration of Loren Carpenter, a farmer residing in that section. He says they join the herds of cattle, which are occasionally "salted" and the deer do not lose any chance of getting a "lick" at the salt. Mr. Carpenter says that big black bears have not as yet this season been noticed in his section of the county.

War: Pathos and Humor

London, Dec. 31.—From a close first hand study of the situation I do not see how the war can end without the destruction of such a large number of men as to lead to permanent ill effects upon the European race, and evil results on the civilizations of the world. Freedom from a German world-wide military despotism is purchased at a terrible heavy price.

After the failure of the first German rush on Paris in the early part of September, the possibility of a quick end was eliminated. The battle of the Marnes marking the high tide of German invasion, will probably be thought of as the true crisis in this conflict in years to come. But a sudden German collapse on either on the southern or western battle fronts is impossible to conceive. The Prussian military organization in better working order than ever. Moreover aeroplanes have made scouting on both sides so perfect that strategy in the old sense is no longer possible.

With sudden surprises eliminates it becomes a war of exhaustion. Now this is the most terrific form a war can take, as I will try to explain.

Exhaustion might come for some nations in the form of a food famine, but Germany highly organized as she is, can feed herself indefinitely.

What other form can the exhaustion take? It may be exhaustion of wealth, of men, or of war material. In wealth the enemies of Germany are enormously superior. But it must be true that it will be a long while, certainly several years, before Germany's wealth will no longer be sufficient to finance her campaigns.

Probably German money will last as well as German men. And despite the heavy casualties in the first five months of war, the Germans supply of men is not exhausted. There are still large numbers of untrained men in Germany, who have volunteered since the beginning of the war, and besides itt must be remembered that each the youths growing to manhood, several hundred thousands in number make up for a certain amount of wastage of war.

So it is easy to see that if the war ends in German exhaustion of their wealth, or men, or both enormous numbers must be slain and enormous amounts of capital must be wiped out. As political economists have pointed out many times the new generation will have as fathers the unfit young men, the weakling who could not come to war, or the cowards who would not. This will result in a general lowering of the personnel throughout Europe.

The United States went through almost the same process in 1861 to 1863. If we compare Germany to the South, and the allies to the North we have a fair anology. The men of the southern states proved the better warriors, but the wealthier and more populous northern states finally overwhelmed them. It took thirty years for the South to recover, while the North as well showed the effects for many years.

I recognized through the possibility of German exhaustion along some novel line, which modern civilization makes possible. The British fleet is trying to cut Germany off from copper and rubber. Copper is almost irreplaceable in ordinance. If Germany exhausts her copper this might have such an effect as to greatly shorten the war. Incidentally, of course, it would mean the saving of hundreds of thousands of lives.

Germany is not able to cut Great Britain off from anything of great moment. She has forbidden Sweden to export timber, but Great Britain gets all the wood required from other sources, and Sweden does not produce wood for riflebutts anywhere.

Some have suggested that trouble between Austro-Hungarians and the Germans might end the war. I do not think so. The Germans of Vienna, while not so blastering, are more Pan-German than the Prussians. The most trustworthy accounts from Berlin declare that this feeling of rivalry is no more pronounced than the professional jealousy of the Austrian and German armies, which does not amount to much in my opinion.

THREE-GAME RECORD.

The Fulton Yacht Club's bowlers are in second place in the matches being played at the Onyx alleys. Thursday night's rolling resulted in the yachtsmen breaking the record for a three-game total in the city league. Rear bowled high in the single game of 235, also high total with 631 pins to his credit.

Patrons of Industry Active.

Pulaski, Jan. 1.—An effort will soon be put forth to increase the number of subordinate associations of the Patrons of Industry throughout Oswego county. This step is in accordance with a plan adopted at the recent state convention of the order in Syracuse. It is also planned to increase the membership of the various associations throughout the county, and from now on there will be unusual activity among the lodges.

WHITMAN SPEAKS OF STATE'S NEEDS

In His Inaugural Address New Governor Urges Economy.

SAYS CRIME IS INCREASING.

Growing Disregard of Law a Grave Menace to the Commonwealth. Scientific Budget Procedure, to Show Income and Expenditure of Government, Is Advocated.

Albany, Jan. 1.—In his inaugural address Charles S. Whitman, governor of New York state, said:

In entering upon the office of governor of the state of New York I am profoundly impressed with the responsibilities which I have assumed to the people of the state and with the difficulty of adequately fulfilling the pledges upon which I was elected. So far as in me lies, however, these pledges shall be redeemed.

I desire to avail of this occasion to express publicly to Governor Glynn and his household, as well as to his associates, my appreciation of their courtesy and of the expression of their desire to facilitate the transition from the old to the new in the management of the affairs of the state and to render the assumption of office by the new administration personally pleasant and as easy as possible. The expressions of good will and good wishes from those retiring to those about to assume the duties and responsibilities of public office are, we believe, indicative not only of the civic spirit of those recently opposed to us as candidates, but of the sentiments and wishes of the great majority of the members of the political party to which they belong, who are sincerely desirous of securing good government for the state and all that the term implies.

Outline of Intention.

I shall not attempt in this inaugural address to the people nor in my first message to the legislature to lay out any comprehensive plan. I intend to take up each subject for separate study and from time to time to deal with it by message or otherwise as may seem best. My primary purpose will be to secure competency, efficiency and economy in the administration of the affairs of the state, effective methods to deal with the spirit of lawlessness, reform in the administration of criminal justice and adequate legislation to meet the legitimate demands of all classes. The confusion naturally attending change of administration, the pressure of current work that cannot be postponed and the uncertainty created by the approaching constitutional convention will inevitably delay the consummation of some measures. But with the co-operation of my colleagues and the legislature and the support of the people I hope to be able to recommend effective and lasting reforms and to secure their introduction as speedily as is consistent with adequate study and due care.

A subject deserving the most thoughtful attention of the people of the state and of the legislature is the increase of crime and of the spirit of lawlessness. Indeed, disregard of law, impatience with legal and moral restraints, contempt for the judicial and executive ministers of justice are phenomena observable in all American communities and among all classes. No material prosperity, no abounding wealth, no progress in the sciences, can save us from moral decadence and ultimate decay if this spirit of lawlessness and of contempt for legal authority shall continue. The growing impatience of restraint, moral and legal, to be observed everywhere in America; the indifference, sordidness and complacency of many of the educated and well to do; the unchecked and unregulated propaganda of those things calculated to prejudice and poison the minds of the ignorant and undermine confidence in our institutions; the public opinion that tolerates lawlessness, whether it be the lynching of the negro, or the murder of the obscure, or the violence attending nearly all disputes between labor and capital, will inevitably engender a fatal malady unless the quickened conscience of the American people shall call a halt. No class can be above the general law. There is but one way of meeting the danger, and that way is through the creation of a dominant and pervading public sentiment in support of the enforcement of the law. Where that sentiment is wanting no devices of the law can make up for it.

Need of Economy in State Affairs.

Another striking development of our generation to which I deem it proper also to call particular attention is the increase of expenditures for public purposes, extravagance on all sides and the creation of an extremely complicated mechanism for national, state and local government with unrelated and unco-ordinated regulations adopted without regard to any scientific system and without adequate provision for securing competent, efficient and economical administration.

Every one readily recognizes that no large business enterprise, such as a railroad or a manufacturing concern, can be conducted successfully without thorough organization, competent and efficient employees trained for their several tasks, a systematic plan of operation and a scientific system of accounting and auditing. At the present day the largest business in the country is that of government, and the magnitude of governmental operations and the number of governmental activities are growing by leaps and bounds, yet neither the United States nor the various state and local governments have organized the conduct of their several businesses on any efficient plan or have adopted any scientific system of accounting and auditing or of preparing a budget or financial program.

If public expenditures should increase in the future at the same rate as in the past it will be only a question of time when we shall drift into bankruptcy. One of the first steps of the new administration, therefore, shall be a thorough investigation of the various departments of the state government, for without accurate knowledge of the working of the whole system the necessary administrative reforms cannot be devised. As soon as we have secured the necessary information I shall endeavor to make recommendations for remedial legislation designed to apply sound business methods to the administration of the business affairs of the state.

Dollar of Return For One Spent.

The people of the state should realize the increasing seriousness of this problem, and they should appreciate that this matter of governmental efficiency and economy is their own personal concern. It vitally affects their interests and involves the future prosperity of themselves and their children whether or not they now happen to be direct taxpayers. The ultimate effects of improvidence, waste and extravagance in public expenditures reach every citizen and, in fact, are always more injurious to the wage earners and those of small means than to any other class in the community. Every citizen is interested in seeing to it that every dollar contributed to the support of the government shall yield a dollar of return in public service.

The figures in regard to public expenditures speak for themselves, and surely they contain a warning which we cannot longer disregard. Twenty years ago the state debt was practically nothing; now it is over $150,000,000. Twenty years ago the annual interest charge of the state was practically nothing; now it is $6,385,400. Twenty years ago the authorized state expenditures were $11,200,600; in 1913 they were $49,700,000. Twenty years ago the number of state employees was about 3,400; now they number over 15,000. Twenty years ago the net debt of what now constitutes the city of Greater New York was approximately $150,000,000; today it is over $900,000,000. Twenty years ago the annual interest charge of what now constitutes Greater New York was approximately $7,000,000; in 1914 it was $38,000,000. Twenty years ago the authorized annual expenditure for Greater New York was approximately $60,000,000; in 1914 the appropriations from revenues alone were $192,995,500.

Taxpayers of the United States contribute $1,000,000,000 a year for the support of the national government, taxpayers of this state contribute approximately $50,000,000 a year for the support of the state government, and taxpayers of the city of New York contribute in taxes and increased loans approximately $250,000,000 a year. But there is no adequate system governing the collection and disbursement of these vast sums, and the people do not know and are without the means of knowing what in private business would be regarded as the first essentials of management. The national government has undertaken the construction of public works costing no less than $500,000,000, the state $200,000,000 and the city $300,000,000, but no clear financial program or budget, no comprehensive system or plan of public improvements and no definite program has been prepared and made available to the people or to their chosen representatives.

Vagaries of Taxation.

There is another important reason for adopting a scientific budget procedure. Nothing is more disturbing to business, more unjust in its results or more destructive to property rights than a constantly shifting burden of taxation. In 1911 only $228,600 was raised by direct taxation for the state government, while in 1913 the tax levy for this purpose was over $11,000,000. As between the city and state there is no corelation in taxing methods, the state levy on real estate being relatively low, but fluctuating, whereas the city puts three-fourths of the cost of government on real estate, a cost which is yearly mounting higher. Our present practice not only spells inequity to property owners, but in many instances will ultimately mean a grossly unfair rate of taxation or the virtual confiscation by the government of the property of one class of citizens while other classes are left free from taxation.

Another practice that seems unsound and misleading is the utilization of the inheritance tax for meeting current expenses. An inheritance tax is a means whereby the state for its own purposes takes over a part of the accumulated capital of the community. The question is presented whether it would not be better practice to apply the inheritance tax to a state capital purpose, such as the making of permanent improvements or to the reduction of indebtedness incurred for this purpose. An added objection to the utilization of the inheritance tax for current expenses is the irregularity and fluctuation in the amount of the return. For example, the collections in the county of New York in 1913 amounted in the aggregate to $9,701,623, while in 1914 they were $5,103,297, a reduction of $4,598,326. The effect of throwing this tax into the general fund is thus to accentuate the fluctuations in direct taxes.

State Needs Budget Plan.

The element of foresight in borrowing is also a part of planning that has been overlooked. Twenty years ago the state was not a borrower. Today it offers large issues to an investment market that is already overloaded with municipal issues. New York city alone during the last five years has sold from $56,000,000 to $70,000,000 per year of long term issues and from $127,000,000 to $277,000,000 of short term issues. What the state has needed and what it never has had is a well considered and well understood revenue and borrowing program upon some stable basis. The only way that the public interests can be protected in financing the needs of these great corporations is to have a well considered plan or program that will enable both state and municipal officers to act with intelligence and avoid the present wasteful and haphazard methods. This is necessary not only for the conservation of public resources, but also for the protection of the officer ultimately responsible. Until businesslike methods of accounting and auditing are introduced and a scientific budget procedure is adopted the officer will at all times be handicapped and blamed or criticised for what he cannot control.

Moreover, the adoption of a sound financial system and budget procedure is imperative in order to enable the citizens of the state to take an intelligent and active part in state affairs and to enable the people to co-operate practically with the legislature and the executive branches of the government.

Without such a system the people cannot obtain the necessary information as to the conduct of governmental affairs and cannot exercise the constant vigilance which is necessary to secure efficiency and economy in the public service. Every facility and encouragement should therefore be given to the citizens of the state and the various agencies representing them to inform themselves about the conditions under which the government is being operated and to bring to the governor and to the legislature their proposals for reforms and improvements. While there may be differences of opinion as to matters of detail, there can be no question that every effort should be made to keep citizens fully and accurately informed about what the government is doing and what it proposes to do with the public funds. The most effective way which has ever been devised for doing this is to adopt a budget procedure which will charge the executive with responsibility for the formulation and submission of definite proposals for the expenditure of public funds and the legislature with the responsibility of approval or rejection of these proposals.

Improve State Employ Conditions.

The very general disregard of the mandatory provision of the constitution relative to appointments in the civil service, the repeated changes in departmental offices whereby the state is constantly losing those who have been trained at its expense just at the time when their services are beginning to be most valuable, the feeling so general and perhaps well founded that service in any branch of our state government is of necessity temporary and not worth serious consideration of young and ambitious men, trained and equipped for the business of life—these and many other causes have made it difficult, if not impossible, to so man the great departments of the state in the hundreds of subordinate places that the business affairs of 11,000,000 of people, composing the state of New York as such, can be conducted with the wisdom and foresight and success required in any business enterprise in which the average citizen may be engaged. I shall use my utmost endeavors to secure a change in this regard.

I have been repeatedly urged to refer to the subject of the short ballot, so called, and to what I believe to be the truth—that a complete and thoroughgoing administrative reform is hardly possible as long as the fundamental law of the state requires the election of seven state officers independent of each other and thus practically compels a seven headed administration. This is, of course, a matter which must be left to the constitutional convention soon to assemble, a majority of whom, it is fair to assume, will assent to the plank in the Republican platform which recommended "a substantial reduction in the number of elective officials by the application of the principle of the short ballot to the executive officers of the state."

But I mention the subject and my conviction that a reduction of elective officials is desirable as tending to centralize power and responsibility because I deem it proper to recall to the minds of the people of the state the fact that the sphere of direct power of the governor to reform is limited by the existing division of authority and that consequently he should not be held responsible for what he cannot direct or control.

Assuming today the burden and the responsibility of administration, recognizing the obligation of all charged with the solemn duties of government, appealing to the intelligent citizenship of New York for support and assistance in our endeavor to serve the whole people and not merely a party, we pledge ourselves and the best that there is in us to the service of the people of the state of New York.

CHAPTER I.

I Plan a Voyage.

By the bequest of an elder brother I was left enough money to see me through a small college in Ohio and to secure me four years in a medical school in the east. Why I chose medicine I hardly know. Possibly the career of a surgeon attracted the adventurous element in me. Perhaps, coming of a family of doctors, I merely followed the line of least resistance. It may be, indirectly but inevitably, that I might be on the yacht Ella on that terrible night of Aug. 12 more than a year ago.

Commencement left me with a diploma, a new dress suit, an out of date medical library, a box of surgical instruments of the same date as the books and an incipient case of typhoid fever.

I was twenty-four, six feet tall and forty inches around the chest. Also, I had lived clean and worked and played hard. I got over the fever finally, pretty much all bone and appetite, but—alive. Thanks to the college, my hospital care had cost nothing. It was a good thing, I had just $7 in the world.

The yacht Ella lay in the river not far from my hospital windows. She was not a yacht when I first saw her, nor at any time, technically, unless I use the word in the broad sense of a pleasure boat. She was a two master and, when I saw her first, as dirty and disreputable as are most coasting vessels. Her rejuvenation was the history of my convalescence. On the day she stood forth in her first coat of white paint I exchanged my dressing gown for clothing that, however loosely it hung, was still clothing. Her new sails marked my promotion to beefsteak, her brass rails and awnings my first independent excursion up and down the corridor outside my door, and, incidentally, my return to a collar and tie.

The next day, I think it was, the deck furniture was put out on the Ella—numbers of white wicker chairs and tables, with bright cushions to match the awnings. I had a pair of ancient opera glasses, as obsolete as my amputating knives and, like them, a part of my heritage. By that time I felt a proprietary interest in the Ella and through my glasses, carefully focused with a pair of scissors, watched the arrangement of the deck furnishings. A girl was directing the men. I judged from the poise with which she carried herself that she was attractive—and knew it. How beautiful she was and how well she knew it I was to find out before long. McWhirter to the contrary, she had nothing to do with my decision to sign as a sailor on the Ella.

One of the bright spots of that long hot summer was McWhirter. We had graduated together in June, and in October he was to enter a hospital in Buffalo as a resident. But he was as indigent as I, and from June to October is four months.

"Four months," he said to me. "Even at two meals a day, boy, that's something over 240. And I can eat four times a day without a struggle. Wouldn't you think one of these overworked-for-the-good-of-humanity dubs would take a vacation and give me a chance to hold down his practice?"

Nothing of the sort developing, McWhirter went into a drug store and managed to pull through the summer with unimpaired cheerfulness, confiding to me that he secured his luncheons free at the soda counter.

McWhirter it was who got me my berth on the Ella. It must have been about the 20th of July, for the Ella sailed on the 28th. I was strong enough to leave the hospital, but not yet physically able for any prolonged exertion. McWhirter, who was short and stout, had been alternately flirting with the nurse as she moved in and out preparing my room for the night and sizing me up through narrowed eyes.

"No," he said, evidently following a private line of thought, "you don't belong behind a counter, Leslie. I'm darned if I think you belong in the medical profession, either. The British army'd suit you."

"The—what?"

"You know—Kipling idea—riding horseback, head of a column—undress uniform—colonel's wife making eyes at you—leading last hopes and all that."

"The British army with Kipling trimmings being out of the question, the original issue is still before us. I'll have to work, Mac, and work like the devil, if I'm to feed myself."

There being no answer to this, McWhirter contented himself with eying me.

"I'm thinking," I said, "of going to Europe. The sea is calling me, Mac."

"So was the grave a month ago, but it didn't get you. Don't be an ass, boy. How are you going to sea?"

"Before the mast." This apparently conveying no meaning to McWhirter, I supplemented "as a common sailor."

He was indignant at first, offering me his room and a part of his small salary until I got my strength. Then he became dubious, and, finally, so well did I paint my picture of long, idle days on the ocean, of sweet, cool nights under the stars, with breezes that purred through the sails, rocking the ship to slumber—finally he waxed enthusiastic and was even for giving up the pharmacy at once and sailing with me.

He had been fitting out the storeroom of a sailing yacht with drugs, he informed me, and doing it under the personal direction of the owner's wife.

"I've made a hit with her," he confided. "Since she's learned I'm a graduate M. D. she's letting me do the whole thing. I've made up some lotions to prevent sunburn and that seasick prescription of old Larimer's, and she thinks I'm the whole cheese. I'll suggest you as ship's doctor."

"How many men in the crew?"

"Eight, I think, or ten. It's a small boat and carries a small crew."

"Then they don't want a ship's doctor. If I go I'll go as a sailor." I said firmly. "And I want your word, Mac, not a word about me, except that I am honest."

"You'll have to wash decks probably."

"I am filled with a wild longing to wash decks," I asserted, smiling at his disturbed face. "I should probably also have to polish brass. There's a great deal of brass on the boat."

"How do you know that?"

When I told him he was much excited, and, although it was dark and the Ella consisted of three lights, he insisted on the opera glasses and was persuaded he saw her. Finally he put down the glasses and came over to me.

"Perhaps you are right, Leslie," he said soberly. "You don't want charity any more than they want a ship's doctor. Wherever you go and whatever you do, whether you're swabbing decks in your bare feet or polishing brass railings with an old sock, you're a man."

Soon after that he took his departure, and the following day he telephoned to say that if the sea was still calling me he could get a note to the captain recommending me. I asked him to get the note.

Good old Mac! The sea was calling me, true enough, but only dire necessity was driving me to ship before the mast—necessity and perhaps what, for want of a better name, we call destiny, for what is fate but inevitable law, inevitable consequence.

The stirring of my blood, generations removed from a seafaring ancestor; my illness, not a cause, but a result; McWhirter, filling prescriptions behind the glass screen of a pharmacy, and fitting out, in porcelain jars, the medicine closet of the Ella; Turner and his wife, Schwiefer, the mulatto Tom, Singleton and Elsa Lee; all thrown together, a hodgepodge of characters, motives, passions and hereditary tendencies, through an inevitable law working together toward that terrible night of Aug. 12, when hell seemed loose on a painted sea.

The Ella had been a coasting vessel in the South American trade. The firm of Turner & Sons owned the line of which the Ella was one of the smallest vessels.

The gradual elimination of sailing ships and the substitution of steamers in the coasting trade, left the Ella, with others, out of commission. She was still seaworthy, rather fast, as such vessels go, and steady. Marshall Turner, the oldest son of old Elias Turner, the founder of the business, bought it in at a nominal sum, with the intention of using it as a private yacht, and, since it was a superstition of the house never to change the name of one of its vessels, the schooner Ella, odorous of fresh lumber or raw rubber, as the case might be, dingy gray in color, with slovenly decks on which lines of seamen's clothing were generally hanging to dry, remained, in her metamorphosis, still the Ella.

Marshall Turner was a wealthy man, but he equipped his new pleasure boat very modestly. As few changes as were possible were made. He increased the size of the forward house, adding quarters for the captain and the two mates, and thus kept the after house for himself and his friends. He fumigated the hold and the forecastle—a precaution that kept all the crew coughing for two days, and drove them out of the odor of formaldehyde to the deck to sleep.

The wheel, replaced by a new one, white and gilt, remained in its old position behind the after house, the steersman standing on a raised iron grating above the wash of the deck.

"You have been ill, haven't you?"

Thus from the chart room, which had become a sort of lounge and card room, through a small barred window it was possible to see the man at the wheel, who, in his turn, commanded a view of part of the chart room, but not of the floor.

The craft was schooner rigged, carried three lifeboats and a collapsible raft and was navigated by a captain, first and second mates and a crew of six ablebodied sailors and one green youth whose sole knowledge of navigation had been gained on an Atlantic City catboat.

I do not recall that I performed the nautical rite of signing articles. Armed with the note McWhirter had secured for me and—with what I fondly hoped was the rolling gait of the seafaring man, I approached the captain, a bearded and florid individual. I had dressed the part old trousers, a cap,

The Gity Manager Plan

By the Mayor of Dayton

The commission-manager form of government in Dayton is the application of the newest development in organization to a municipality. The commission is elected by the people on a non-partisan and short ballot. The commissioner receiving the highest number of votes is the mayor. These five commissioners correspond to the board of directors of a corporation, and they select and appoint an executive, who is the City Manager. All the functions of the municipal government come under the City Manager, outside of the legislative functions, which are in the hands of the commission.

Under the executive in Dayton are the five operating departments. Each of these departments is headed by a director, and each of these directors is appointed by the City Manager. They are:

Director of Public Safety, covering police, fire, weights and measures.

Director of Service, who has charge of the water works, engineering, the construrction, repairing and cleaning of streets and sewers, the collection of garbage and ashes, and the general supervision of all public utilities.

Director of Finance, who has under him the treasurer, the accountant, and the purchasing agent.

Director of Welfare, having charge of all correctional institutions, hospitals, charities, parks, playgrounds, recreations, outdoor relief, and social betterment and all community and social features.

Director of Law, who is the city attorney

The appointment of these directors is the first step in the application of business methods to municipal government. Our Director of Dayton is one of the leading attorneys of Dayton. He was the original charter commission, had more to do than anyone else with the drafting of the charter. He accepted the position at a sacrifice to his own business.

The Director of Welfare was a minister. He is an executive. He was at the head of a very large parish, and he is a man who was doing a wonderful work outside of his church. He had made studies of social conditions and social betterment; had traveled abroad and studied conditions in foreign cities, as well as the cities in this country, and his greatest work was being done outside of the church. He accepted the position of Director of Welfare and resigned from his church.

The Director of Finance is a man from Dayton who had occupied in the various industries of Dayton the positions of accountant, purchasing agent and treasurer. When he was appointed he was a member of a firm of public accountants.

The Director of Service is a man from out of Dayton. When it came to the appointment of the various directors, the commission and myself got together and they furnished me lists of the men who they thought had the characteristics and experience to fill the various positions. For the position of the Director of Service, however, they thought it advisable to bring a man from out of town, and so I selected a man who had had large construction experience, had been on the new aqueduct in New York, a man who had studied municipal work, and who had been my principal assistant engineer in Cincinnati.

The directorship of Safety has never been filled, as we were not able to find the right man, and the City Manager is now filling that position.

These directors, with the City Manager, form the staff. They meet every day for an hour and go over the important questions in each department, the same as would be done in a corporation. If there is a division of ideas in these staff meetings, a vote is taken, and while this particular function is not called for in the charter, it centralizes the entire organization. Each director is responsible for his own department. Each director makes his own appointments, subject to the approval of the City Manager, and the question of appointments is taken up at the staff meetings.

The commissioners, together with the City Manager and the Director of Finance as secretary, form the sinking fund trustees. This brings all of the finances of the government inside of the central organization.

Municipal Red Tape.

I think everyone will agree that there has been an awakening all over the country to the inefficiency of the old forms of municipal government and to the fact that we ourselves, the voters, made the conditions what they are. We may be dissatisfied at what is being accomplished, but, as a matter of fact, we are responsible. We have allowed innumerable laws and statutes to be passed which surround municipal work with a network of red tape, making progress and efficiency impossible. We, to protect our communities and ourselves — as we thought—allowed these laws to be passed, and there we ended our interest in municipal affairs. We elected people to office and then hampered them, then condemned them. I have thought, since I have been in municipal work, that if it was possible to get one of these public jobs in the open where we could handle it as our big businesses are handled, most remarkable showings could be made. Unfortunately, however, it is impossible, due to the network of laws and the attitude of the people, to get efficiency rapidly.

The municipal governments of American cities may be divided today into three classes: federal, commission, and commission-manager. Take any city organization under the old federal form and analyze it. Could any man operate his own private business with the organizations which we have allowed in our municipal affairs? We have here all kinds and conditions of individuality—some departments run by boards and commissions, some appointed, and some elected. In a number of our cities the governor may appoint some of the boards or commissions.

Let us take a comparison of our present federal form of government with an organization like the Pennsylvania Railroad. Suppose the stockholders took it into their minds to elect an auditor, an attorney, a treasurer, another board to look after station ground and buildings, and another board to look after their filing system and keeping of records. Do you suppose the present President of the Pennsylvania Railroad would remain in the position? Would not the directors resign? Could you get a competent man to take charge of the railroad company with such an organization around him? You cannot select men trained in the particular functions of government through the ballot. It would be as reasonable to expect a large manufacturing plant, in the case of a vacancy, to go out and ask neighbors to elect some one whom they might suggest to fill the vacancy. We shall not have efficient governments until we are able to select from the point of efficiency.

This is where the commission form of government has proved inadequate. The voters have not been able to select trained men to take care of the particular functions of government. It is usually customary for the commissioners, after election, to divide the various functions of government among themselves. Under the federal form, whenever there is a political overthrow, the old organization is usually entirely wiped out and a new one put in. Could any private business stand such an operation?

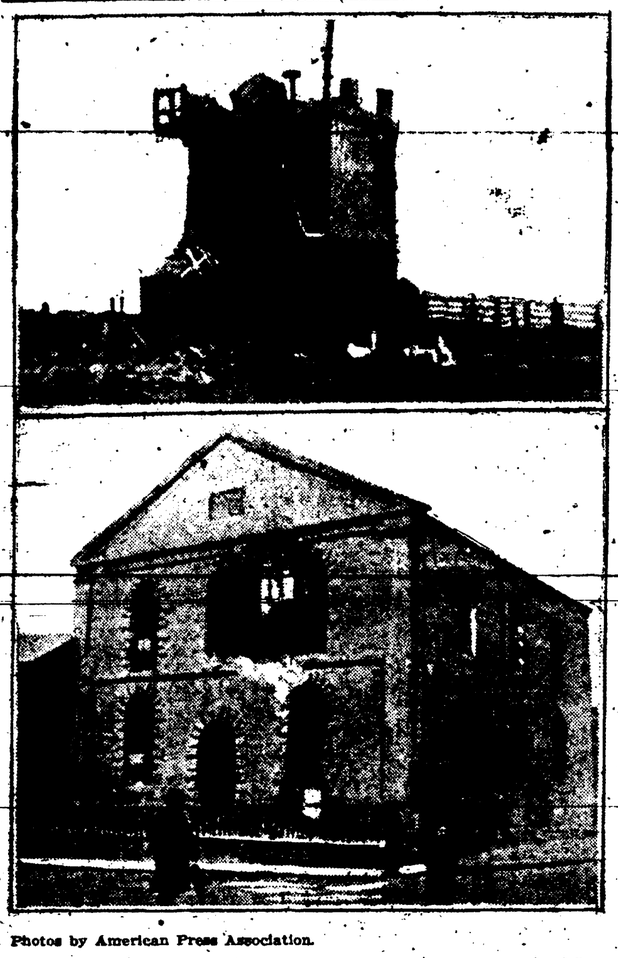
The "Boss"—Official or Unofficial

This condition of affairs has built up political machines, run by a centralized power, and we ourselves have allowed it. We have not in our governmental organizations allowed for any centralized power, and as we know in our own business that centralization is essential, the political parties themselves have centralized around a boss, and we have allowed our cities to be governed by two parties—one party in power and entrenched, and the other party on the outside waiting for an opportunity to become entrenched. Our idea of municipal reform has been to throw out one party and put in the other. We have allowed these party organizations, one in and one out, to be molded under our very hands. Their strength lies in organization, and the centralized power, or boss, holds his organization together with the idea that "to the victor belong the spoils." We often hear that the city manager is nothing more than a boss, or centralized power. This may be true, but the conditions are not comparable, as under the old form of bossism the boss was unassailable—he was unofficial. Under the city-manager form the "boss" is assailable because he is official, and, under our particular charter in Dayton, the City Manager is subject to recall.

The commission-manager form of government does away with the conditions which have in the past hampered and made impossible efficiency under the old forms of government. You have a commission elected on a non-partisan ballot, which becomes the board of directors or the legislative body. They select the administrative officer who is directly responsible for the carrying out of the administrative functions. His success depends upon his fitness and general capability. He selects men who have been specially trained for the work to be done, and in this selection he is not hampered by political promises. I cannot tell you today the political faith of any of the men I have appointed since I have been in Dayton. "Party" and "politics" are simply left out of the reckoning.

The general awakening of the American Republic to our municipal affairs is, to my mind, one of the best signs we have had, because it means that we are going to start at the bottom and work up. In foreign cities, the municipal governments were the original governments which spread into provinces, and the provinces into the nations. In this country it has been the reverse. It started with our national government and worked into states, and then cities. Now we are proceeding to build up our municipal governments.

Preparing the People for the Change.



There is such an awakening in this country at the present time on the question of municipal government that we fear that too many will be rushing into improved forms before the people are ready. Dayton was well prepared for the change. Over two years ago there was started, through public subscription, the Bureau of Municipal Research. It made impartial investigations into each department of the city, and worked up a wonderful fund of data and caused many beneficial changes; it was constructive in its attitude, not destructive. This is the same procedure that is carried on in business corporations, but which has never been generally followed in our municipal governments.

The people of a community must be educated up to a change. A few people cannot rise in their wrath and make it alone. A municipal bureau of research is absolutely necessary to our mind for three reasons: first, it compiles data which show the people the necessity of a change; second, after the change has occurred, the information and experience of the bureau are necessary for the installation of the new government; third, the information which the bureau has gathered together is necessary as a basis of comparison, after the new government has been established, so that the new can be compared with the old.

There is a general idea through the country that Dayton did not start the campaign for the change of government until after the high water. This is not true. This research had been started a year before, and a committee was organized in January to determine upon the method of procedure. Undoubtedly the high water caused the people to be drawn closer together, and aided in the rapid developments which have taken place in the change of government since the flood. We have one organization in Dayton (the Greater Dayton Association) which comprises about 7,000 people—this out of a population of 125,000—and it is heart and soul behind the new charter. In addition to that, during the campaign there was built up from a regular ward and precinct organization a Citizens' Committee, which is used as an educational organization to get information to the people. This educational matter was gotten up by the Bureau of Municipal Research. This same organization got the people to the polls.

From this it is evident that there is considerable work necessary before any change in government is attempted. Finally, I should like to emphasize the following very important point—one I think the American people have lost sight of, but that they are now beginning to grasp; No matter what form of government a city may have, if the people themselves are not interested in it and participate in it, that the government will never be a success.—American City.

First Pictures of Damage to East Coast Towns, England, by Germans.

Photos by American Press Association.

These are the first pictures to reach America of the damage done at Scarborough and Whitby in the German sea raid. It will be recalled how the world was surprised by the daring of the German cruisers which evaded the North sea English warships and the mines and shelled three east coast towns in England on a direct line from the Helgoland German naval base. In addition to Scarborough and Whitby, Hartlepool was badly damaged and many killed. The top picture shows the damaged coast guard station at Whitby. The lower one shows the Baptist chapel at Scarborough, through which a large shell went, wrecking one of the walls and the interior.

FRENCH MOVING GUNS TOWARD STEINBACH

Special to The Evening Times.

Paris, Jan. 2.—Artillery is still playing the most important part in the gigantic engagement in France, Belgium and Alsace-Lorraine. All the way from Lombartzyde, on the North sea coast, to Steinbach in upper Alsace, the artillery duel, the greatest in the history of warfare, is raging with varying degrees of intensity.

French airmen are becoming more active at the eastern end of the line to meet the fresh attacks of the German airmen in northern France.

A large section of Dunkirk is reported to have been damaged by German bombs, some of which fell near the French military hospitals. Dunkirk is the seat of all the French base hospitals.

In the forest of La Grurie, in the northern part of the Argonne district, the French have been delivering fierce counter attacks to retake the trenches lost to the Germans on Thursday.

At Steinbach the French have been able to move their artillery forward into more advantageous positions.

It is reported from a Dutch source that great masses of German troops passed through Cologne yesterday on their way to the Yser front. They were estimated at 210,000 men. Thousands of wounded Germans are passed eastward through Cologne from West Flanders.

SURVIVORS BURNED AND SHOCKED

Special to The Evening Times

Dartsmouth, Eng., Jan. 2.—Most of the survivors of the battleship Formidable who were brought here are in the hospital to-day suffering from burns, exposure or shock. "We barely had time to save ourselves before the ship went down," said one of them. "The Formidable sank very rapidly, fore and after. The weather was very rough as the gale which had been blowing for several days had just begun to die down."

Some of the survivors who were picked up by the trawler Providence and taken to Torbay, had all their clothes blown off by the explosion. One of the men said the ship seemed to be lifted out of the water. Then all was enveloped by an enormous cloud of thick black smoke. The magazine exploded, tearing the ship apart just as she settled.

Of the rescued eight were officers and six were midshipmen.

London, Jan. 2.—The Admiralty issued an official announcement to-day saying that seventy-five officers lost their lives in the sinking of the Formidable. This statement does not give the total loss of life.

Berlin, Jan. 2—(Via Wireless).—Advances have been made by the Germans all along the line in the Argonne district, it is officially announced here to-day. The French have bombarded Saarburg in Lorrainne west of Strassburg.

It was during a golf game in Scotland. The first player who drove off was very bowlegged. The second player unmindful that his opponent was directly in front of him, struck the ball and it whizzed between his opponent's legs.

"Hoot, mon," said the bow-legged one in anger, "that's nae golf!"

"Aweel," said his opponent complacently, "ef 'tis nae golf 'tis gude croquet."—Ladies' Home Journal.

PROF. CARROLL'S POSITION

David B. Carroll of this city was the New Year's guest of his brother, Edward Carroll, at Oswego. If Joseph McGrath, organist at St. John's church, Oswego, is selected by St. Paul's church parish to play the organ in that church, Mr. Carroll will succeed Mr. McGrath at his present position.

New York, Jan. 4.—The suggestion that the world series rules be amended that all players in both leagues get divvy of the pro- is entirely out of order. The suggestion is absurd. The only ers who deserve a right to share in the receipts are the players o have assisted in the winning of the pennants. To give the other rs a share would be just about the same as sharing a raise in which you got with all the other fellows in your shope.

The players who win the pennants are the fellows who are out the diamond hustling all the time. They don't loaf. They are ing and playing every minute. They deserve all they get and e isn't a reason why they should split the extra money with a lot players who don't care whether they win a ball game or lose one.

Johnny Dundee, the New York lightweight, lays claim to the tinction of having been the busiest boxer during the 1914 season. undee mingled in 24 battles during the year—an average of two raps a month. Even "Battling" Levinsky, the heavyweight war horse, didn't fight as often as that.

Four of Dundee's battles were 20-round affairs. Another tched along until the 17th round, while the others were ten and round mills.

One of the athletic marvels of the present day is Jesse Carey, e at the age of 43 ranks as one of the very best roller skaters the world. Carey has been skating for more than 20 years and seems to be just about as good to-day as he was when in the ime of his youth.

One of Carey's most remarkable performances was that in Paris 1910 when he covered 280 miles during 24 hours. He skated ntinuously, never leaving the track for a minute during the entire 24 hours. Other contestants, much younger than Carey, were forced take frequent rests, and the result was that Carey finished many miles ahead of his nearest competitor.

In Brussels Carey defeated nearly fifty contestants in an united race. He skaed 43 miles without a stop and by that time very man in the race had been forced off the tracks.

Carey holds every European and roller skating record from one miles up to 24 hours.

Carey mingled in the recent 24 hour roller skating contest in New York and at the finish was fresher than any of the youths who were able to stand the grind. Carey's partner lost a lap during the last hour of the race, and it was this loss that lost to Carey the chance to take part in the great sprint during the last hour of the grind. As it was, Carey's team finished near the top and grabbed off a nice slice of money.

Carey was born in Pittston, Pa. He is just a trifle over five feet tall, weighs only 115 pounds.

A diet in which meat predominates, causes appendicitis, if you wish to take the word of Dr. Richard C. Newton for it. Dr. Newton is president of the New Jersey State Board of Health.

The doctor says:

"The illness of Charles Buckley, the Harvard full-back, and the resultant operation for appendicitis, leads us to consider again the question whether the apparently undue prevalence of appendicitis among football players may not be due to an undue preponderance of meat in their diet.

"A prominent trainer of football players asserted some years ago that for a time before the final important conteest for which he was preparing a football team he would forbid all use of vegetables in the diet. I remember that at least one membeer of his team underwent an appendectomy shortly after he had finished this course of training.

"Nicholas Senn was told by the hospital surgeons in Africa that they had never seen a case of appendicitis in a vegetable-eating African. This immunity from the disease is also alleged of the Brahmins in India, who are strict vegetarians. Dr. J. B. Kellog told the writer that he had visited some religious order or orders in Europe, comprising several thousand members, and that a case of appendicitis had never occurred among them.

"The idea that meat-eating may cause appendicitis is so prevalent that it would seem to have some foundation in fact."

BOY SCOUTS HOLD A SILVER RALLY.

Syracuse, Jan. 3.—Prominent men from civic, professional, clerical and educational circles offered words of encouragement and advice to the Boy Scouts of Syracuse at the Silver Point Rally of Salvation Army Hall, Friday afternoon.

Teachers, parents and others interested in the welfare of the boys were present. Dr. Elmer E. Keeler presided.

The speakers were Congressman-elect Walter W. Magee, Dean Hugh P. Baker of the State College of Forestry, James A. Shea, principal of Lincoln School; Rev. John H. Applebee, Thomas M. Gafney, representing the Chamber of Commerce: C. C. Bishop, Scout commissioner and J. J. Hines, assistant chief of the Fire Department.

Dean Baker advised the boys to study nature, especially the great forests. He expressed pleasure over the carefulness exercised by the boys when they were at the Experimental station. It showed they appreciated the value of the work being done, he said.

Mr. Gafney spoke to the boys regarding truthfulness. He said that he would rather see a boy get into a decent fight with his match than to have him lie to his mother.

Congressman-elect Magee discussed the federal government, putting special emphasis upon the fact that in this country every man and boy had an equal chance to make something of himself.

Mr. Levans told of the duty and training of firemen and the value of discipline. Prof. Shea discussed boy character and told stories illustrating his points.

HOT LINERS.

By Frank G. Menke.

Frank Farrell sold his Yankees at a price under his original estimate, but probably he figured that it was worth that sacrifice to get away from Ban Johnson.

Appraisal of the estate of the late John T. Brush shows that during the last five years the Giants have earned about $130,000 annually on an investment around $350,000.

Dear Sir—In what round will the Willard-Johnson fight end?

As soon as Willard gets Johnson mad by hitting him on the nose.

COUNTY LEADERS PLAN TO MEET.

Syracuse, Jan. 3.—Arrangements have been made for the entertainment of the chairmen of the committees of the five counties of Central New York affiliated with the New York Suffrage Campaign Committee, of which Miss Harriet May Mills is general chairman.

This meeting is scheduled to take place in this city January 12 at the Wolcott, a luncheon preceding the session. Mrs. H. Winfield Chapin will be the hostess. At this time Miss Mills will give an account of the annual conference held last month in New York and much of the 1915 campaign work will be outlined to the leaders, all of whom are prominently identified with public work in their various localities.

The chairmen who will represent the five counties will be Mrs. Luther S. Mott, Oswego; Mrs. Virgil Kellogg and Mrs. Jeanette Moffett, Jefferson; Miss Isabel Howland, Cayuga; Miss Isabella Mott, Madison; Mrs. Morris W. Chase Trump, Onondaga.

The luncheon will be a social event among the suffragists. The colors of the organization will predominate.

Miss Mills will debate next Wednesday at the meeting of the Pomona Grange in Utica, her subject being along suffrage lines. Miss Mills addressed the elementary teachers' meet ing this week at which time the resolution to have the question of enfranchisement for women submitted to the people next fall was passed.

MUNICIPAL COMMISSION.

Chicago, Jan. 3.—Appointment of a municipal commission of 10 men, several of whom are to be big employers, to devise ways and means of meeting the unemployed situation in Chicago was authorized by the City Council last night.

Mayor Carter H. Harrison explained that the chief purposes of this commission would be to stimulate employment in private trade and industry.

Appointment of such a commission was recommended by the Municipal Markets Commission, which said:

"In view of the great amount of destitution, misery and distress prevalent at this time, due to the large number of unemployed," reads a part of the report, "it is urged that his Honor the Mayor immediately appoint an advisory committee of 10, consisting of representatives of railway, manufacturing, mercantile, contracting, banking and labor interests.

"The chief purpose of this advisory committee shall be to stimulate employment in private trade and industry and procure the co-operation of employers in an effort to increase the number of employes at work as far and as soon as possible."

The commission also recommended:

Municipal insurance against unemployment.

Reorganization of state employment agencies.

Establishment of an efficient Municipal Employment Bureau in the Department of Public Welfare.

A suggestion was made that permits to sell newspapers on street corners be issued only to maimed and crippled persons as a means of giving employment to those unfit for other work.

The committee also was in favor of the establishment of vocational training schools by the Board of Education.

MASSAGED HER HEART BACK; HER SOUL HAD FLED

Los Angeles, Jan. 3.—Mrs. Walter W. Akers, who on Dec. 7th lay lifeless upon the operating table at the Good Samaritan hospital for ten full minutes, according to her physicians, but who was saved from the grave by a wonder of modern medical science, to-day described her experiences during that brief period. Mrs. Akers was restored to life after Dr. C. S. Hutchison had thrust his hand in an insertion made in her body and gently massaged her heart back into action.

"I have no recollection of where my soul went," she said, "but I have a firm, unexplainable conviction that I actually died and during those minutes of death, my soul left this body and began at least its journey to the great mysterious beyond. I can recall nothing of what my soul experienced, but there is another unexplainable conviction that a great unearthly power sent it back into my body.

"When I regained consciousness there was a strange peace within me. It was as though I were waiting for something wonderful to happen to me.

"During all the ages no one had caught a glimpse of the life hereafter and returned to tell of it," she continued. "Then why should I, when the Creator sent by soul back to my body he erased that memory from my mind."

Mrs. Akers firmly believes that God sent her soul back into her body because its work upon this earth was not accomplished.

M'GUIRE HOME AFTER A LONG VACATION.

Syracuse, Jan. 3.—George H. McGuire has returned to Syracuse after an absence from the state extending over a period of thirteen months. During that time he has been under the observation of physicians almost continuously.

Although he has not fully recovered from the complete physical and mental breakdown which resulted from the part he played in the famous "John Doe" proceedings conducted by Governor Charles S. Whitman, then district attorney of New York, Mr. McGuire's health is improving rapidly.

"I expect to remain in Syracuse," Mr. McGuire said yesterday afternoon, "and to continue in business. My health has been poor but I expect to feel as brisk as ever before very long."

Mr. McGuire showed plainly the effects of the severe nervous strain to which he was subjected in November, 1913, when he suddenly became the central figure in the investigation which resulted from the disclosures made by John A. Hennessy. His hair is slightly grayer, and he exhibits numerous signs of extreme nervousness.

Although he has been in Syracuse for nearly a week, having arrived last Sunday, Mr. McGuire did not venture upon the streets until Saturday when he went walking with his brother, Charles S. McGuire. They met several friends, and Mr. McGuire was stopped frequently for brief chats.

For many weeks after Mr. McGuire left New York, more than a year ago, his whereabouts were kept secret. It was known that he had left this state and that he was in extremely poor health, but the guesses as to where he had gone were numerous and widely variant.

Since that time it has been reported frequently that he had been seen in various parts of the country. In the last few months members of his family stated that he was in California. Probably most of the guesses were correct to a certain extent, because Mr. McGuire has been in different parts of the United States.

He spent three months in the Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore. He suffered an attack of nervous prostration and was treated there by some of the most eminent physicians in the country. He also spent several weeks in Florida before going to Fresno, Cal., where he was joined by Mrs. McGuire and their children.

OSWEGO CITY NOTES.

As execution issued on a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in the action of Albert P. Merriam of Phoenix against Interstate Milk and Cream Co., of New York has been returned unsatisfied and filed in the County Clerk's office. The judgment is for $1,047.77 and was secured in Supreme Court last October. It is for milk products sold the defendant. The return is made by Sheriff Max Grifenhagen of New York county, who states that the defendant had neither personal or real property on which to levy.

The Oswego Council of the Commercial Travelers' Association, the Fulton Chamber of Commerce, the Business Men's Association of Baldwinsville and the granges of Oswego Falls and Lysander, will select representatives to confer with President Truesdale of the Lackawanna railroad relative to putting on a gasoline car service between Oswego and Syracuse. Petitions will be circulated in the cities and villages on the line to determine to what extent the car would be patronized. It is understood the railroad company is willing to put the service to operation if it can be convinced that it would be well patronized.

Among the Oswego county cases on the calendar of the Appellate Division, January term, are the following:

James Armstrong vs. Minetto-Meriden Co. This case has been twice tried and once reversed by the Appellate Division. The appeal is from the order of Justice De Angelis nonsuiting the plaintiff.

The People ex rel N. Y. O. & W. Railway Co., vs. State Board of Tax Commissioners an action to set aside the report of Referee F. G. Spencer as to the assessment of the company's property here.

The installation of officers was held at Frontier City lodge No. 422, F. & A. M., last evening, with Charles W. Dings, the retiring master, acting as installing officer. Mr. Dings was presented with a past master's jewel by his associates in the lodge. The officers installed were: Charles H. Griggs, master; Charles F. Hager, S. W.; M. A. Switzer, J. W.; John S. Parsons, treasurer; George Cousins, secretary; William A. Allen, S. D.; Frank A. Neale, Jr., J. D.; John Parker, S. M. C.; L. L. Cope, J. M. C.; O. S. Bond, chaplain; Charles O'Hara, musician; R. S. Kelsey, chorister; Dr. A. W. Irwin and Dr. F. D. Sinclair, physicians; H. R. Carrier, orator; Alex. Skillen, tiler.

War: Pathos and Humor

Belgium, Jan. 4.—A Belgian officer returning with his men from a week in the trenches along the Yser, was asked by one of his colleagues whom he met on the road from Nieuport to Furnes, how things were going in front. "Oh," he replied, "all right, but it isn't exactly a picnic, you know." That is exactly the answer I felt like giving to-day when I returned from a few days' gypsying in West Flanders. It is difficult to know where to start in relating my impressions. It seems as if for four days I have sat in a huge moving picture theater and watched one film after another being reeled off, at the same time listening to an extremely eloquent lecturer.

How and why I was able to wander from village to trench, and from trench to village, or whatever is left of them, is a story which, perhaps, with many others, will be told later—after the war. They are a courteous, open-hearted, hospitable lot, these Belgians, and anybody who seems to be English, either in appearance or accent, can have anything they own. "Ah, England," I hear from all sides, "why they have certainly stood by us. Les Anglais sons, 'Chic.'" ("chic" in this sense of the word refers to character, not to appearance).

The most interesting place in the line along the Yser these days has been the village of Styuvekenskerke. It lies on the side, i. e., on the left bank of the Yser. The main road from Dixmude to Pervyse runs about half a mile to the west of it, and the railroad about another half mile further. Both lines are held by the Belgians. On Tuesday morning some of our advanced patrols ventured close to the village, and not seeing any life there went in. The Germans had retired to the other side of the river. Promptly the village was "retaken" by the Belgians. But of what use is a practically razed village anyhow? It would have taken a great number of extra men to guard it at night against surprised attacks, so the officer in charge retired at sunset into his own lines along the railroad.

On Wednesday morning the Germans were occupying the village again for the day, but this afternoon the Belgians might have had their tea there but for the sudden interruption of business of the only patisserie. The English sign "Tea served at all hours," was still intact. We took it down, and now it is heading the entrance to one of the sleeping trenches a mile back. At certain points around this village the advance lines are no further than 1,200 feet from each other, and I have seen soldiers of both sides walk about unconcerned without a shot being fired on either side. But in the distance, one hears from time to time the roar of the guns.

My wanderings landed me near a lonely Belgian field gun, one of the "7's," in the neighborhood of Pervyse. I knew the officer in charge, and was promptly invited to stay, and take pot luck, an invitation which, needless to say, I accepted. Somehow one seems to be always hungry, yet one eats more and oftener than at any other time. His underground dwelling has been made quite inhabitable. He insisted that I should take the "fauteuil" in the shops of the only soapbox present, while he balanced himself on a one-legged piano stool.

Our meal was simple enought, but plentiful. Dry biscuits, sardines, apples and cold coffee. Fires of any sort, either inside or outside, are strictly forbidden in the lines. A smoking chimney is asking for shrapnel. Quite an amusing incident took place here. The lieutenant told me during uncheon that every time he fired a shot the Germans answered him in kind, i. e., if he sent a shrapnel they promptly sent a shrapnel back; when he fired a shall, a shell whistled back. After luncheon he illustrated his story, and indeed the Germans seemed to be in a joking mood. He fired a shrapnel and a shell in turn; a few minutes later a shrapnel and a shell whistled back over our heads.

I asked for the commandent, and expected to find him also in one of the underground dwelling, but I was directed to one of the houses on the outskirts of the village. "His offices there?" I asked looking at the remains of what had been a little villa. "Certainly, monsieur. Follow me," said the little soldier.

On all sides we were surrounded by blackened bricks and burnt wood, fallen walls, and broken furniture. Finally, we arrived near a cellar door and the mystery was soon solved. The commandant met me with all the ceremony and welcomed me as if he had been in the library of his house in Brussels. "I am sorry," he said in excellent English, "to have to receive you in this improvised flat, but 'c'est la guerre.'"

And the cellar offered certainly a curious picture. Fourteen soldiers set around a make-shift barrel table, at the head of which—on a barrel—our officer had presided. We had evidently interrupted a meal. An iron bedstead with planks and a few bunches of straw, took up one corner, a tier of knapsacks and some more straw, lined the opposite wall. An old-fashioned gramophone had been rescued from the ruins, formed a conspicious piece of furniture, but the decords had been smashed. Still, one gets inventive, when time is long and tedious—and it has been very slow around here these last days—so some of the records were pasted together on a piece of cardboard, and with the assistance of a helping finger, bridging over the gaps and rents, the old machine managed to give "Carmen," "La Boheme," and some popular French airs."

The first opportunity I have I shall send them much-needed records and needles, so that in future the inhabitants may have some decent music with their meals. The food consisted of cold beef, brown bread, and water, the color of which did not look appetizing at all. One of the soldiers noticed me glancing suspiciously at the water-bottle, and he remarked, especially for the benefit of the younger me, "Oh, it's all right, this 'Eau de l'Yser,' there may be a dead German or two in it, but that adds a sting to it, as they say in the States."

The cellar was lit by an improvised little torch in a bottle, and the men around the table with their two weeks' growth of beard looked like pirates.

and a sweater from which I had removed my college letter. McWhirter, who had supervised my preparations and who accompanied me to the wharf, had suggested that I omit my morning shave. The result was, as I look back, a lean and cadaverous six foot youth, with the hospital pallor still on him, his chin covered with a day's beard, his hair cropped short and a cannibalistic gleam in his eyes. I remember that my wrists, thin and bony, annoyed me and that the girl I had seen through the opera glasses came on board and stood off, detached and indifferent, but with her eyes on me, while the captain read my letter.

When he finished he held it out to me.

"I've got my crew," he said curtly.

"There isn't—I suppose there's no chance of your needing another hand?"

"No. You can leave your name and address with the mate over there. If anything turns up he'll let you know."

My address! The hospital!

I folded the useless letter and thrust it into my pocket. The captain had gone forward, and the girl with the cool eyes was leaning against the rail watching me.

"You are the man Mr. McWhirter has been looking after, aren't you?"

"Yes." I pulled off my cap, and, recollecting myself—"yes, miss."

"You have been ill, haven't you?"

"Yes, miss."

"Could you polish brass and things like that?"

"I could try. My arms are strong enough. It is only when I walk"—

But she did not let me finish. She left the rail abruptly and disappeared down the companionway into the after house. I waited uncertainly.

When the girl returned she came to me and stood for a moment looking me over with cool, appraising eyes. I had been right about her appearance, she was charming, or no, hardly charming. She was too aloof for that. But she was beautiful, an Irish type, with blue gray eyes and almost black hair. The tilt of her head was haughty. Later I came to know that her hauteur was indifference. But at first I was frankly afraid of her—afraid of her cool, mocking eyes and the upward thrust of her chin.

"My brother-in-law is not here," she said after a moment, "but my sister is below in the cabin. She will speak to the captain about you. Where are your things?"

I glanced toward the hospital, where my few worldly possessions, including my dress clothes, my amputating set and such of my books as I had not been able to sell, were awaiting disposition. "Very near, miss," I said.

"Better bring them at once. We are sailing in the morning."

She gave a curt little nod of dismissal, and I went down the gangplank and along the wharf. I had secured what I went for, and my summer was provided for. I was exultant, but with my exultation was mixed a curious anger at McWhirter, that he had advised me not to shave that morning.

My preparation took little time. Such of my wardrobe as was worth saving McWhirter took charge of. I sold the remainder of my books, and in a sailor's outfitting shop I purchased boots and slickers—the sailors' oilskins. With my last money I bought a good revolver, second hand, and cartridges. I was glad later that I had bought the revolver, and that I had taken with me the surgical instruments, antiquated as they were, which, in their mahogany case, had been my father's. I had also purchased a cheap suitcase, into which I packed my few belongings, and with it in my hand I went back to the wharf.

The Ella was a trim little craft, with a cream hull and yellow funnel. Her decks were spotless, and her brasswork shone in the sun. She was a steam yacht of about 500 tons, and I knew enough of her type to realize that she was built for speed. Her graceful lines and her long, rakish funnel appealed to me. I was glad that I was to be on board such a craft.

I was directed to the forecastle, and there I found my bunk and my sea chest, which had been sent down. I was to share the forecastle with the crew, and I was glad of that, too. I had no wish to be set apart from the men who were to be my companions for the next few months.

The Ella sailed the following day at 10 o'clock. She carried nineteen people, of whom five were the Turners and their guests. The cabin was full of flowers and steamer baskets.

Thirty-one days later she came into port again, a lifeboat covered with canvas trailing at her stern.

From the first the captain disclaimed responsibility for me. I was housed in the forecastle and ate with the men. There, however, my connection with the crew and the navigation of the ship ended.

As a matter of fact, I found myself a sort of deck steward, given the responsibility of looking after the shuffleboard and other deck games, the steamer rugs, the cards—for they played bridge steadily—and answerable to George Williams, the colored butler, for the various liquors served on deck.

The work was easy, and the situation rather amused me. After an effort or two to bully me, one of which resulted in my holding him over the rail until he turned gray with fright, Williams treated me as an equal, which was gratifying.

The weather was good, the food fair. I had no reason to repent my bargain. Of the sailing qualities of the Ella there could be no question. The crew, selected by Captain Richardson from the best men of the Turner line, knew their business, and, barring the odor of formaldehyde in the forecastle, which drove me to sleeping on deck for a night or two, everything was going smoothly, at least on the surface.

Smoothly, as far as the crew was concerned. I was not so sure about the after house.

As I have said, owing to the small size of the vessel and the fact that considerable of the space had been used for baths, there were, besides the family, only two guests, a Mrs. Johns, a divorcee, and a Mr. Vail. Mrs. Turner and Miss Lee shared the services of a maid, Karen Hansen, who, with a stewardess, Henrietta Sloane, occupied a double cabin. Vail had a small room, as had Turner, with a bath between which they used in common. Mrs. Turner's room was a large one, with its own bath, into which Elsa Lee's room also opened. Mrs. Johns had a room and bath. Roughly and not drawn to scale, the living quarters of the family were arranged like the diagram in a later chapter.

I have said that things were not going smoothly in the after house. I felt it rather than saw it. The women rose late—except Miss Lee, who was frequently about when I washed the deck. They chatted and laughed together, their chairs in a group, while the men were below for a wrap. They looked past me rather than at me, gave me their orders quietly but briefly and did not even take the trouble to ignore me.

But that morning after they had settled to bridge she followed me to the rail, out of ear shot. I straightened and took off my cap, and she stood looking at me, unsmiling.

"Unclinch your hands!" she said.

"I beg your pardon!" I straightened their attention was drawn to it, looked at the sea.

The men were violently opposed types—Turner, tall, heavy shouldered, morose by habit, with a prominent nose and rapidly thinning hair, and with strong, pale blue eyes, congested from hard drinking; Vail, shorter by three inches, dark, good looking, with that dusky flush under the skin which shows good red blood, and as temperate as Turner was dissipated.

CHAPTER II.

I Unclinch My Hands.

VAIL was strong too. After I had held Williams over the rail I turned to find him looking on, amused. And when the frightened darky had taken himself, muttering threats, to the galley, Vail came over to me and ran his hand down my arm.

"Where did you get it?" he asked.

"Oh, I've always had some muscle," I said. "I'm in bad shape now, just getting over fever."

"Fever, eh? I thought it was jail. Look here!"

He threw out his biceps for me to feel. It was a ball of iron under my fingers. The man was as strong as an ox. He smiled at my surprise, and, after looking to see that no one was in sight, offered to mix me a highball from a decanter and siphon on a table.

I refused.

"Have you any idea, Leslie, how much whisky there is on board?"

"Williams has considerable, I believe. I don't think there is any in the forward house. The captain is a teetotaler."

"I see. When these decanters go back Williams takes charge of them?"

"Yes. He locks them away."

"Empty them, Leslie," he said. "Do you understand? Throw what is left overboard. And, if you get a chance at Williams' key, pitch a dozen or two quarts overboard."

"And be put in irons!"

"Not necessarily. I think you understand me. I don't trust Williams. In a week we could have this boat fairly dry."

"There is a great deal of wine."

He scowled. "Dash Williams, anyhow! His instructions were—but never mind about that. Get rid of the whisky."

Turner coming up the companionway at that moment, Vail left me. I had understood him perfectly. It was common talk in the forecastle that Turner was drinking hard and that, in fact, the cruise had been arranged by his family in the hope that, away from his clubs, he would alter his habits—a fallacy, of course.

Early as it was, he was somewhat the worse for it that morning. He made directly for me. It was the first time he had noticed me, although it was the third day out. He stood in front of me, his red eyes flaming, and, although I am a tall man, he had an inch perhaps the advantage of me.

"What's this about Williams?" he demanded furiously. "What do you mean by a thing like that?"

"He was bullying me. I didn't intend to drop him."

The ship was rolling gently. He made a pass at me with a magazine he carried and almost lost his balance. The women had risen and were watching from the corner of the after house. I caught him and steadied him until he could clutch a chair.

"You try any tricks like that again, and you'll go overboard!" he stormed. "Who are you anyhow? Not one of our men!"

I saw the quick look between Vail and Mrs. Turner and saw her come forward, Mrs. Johns followed her, smiling.

"Marsh," Mrs. Turner protested, "I told you about him—the man who had been ill."

"Oh, another of your friends!" he sneered, and looked from me to Vail with his ugly smile.

That was on Monday, the third day out. Up to that time Miss Lee had not noticed me, except once, when she found me scrubbing the deck, to comment on a corner that she thought might be cleaner, and another time in the evening, when she and Vail sat in chairs until late, when she had sent me below for a wrap. She looked past me rather than at me, gave me her orders quietly but briefly and did not even take the trouble to ignore me.

But that morning after they had settled to bridge she followed me to the rail, out of ear shot. I straightened and took off my cap, and she stood looking at me, unsmiling.

"Unclinch your hands!" she said.

"I beg your pardon!" I straightened out my fingers, conscious for the first time of my clinched fists, and even opened and closed them once or twice to prove their relaxation.

"That's better. Now, won't you try to remember that I am responsible for your being here, and be careful?"

"Then take me away from here and put me with the crew. I am stronger now. Ask the captain to give me a man's work."

"We prefer to have you here," she said coldly, and then, evidently repenting her manner: "We need a man here, Leslie. Better stay. Are you comfortable in the forecastle?"

"Yes, Miss Lee."

She turned to leave, smiling. It was the first time she had thrown even a fleeting smile my way, and it went to my head.

"And Williams? I am to submit to his insolence?"

She stopped and turned, and the smile faded.

"The next time," she said, "you are to drop him!"

But during the remainder of the day she neither spoke to me nor looked, as far as I could tell, in my direction. She flirted openly with Vail, rather, I thought, to the discomfort of Mrs. Johns, who had appropriated him to herself—sang to him in the cabin, and in the long hour before dinner, when the others were dressing, walked the deck with him, talking earnestly. They looked well together, and I believe he was in love with her.

"She's still the she devil of the Turner line."

Turner had gone below, grimly good-humored, to dress for dinner, and I went aft to chat, as I often did, with the steersman. On this occasion it happened to be Charlie Jones. Jones was not his name so far as I know. It was some inordinately long and different German inheritance, and so, with the facility of the average crew, he had been called Jones. He was a benevolent little man, highly religious, and something of a philosopher.

"Setz du dich," he said and moved over so that I could sit on the grating on which he stood. "The sky is fine tonight. Wunderschon!"

"It always looks good to me," I observed, filling my pipe and passing my tobacco bag to him. "I may have my doubts now and then on land, Charlie, but here between the sky and the sea I'm a believer, right enough."

We were silent for a time. The ship rolled easily; now and then she dipped her bowsprit with a soft swish of spray; a school of dolphins played astern, and the last of the land birds that had followed us out flew in circles around the masts.

The door into the main cabin beyond was open. It was dark with the summer twilight except for the four rose shaded candles on the table, now laid for dinner. A curious effect it had—the white cloth and gleaming pink an island of cheer in a twilight sea, and to and from this rosy island, making short excursions, advancing, retreating, disappearing at times, the ovm white ship that was Williams' shirt bosom.

Charlie Jones, bending to the right and raised to my own height by the grating on which he stood, looked over my shoulder. Dinner was about to be served. The women had come out.

I had been the guest of honor on a steam yacht a year or two before after a game. There had been pink lights on the table, I remembered, and the place cards at dinner the first night out had been caricatures of me in fighting trim. There had been a girl too. For the three days of that week end cruise I had been mad about her. Before that first dinner, when I had known her two hours, I had kissed her hand and told her I loved her!

Vail and Miss Lee had left the others and come into the chart room. As Charlie Jones and I looked he bent over and kissed her hand.

The sun had gone down. My pipe was empty, and from the galley, forward, came the odor of the forecastle supper. Charlie was coughing, a racking paroxysm that shook his wiry body. He leaned over and caught my shoulder as I was moving away.

"New paint and new canvas don't make a new ship," he said, choking back the cough. "She's still the old Ella, the she devil of the Turner line. Pink lights below and not a rat in the hold! They left her before we sailed, boy. Every rope was crawling with 'em."

The odor of formaldehyde in the forecastle having abated, permission for the crew to sleep on deck had been withdrawn. But the weather as we turned south had grown insufferably hot. The reek of the forecastle sickened me—the odor of fresh paint, hardly dry, of musty clothing and sweaty bodies.

I asked Singleton, the first mate, for permission to sleep on deck and was refused. I went down, obediently enough, to be driven back with nausea. And so, watching my chance, I waited until the first mate, on watch, disappeared into the forward cabin to eat the night lunch always prepared by the cook and left there. Then, with a blanket and pillow, I crawled into the starboard lifeboat and settled myself for the night. The lookout saw me, but gave no sign.

It was not a bad berth. As the ship listed the stars seemed to sway above me, and my last recollection was of the Great Dipper performing dignified gyrations in the sky.

I was aroused by one of the two lookouts, a young fellow named Burns. He was standing below, rapping on the side of the boat with his knuckles. I sat up and peered over at him and was conscious for the first time that the weather had changed. A fine rain was falling. My hair and shirt were wet.

"Something doing in the chart room," he said cautiously. "Thought you might not want to miss it."

He was in his bare feet, as was I. Together we hurried to the after house. The steersman, in oilskins, was at his post, but was peering through the barred window into the chart room, which was brilliantly lighted. He stepped aside somewhat to let us look in. The loud and furious voices which had guided us had quieted, but the situation had not relaxed.

Singleton, the first mate, and Turner were sitting at a table littered with bottles and glasses, and standing over them, white with fury, was Captain Richardson. In the doorway to the main cabin, dressed in pajamas and a bathrobe, Vail was watching the scene.

"I told you last night, Mr. Turner," the captain said, banging the table with his fist, "I won't have you interfering with my officers or with my ship. That man's on duty, and he's drunk!"

"Your ship!" Turner sneered thickly. "It's my ship, and I—I discharge you!"

He got to his feet, holding to the table. "Mr. Singleton (hic) from now on you're captain—Captain Singleton! How—how d'ye like it?"

Mr. Vail came forward, the only cool one of the four.

"Don't be a fool, Marsh," he protested. "Come to bed. The captain's right."

Turner turned his pale blue eyes on Vail, and they were as full of danger as a snake's. "You go to ——!" he said. "Singleton, you're the captain. D'ye hear? If Rich—if Richardson gets funny put him—in irons!"

Singleton stood up, with a sort of swagger. He was less intoxicated than Turner, but ugly enough. He faced the captain with a leer.

"Sorry, old fellow," he said, "but you heard what Turner said!"

The captain drew a deep breath. Then, without any warning, he leaned across the table and shot out his clinched fist. It took the mate on the point of the chin, and he folded up in a heap on the floor.

Turner picked up a bottle from the table and made the same inco-ordinate pass with it at the captain as he had at me the morning before with his magazine. The captain did not move. He was a big man, and he folded his arms with their hairy wrists across his chest.

"Mr. Turner," he said, "while we are on the sea I am in command here. You know that well enough. You are drunk tonight. In the morning you will be sober, and I want you to remember what I am going to say. If you—interfere—again—with—me—or—my—officers—I—shall—put—you—in—irons."

He started for the after companionway, and Burns and I hurried forward out of his way—Burns to the lookout, I to make the round of the after house and bring up, safe from detection, by the wheel again. The mate was in a chair, looking sick and dazed, and Turner and Vail were confronting each other.

"You know that is a lie," Vail was saying. "She is faithful to you, as far as I know, although I'm d—d if I know why." He turned to the mate roughly. "Better get out in the air."

Once again I left my window to avoid discovery. The mate, walking slowly, made his way up the companionway to the rail. The man at the wheel reported in the forecastle, when he came down at the end of his watch, that Singleton had seemed dazed and had stood leaning against the rail for some time, occasionally cursing to himself; that the second mate had come on deck and had sent him to bed and that the captain was shut in his cabin with the light going.

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

A Nebraska Girl Propounds a Christmas Riddle.

TRY TO GUESS THE ANSWER.

Solution Is Easy to Those Who Try to Help the Distressed—Many Other Things of Interest to Little People. Amusing Games.

The following Christmas riddle was prepared by Camilla Edholm, a twelve-year-old Omaha girl and the daughter of the secretary of the Nebraska Association For the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis.

First of all, I am a small piece of paper nearly an inch square, and I carry on my back something which will make me stick closer to you than a sand bur.

My face is red and green and white, as all things should be at Christmas time, and I remind you of snow and sleighs and Christmas trees and Santa Claus. I am very neat and trim, for I am scalloped all the way round my edge like Christmas cookies.

I have had my picture taken, and there are now over 100,000,000 of me in almost every state. In fact, all over this country there are people who know me and send for me to come and help them make their friends happy.

You may burn, tear, cut me up or throw me away, but although I may be destroyed my meaning never can be lost. It is something that will last forever, and it is stamped right on my face, where you can see it the first thing. It has helped many, many people, and it will help many more.

I bring happiness and cheer to every place I go besides the pleasures of the givers when they wrap up their Christmas packages and then put my little face where it will be seen. I am usually put on the back of the package right beside the name of my sender, but I am also found on the inside too.

You may find me yourself at Christmas time—that is, if you will know me from my description, and I hope you will, because I want you to understand my message.

I am the Red Cross Christmas seal.

The Bobolink.

In the springtime you may see the pretty bobolink in almost every meadow and hear its cheery song at almost all hours of the day. The bobolink is beautifully colored with black and creamy white. The mother and the little birds are yellowish brown, and the male bird changes its color in early autumn and becomes yellowish brown, too, and after he gets this color he does not sing any more till spring comes and he gets his black and creamy white dress again.

A King's Typewriter.

It sounds like an old time fairy tale brought up to date, but it is really true that a golden typewriter was recently built for the personal use of King Alfonso of Spain. Every part of the machine is heavily plated with gold, the space bar is made of mother of pearl, and the royal arms occupy the space usually pre-empted by the nameplate. The case is of polished mahogany inlaid with fine woods and jewels.

Letter Changes.

Change the first letter, and from a period of time make a river, a bird, a month, a negative, a road, a fairy, happy, made of grass, a song, compensation, a fish, a tree, to utter.

Answers—Day, Tay, jay, May, may, way, fay, gay, hay, lay, pay, ray, bay, ay.

Federal Aid Given Society.

Washington, Jan. 3.—A total of $20,500,000 was spent during 1914 in fighting tuberculosis, according to the annual report of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis made public today.

Sixty-six and eight tenths per cent of the sum named was appropriated by federal, State or municipal authorities, while the remaining third was raised by popular subscription. The money was spent in all branches of the campaign against the white plague, $925,000 being expended for the treatment of prisoners and insane sufferers.

TWO METHODIST CHURCHES HOLD UNION SERVICES.

An Evangelistic Campaign Under Way in This City—To Last 2 Weeks—Meetings Being Held At State Street Church.

Last evening at 7.30 the two Methodist congregations of this city commenced a two-week series of special meetings. The Rev. George Stockwell of First Church delivered the address last night and he will have general direction. A crowded auditorium greeted the speaker.

Meetings will be held each evening with the exception of Saturday. The pastors of the two kindred churches of Oswego are to assist and deliver addresses. Then the two Fulton ministers, Rev. H. D. Holmes and Geo. Stockwell are to co-operate with them in similar services at one of the Oswego churches.

ST. MARY'S CHURCH NOTES.

At the church of St. Mary's Immaculate Conception yesterday, the Rev. Father Lindsman paid a very handsome tribute to the late Father Smith founder of the church; also to Father Carney. The church was completed 1854, and next Wednesday high mass will be observed in commemoration of the church's sixtieth anniversary.

The the early morning mass the Holy Name Society received communion in a body. Immediately after vespers five new members were received, and agreed to abide by the rules and regulations of the society.

At the early morning mass the school rooms, and the annual election of officers followed. Those elected for the coming year are as follows: President, Fred Miller; 1st vice-president, Joe Bray; 2nd vice-president, Simon Frawley; treasurer, Fred Schneider; secretary, John Sullivan; grand marshall, Soleman Boutim; organist, Prof. Fred Keegan.

A few other business matters were taken up, and the meeting was adjourned until further notice.

RECEPTION A SUCCESS.

The reception and silver tea held at the Jewish Communal Home, Syracuse, under the Council of Jewish women yesterday was a decided success. It is estimated 250 persons attended and the receipts were thought far beyond expectations.

The new building, Marshall Memorial Hall, was thrown open and guests were conducted through the handsome building which in its profusion of pink and white decorations presented a pretty picture.

A number of local people attended the affair.

SERIES OF SERMON BY REV. DR. ROBERTSON.

The Rev. Dr. Chas. S. Robertson of the Presbyterian church is giving a series of popular sermons at the Sunday 5 o'clock vesper services. "The Power of the Sun" will be the topic Jan. 10. "The Bible and Science," Jan. 17; "The Demand for Men," Jan. 24; A musical program will be given by the chorus on Jan. 31.

The public is invited to be present at any or all services.

MAYOR FOX MAKES APPOINTMENT.

Mayor F. E. Fox has announced the appointments to the city boards. A. E. Krause replaced Joseph Connors of the sixth ward on the board of education. Dr. Gladman and Frederick Miller complete this board.

Dr. H. N. Doane, H. L. Paddock and Joseph Connors comprise the Hospital Executive Board. Jesse Morrill and J. C. O'Brien are the retiring members.

MINETTO'S GROWTH DUE TO ENERGY

HOW A MODEST SETTLEMENT TWENTY YEARS BACK HAS BEAUTIFIED BY RECENT IMPROVEMENTS.

Minetto, Jan. 4.—To a person who has not visited this community during the past five years the improvements that have taken place in that time, in the last year in fact, are more noticeable than to a resident.

The wonderful barge canal improvements, with the new river bridge to be built this summer, will redound to the village prosperity. There are many persons here who can recall the beginning of the present mammoth shade cloth plant, and such the shock resulting from the death of everybody's friend and benefactor, C. B. Benson, does recall that time.

Then too, there are not many places of this size that can boast of so fine a railroad station. Fulton, with her fine new bridge and other advantages will have to wait some time to be able to show as fine a one.

The recently constructed homes and brick tenement houses are but an indication of the possibilities that await this place.

C. B. BENSON DIED SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

Becoming Ill on Empire United Car He Breathed His Last Before Reaching Oswego.

(Oswego Times)

Cadwell B. Benson, 75, of Minetto, one of the best known capitalists of Oswego county and a pioneer in the shade cloth industry, died suddenly Saturday afternoon on a suburban car between Minetto and Oswego. He had boarded the car at Minetto, intending to come to Oswego on business, and immediately after getting on complained of not feeling well, and asked that the trolley office have a physician meet the car in Oswego. After the car left Minetto he lapsed into a state of coma and died before the arrival in Oswego. In the meantime Dr. F. L. Sinclair had been summoned and he met the car, but Mr. Benson was dead.

The body was transferred from the car to Dain's undertaking rooms and Coroner Vowinkel pronounced the death due to heart trouble and decided an inquest was not necessary.

Mr. Benson was educated in the public schools of Geddes and Syracuse and found his first employment with E. R. Holden, then general agent of the Delaware & Lackawanna Coal Co., in Syracuse. In 1864 he settled in the village of Minetto, partly at the suggestion of A. S. Page, who was then extensively engaged in the manufacture of lumber. Mr. Benson engaged in contracting, becoming associated with his uncles, James J. Belden and A. Caldwell Belden of Syracuse. They built a railroad in Pennsylvania, portions of the Buffalo and West Shore railroad and the Carthage and Adirondack railroad, of which Mr. Benson was made general manager. In these extensive undertakings Mr. Benson showed rare business qualifications and executive ability of a high order In 1879 he joined with A. S. Page and Charles Tremain to form the Minetto Shade Cloth Co., later sold to the Minetto-Meridan Co. in 1909. This was one of the first shade cloth companies in the county and from a very small plant it grew to be one of the largest industries of the kind in the world.

Careful Financier.

Mr. Benson was recognized through out this section of the state as a shrewd and careful financier and a man whose business judgment could be depended upon in all matters of importance. He was president of the Minetto Shade Cloth Co., for many years before its sale; a member of the board of directors of the Second National Bank of Oswego; a former vice-president of the Syracuse, Lake Shore and Northern Railroad; and a director in the Oswego County Savings Bank, besides being largely interested in many other industries.

He was a man who took the greatest interest in both church and charitable affairs and gave freely of both time and his resources toward the support of the church and the relief of the poor. How much he gave was known only to him and to those whose sufferings he relieved. He was a member of Grace church, Oswego.

NEW YEARS TWINS.

Twins were born on New Years day to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ranous at Minetto. This is the second pair of twins the stork has left the Ranouses. The first are now eight years old.

PATENTS ISSUED TO OSWEGO CO. INVENTORS.

Fultonians Secured Four Rights to Manufacture Utilities; Western End Leads.

That Oswego county's men were active during 1914 in the matter of inventing and, securing patents upon, articles in general use, may be seen from the following list of names. These patents were issued through the agency of a Rochester firm:

FATHER LOWERY'S WILL

The Rev. Father John F. Lowery, L.L. D., late rector of St. Mary's church in Troy and formerly of St. John's church, this city, left his entire residuary estate to the poor of his parish. It is estimated that the estate amounts to $50,000. The largest bequest is to Frank C. Keating, a nephew of Utica, who is given $750 and a gold watch. Several other nieces and grandnieces receive from $25 to $200. Miss Jeanette Boldman, of Memands, is given $200 for masses for the repose of his soul and a picture by Raphael, Madonna of the Chair. It is announced that the proceeds of the sale of his pictures and library are to go to the poor of the parish as part of the residue of the estate. The will was executed on Father Lowery's assistants, Fathers April 22d, 1914, and was witnessed by Edward A. Walsh and Thomas J. Loughlin.

"AUNTIE" McCASLIN ENDED LIFE.

Mrs. Sophia McCaslin Grew Tired of Her 90 Years.

Mrs. Sophia McCaslin, known throughout this section as "Auntie" McCaslin ended her life at Little Utica late Saturday afternoon, by an overdose of heart medicine.

The aged woman whose years numbered 90 was discouraged because of feebleness and inability to "do things" although to her many friends she was ever a surprise in her accomplishments, especially in needlework.

"Auntie" made her home with her son John and granddaughter Hazel. She was not regarded as a despondent person, and on Saturday morning when she seemed restless the family did not think there was cause for worry. However, shortly after noon Miss McCaslin overheard the old lady say "I'm tired of living" and coupled with her words her manner aroused suspicion and it was discovered she had taken an overdose of medicine used for heart attacks.

Immediately a doctor was summoned but before help could reach her she died.

Dr. F. H. Dowd, health officer at Lysander was called to investigate and reported the case one of suicide caused by discouragement.

W. C. T. U. SERVICES.

Prayer services will be conducted by the W. C. T. U. in the Free Methodist church, 3d and State sts., from 3 to 5 o'clock, on Jan. 7. The president of the Union announces that "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of," therefore, there should be a large attendance at the services, of all persons who desire the best things for this city and nation.

GOV. ELIMINATES POLITICS FROM DEPARTMENT

Governor Whitman to Hold Department Heads Strictly to the Performance of the Duties for Which They Have Been Appointed—Need Not Consult Him About Details.

New York, Jan. 3.—Gov. Charles S. Whitman will not tolerate politics in state charitable institutions, state hospitals for the insane, State Department of Health and other departments of a kindred nature according to a statement by the Governor to the S. C. A. A. News, the official publication of the State Charities Aid Association, printed in its current number.

"Many persons have wished to lay before me particular matters relating to the detailed work or organization of the state charitable institutions, state hospitals for the insane, state health department, and other departments of kindred nature," says Governor Whitman. "I would like to say to all such that these matters lie within the discretion and public duty of the heads of these departments. I do not wish that departmental authorities should delay their work in order to consult me about details. I shall expect heads of departments to perform the duties for which they have been appointed and shall hold them responsible. If politics has crept into any of these departments, I expect the departmental authorities to eliminate it and to keep these social welfare activities free from political entanglements. Politics does not mix well with health and charity."

Owens Says Taft Is Afraid of Reforms

Oklahoma Man Claims In Them Lie Real Representative Government

Washington, Jan. 4.—Declaring former President Taft's opposition to the initiative and referendum is "part and parcel of a nation-wide campaign being conducted by the reactionary interests to block the progress of popular government," Senator Robert L. Owen of Oklahoma, today attacked the former president in his speech opening the second conference of the national popular government league. "Mr. Taft does not trust the people," said Senator Owens, "and fears the recall as a burnt child dreads the fire. He denounces the initiative, referendum and recall as the complete negation of the representative system of government. The exact contrary is the case. It is the complete development of representative government compelling representatives to represent the people instead of, for example, the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad. If representatives do not pass the laws the people want, the people can initiate and pass them themselves. It is nonsense to talk about the initiative and referendum destroying representative government when investigation shows that over 98 per cent. of the laws passed in states now having the initiative and referendum are passed by the state legislatures and are not challenged by referendum petition.

"The plain truth is that Mr. Taft does not believe in the wisdom or the self-governing power of the people. He believes in the rule of the few obtained through the convention system. He is moved in part in his hostility against these measures by the fact that Theodore Roosevelt and about 4,000,000 Progressives and a larger number of Progressive Democrats favored them."

Many distinguished advocates of Progressive government are in attendance at the convention. Among them are Prof. Lewis J. Johnson of Harvard University; Richard S. Childs, of the National short ballot association, and Senators Norris, Kenyon and Clapp.

Judson King, executive secretary, made a report reviewing the work of the league during the year, including its attempt to defeat Roger Sullivan for the United States senatorship from Illinois.

LOCAL SPORTING ITEMS.

Syracuse, Jan. 4. — The winter leaguers were yesterday commenting of the return to town of well known fellow citizens.

It's funny how quick a person's fame will spread when he is able to break into big league baseball.

There's Jimmy Walsh, the man referred to, and there Grove Clisel and Alexander (Phillie's 1912-13-14) known to hundreds of Fulton fans before the habitants of the Quaker city ever gave him the once over.

Now, Alex is known the world over, as America's star pitcher. James Walsh a world's series performer has made quite a bit of reading himself. He too, was seen at Star Park.

The two have been on the recently completed all-American, all-National tour of the west and the Hawaiian Islands. The all-stars played their last game of the tour in San Diego, Cal., last Sunday, Jimmy is quoted as saying:

"The Hawaiians are great baseball fans, although they have not seen any major league teams there since 1887, when Spaulding's touring teams visited the islands. Between six and seven thousand spectators turned out to see our games there. The game proved a revelation to the natives, for when Grover Alexander and Bill James began pitching not a sound could be heard, for the playing of the two teams simply bewildered the natives.

"The Hawaiians are anxious to have the all-star teams return to the islands in 1915, and it is probable that Frank Bancroft, who had charge of this year's tour, will plan another tour next winter."

From Utica, the word comes that Mike O'Neil, who has so successfully managed the State league representing that city for four or five years is at a disagreement with the club officials as to an increase in salary. Mike won the pennant the first year he was there and has always been a fighter for wins and a developer of new or half-tried material.

M. J. ranked with the best in the league, the same being true of him as a hitter and manager. He could have had the Utica management again, but the league adopted a low salary limit, and Utica, having decided to run the team at as little expense as possible, refused to grant anybody an increase.

Mike commenced his managerial career at Elmira in 1910, and finished third, only a few games away from the pennant-winning Wilkes-Barre team. Salary differences caused him to quit the Colonels and join the Utes as a player. He had the reputation of being able to get a team together for less money than any of the other managers that have been in the league and still make a good showing.

* * *

And now it's the Irish who are being hit by the war. Word has been sent out that the Queen's Own infantry regiment of Toronto will sail for the European battleground January 15th, and President James J. McCaffery of the Toronto (International league) team is captain of one of the companies of that regiment.

Interesting Little Boy.

Master Gibson Prather, the interesting little son of Prof. J. G. Prather and Mrs. Prather, it seems was not born to monotony of existence. Several months ago he tried the merits of toadstools as food and a physician's prompt attention saved him from serious consequences. A few weeks ago he fell from a bed and broke his arm, but not his dauntless spirit. Saturday morning he again raised the neighborhood in which he resides to a pitch of excitement by eating a mothball. Again a physician's ministrations saved him from ill consequences. Through all of the stir and hubbub Master Gibson alone remained cool, announcing to a belated neighbor "I ate a whole one" with the air of one who had done an enviable feat.—Harrodsburg (Ky.) Leader.

TOO MUCH FOR A PHILADELPHIA LAWYER

A young foreigner was being tried in court, says the Public Ledger, and the questioning by the lawyers on the opposite side began.

"Now, Laszky, what do you do?"

"Ven?" asked Laszky.

"When you work, of course" said the lawyer.

"Vy, work——"

"I know," said the lawyer, "but what at?"

"At a bench."

"Oh!" groaned the lawyer. "Where do you work at a bench."

"In a factory."

"What kind of a factory?"

"Brick."

"You make bricks?"

"No, de factory is made uv bricks."

"Now, Laszky, listen," said the lawyer. "What do you make in that factory?"

"Eight dollars a week."

"No, no! What does the factory make?"

"I dunno, a lot uv money, I think."

"Now, listen! What kind of goods does the factory produce?"

"Oh," Laszky, "good goods."

"I know, but what kind of good goods?"

"The best."

"The best of what?"

"The best there is."

"Of what?"

"Of dose goods."

"Your honor," said the lawyer, "I give up."

Resolved That——

I will endeavor to be kind at all times, both to mankind and animals.

I will be courteous and considerate to the aged, realizing that the burden of their years makes the lightest burden seem heavy.

I will be gentle to women and little children, with due regard for their weaknesses and frailties. To the sick and afflicted I will be merciful and kind.

I will keep my troubles and heartaches to myself, so that other hearts will not be burdened by the weight of my misfortune.

I will endeavor at all times to be cheerful, and smile, so that my smile may be an incentive for others to smile. I will endeavor to be unselfish, not striving for more than what is mine in all fairness, and realizing that others have rights and deserve consideration.

I will earnestly try to avoid saying unkind things to people and about them, realizing that slander is a blow from behind, and the act of a coward, and I know that kind words have eternal life. In short, I will try to make this sad old world less sad, because I will never pass this way again. Every influence, ignoble or unkind, goes out from me like the vapor from the bottle and can never be recalled. This is my resolve, and may the Power that rules the world keep me steadfast.

SUSAN L. DAY.

Susan L. Day, 82, died at her home 358 S. 6th st. Sunday evening after a long illness. Surviving are three daughters, Mrs. Fred Hall and Mrs. W. L. Grant of this city, Mrs. Francis Cornell of Syracuse, also one son, Richard C. Day of Albany and a sister, Mrs. Achsia Marvin of Lysander.

The funeral will be held Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock from the home in S. 6th st. Undertaker E. S. Brown is in charge of arrangements.

The Rev. M. J. Peters of the Zion Episcopal church will officiate. Burial will be made at Granby Center.

NEW RULE SUSPENDED.

Relative to Shortage of Freight By the Steamboat Companies.

Because of strong opposition on the part of merchants' associations throughout this part of the state the enforcement of the recently enacted rule of the steamship companies reducing the free storage of export articles in their warehouses from ten days to forty-eight hours has been deferred until May 1st.

Meanwhile an opportunity will be given the opposing organizations to present their side of the question at a hearing. This rule, which was to have taken effect January 1st, was one of great importance to manufacturers of export articles in Oswego as well as other cities. Everywhere it was held that forty-eight hours was not sufficient time for shippers to arrange for a transfer of their consignments.

JANE E. IRVINE.

Jane E. Irvine, 82, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. E. L. McClellen, 355 Broadway, Saturday afternoon.

Mrs. Irvine was born in Lysander and has lived in Fulton and vicinity all her life. Surviving are two daughters Mrs. May Luther, Rosmon, British, Col., Mrs. McClellan and one son, Melvin J. Irvine of Yonkers, N. Y.

The funeral will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2.30 from 355 Broadway. Rev. Geo. B. Stockwell, assisted by Rev. Chas. Robertson will officiate. Burial will be made at Lysander. Undertaker E. S. Brown is in charge of funeral arrangements.

Opinions

Speaker Sweet.

Speaker Thaddeus C. Sweet of Oswego county, who in a spirited contest in the Assembly last year was nominated and elected Speaker, is a candidate for re-election this year. Speaker Sweet had a difficult problem to face at the beginning of the legislative session of 1914. The Republicans had a very narrow margin in the Assembly and there were just enough independents with progressive tendencies and kicking inclinations to endanger the Republican control of the Assembly. It was fortunate, however, for the Republican party that under the guiding hand and skillful management of Speaker Sweet the Republican majority in the Assembly was able to act in harmony and they made a splendid record during the last session of the legislature, which was one of the strong factors in helping to win the Republican victory at the polls on election day.

Under these circumstances it is generally conceded that Speaker Sweet is entitled to re-election and we are glad to learn that no other candidate has entered the field against him and that he will be unanimously re-elected Speaker of the Assembly. His clean record, his able and skillful leadership, his exceptional qualifications as a presiding officer, all merit the distinction which is about to be conferred upon him—a unanimous re-election.—Lyons Republican.

The Economic Cause of Wars

Europe is at war, and the powers blame one another. The immediate cause can be traced to Austria's demand upon Servia, Russia's expressed decision that Servia should not be crushed by Austria, and Germany's apparent understanding with Austria that she would stand by her in whatever she should decide to do, of which Germany, or rather the war-making powers of Germany, appear to have had accurate foreknowledge. These are purely the chronological dry bones of current history.

Back of this conflagration, however, are other causes. Europe has too long been an armed camp, surging with military preparations, vociferous with braggadocio and appeals to the baser instincts of men by conscienceless rulers, and followers of the military trade, to escape the consequences of the bursting of these horrible engendered forces. In the preparation of this witches brew the cauldron must sooner or later have boiled over. How can people go on supplying their rulers with the tools of war, and expect to escape the consequence, with military men all eager to seek an opportunity for trying them out? The thing was too much to hope that the inevitable outburst could be long postponed. This is why to those who look no further the immediate cause of the war seems so absurdly inadequate to the portentous outburst.

But we must look still further than this if we would seek the real cause of the war and the solution of the problem of peace. The Single Taxer alone of all men knows the answer. Those who would pierce the heart of the strange riddle of war must seek it in our philosophy. It is not merely that civilization is yet in its barbaric stage, and that such conflicts must exist until we arrive at a higher stage. This is true, but it is not the whole truth. For not only must a true civilization dispense with war, but we shall not have begun a true civilization until we have learned to do without it. Civilization will only begin when the nations begin to disarm. And they will not begin to disarm, nor will a real civilization have begun, until men secure their rights to this earth of ours.

War is but a phase of economic slavery. The cause of wars are the masses of the disinherited. Men are the property of governments and the lords of privilege, who do with them pretty much as they please. But when men perceive their rights as Single Taxers perceive them, even as many Socialists perceive them, they can never again be moved to the killing of men having like rights. From that day on, vast armies can never again be moved across the frontiers of any other people.

Men who know their own rights in the soil of the earth, men to whom at last the words "Rights of Men" are no longer an empty phrase, will respect the like rights of others.

This, then, and only this, will mark the end of all wars, and the crazy piling of armaments on armaments. The only cure for war is democracy and the economic freedom that only democracy can bring. And the end of this war will mark its beginning.—Single Tax Review.

Same Then as Now.

Apollo had proposed taking Venus to the Olympian games.

"How long will it take you to get ready?" he asked.

"About ten minutes," Venus answered.

"By thunder!" muttered Apollo, after waiting half an hour. "When she has only to twist up her hair!"

ROOM FOR THIS

There is room in our midst for an aggressive Humane Society. While it is true our city boasts of such an organization its good works are not known to the community. Our apathy with regard to the animal world is appalling. We see horses, old and half-starved, overloaded, with bleeding shoulders, poorly fed and sleeping in cold, filthy barns after the hardest labor of hauling the heaviest of loads, and we pass them unnoticed. We see some one-time "Black Beauty" tied in our streets during the bitter days, stamping and roughing his poor old hide under his poor old harness as he waits for his driver's step. Perhaps an hour or two later in retracing our trip we still find the poor creature humping, stamping, shivering and waiting in vain.

Homeless dogs, starving cats, half crazed look up appealingly and we pass on.

Yearly we give money by the hundreds of thousands for education and libraries and art museums and what not, yet partially forget the hundreds of creatures appealing for help.

The Bide-a-Wee home for animals in New York city is doing a noble work, and many other towns and city are responding to the call of civilization..

Fulton may not be able to build a home for homeless creatures, but her responsibility is an alive Humane Society.

THE NEW DISTRICT ATTORNEY

Mr. Whitman's first appointment deserves the cordial approval it is receiving. The new District Attorney of New York County, Mr. Perkins, had no political support to deliver and was urged upon Mr. Whitman by no influential citizens, of the breed of statesmen or otherwise. There was nothing to recommend him save downright ability and long, faithful experience in the District Attorney's office. His promotion is the sort of just reward that comes seldom in public life—in any successful business it is the commonplace way of selecting big men for big jobs.

The act made an auspicious beginning for Mr. Whitman's New Year. If he conducts all the state's business in the same spirit there can be no doubt of his success.—New York Tribune.

Business Men for the Trade Commission

Government by commission becomes extremely hazardous when the commissioners are either stupid or dishonest. A United States Supreme Court composed of incompetent laymen would be a menace and a disgrace. A Federal Reserve Board dominated by political climbers and ignorant partisans would wreck the American bank system.

There was a blunder made in the original composition of the Interstate Commerce Commission. A like blunder should not now be committed in the personnel of the Interstate Trade Commission.

A body of men to probe into an engineering problem must know something about engineering, else its work is a farce. No one could trust a report involving medical science were those making it without scientific knowledge.

It is equally impossible for any body of theorists, college professors, authors, politicians and job seekers to weigh properly the relations of this country's stupendous business and give a rational decision. The Interstate Trade Commissioners should be men of business, because they will have their hands upon the very throat of all important business.

To inflict upon this nation a body endowed with such vast powers is itself a perilous experiment. But now that the law of the land authorizes it, the President's duty to appoint only men of the very highest calibre becomes imperative.

Published lists of possible commissioners are not reassuring in this respect. There is a dismal absence of men who have had large experience in trade affairs.

It is bad enough for the business of the country to be forced to undergo a surgical operation. Only surgeons of the most exalted experience should be selected to perform it.—Public Ledger.

WILSON FAMILY NOT AT BALL

Attendance May Be Light at Annual Charity Ball; Hard Times the Reason

Washington, Jan. 4.—The fact that President Wilson and the members of his immediate family will be absent owing to their mourning for the death of Mrs. Wilson last summer, will be the only thing to mar the brilliance of the Charity Ball, to be given for the benefit of the Children's Hospital of Washington at the New Willard Hotel tonight.

Annually the debutantes and matrons of Washington's most elite society and the highest officers of the government flock to this function, and dance the night away.

This year Mrs. Mahlon Pitney, wife of the Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, is chairman of the Ball and of the reception committee. In the receiving line with Mrs. Pitney will stand Mrs. Frederick B. Maguire, Mrs. Thomas T. Gass, Mrs. Horace Westcott, Mrs. Henry C. Corbin, Mrs. Joseph Leiter, Mrs. Clarence Wilson, Mrs. Preston Gibson, Mrs. Reynolds Hitt and Mrs. William J. Flather.

Dancing is to be the chief attraction and since the new dances have come into vogue, Senators, Judges, Cabinet Officers and other high officials of the government vie with the younger set in executing the steps. A supper is to be served, about midnight.

The box-holders for the event include some of the most eminent philanthropists and prominent society people in the country. Among them are numbered John R. McLean of Cincinnati and Washington, Larz Anderson, former minister to Belgium and Mrs. Anderson; Gen. and Mrs. Joseph A. Johnston; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Leiter, Mrs. Thomas F. Walsh, and Admiral and Mrs. Bronson.

Joseph Leiter is chairman of the floor committee and he and his vice-chairman, William C. Marrow, will lead the cotillions. The Marine Band and the United States Engineers' Band will furnish the music, the two sets of musicians playing alternately and thus rendering a continuous program.

The list of patronnesses includes the wives of cabinet officers, senators, representatives in congress members of the judiciary, and the wives of other prominent officials.

The proceeds of the ball go to the Children's Hospital at Washington. Tickets for the supper and dance cost $3.00 apiece.

"Times are hard this year," said Mrs. Pitney, "and there may not be the usual good attendance, but last year the Charity ball raised between $2,500 and $3,000 for the Children's Hospital after all expense had been defrayed and we hope to raise as much tonight.

WANTED—BOOSTERS.

"Say, Mister, jest give a poor feller a boost,
My back is most broke, and my pack is unloosed;
And I can't quite shift it alone for a fact.
Weighs eighty pounds—'s purty solidly packed.
I've jogged twenty mile since the peep o' the day,
And lugged this 'ere bag every step o the way.
Yes, my legs are shaky, and my feet a bit sore,
And I keep my eye peeled for an open door,
If I had some place to come home and roost,
I might not be askin' ye here for a boost."

"My muscles are good for a purty big load,
But for twelve year or more not a mile have I rode.
Ev'ry chap groans with his own heavy lugs,
And what does he care how a tramp peddler tugs?
Of course, to most folks I hain't much account;
But say, I've got feelin's of any amount.
I'm willin' to swaller the bitterest dose,
And to do my drudge, with times hard and close;
But it's worth a whole lot after many a drub,
To strike a few fellers who've jined a Boost Club."

Thus boosters are wanted, of excellent grade:
Boosters not merely of city and trade;
But those who will give weaker fellows a lift,
And cumbersome loads to their own shoulders shift;
And thousands on foot tread their life's weary way,
With backs sorely bending 'neath burdens all day'—
Loads ill proportioned to strength or to age—
Real "down-and-outers" at a critical stage.
What a world this would be, could the strong be induced
One and all, to give falling comrades a boost!

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR

Owing to the fact that there was no paper issued yesterday (New Year's) the second story in the Children's Hour will not appear until Monday Children, learn to look for the "Hour" department—for the present appearing Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

The tale we print below is the second of the series about the person whose name you are to guess:

In youth, this party once got an idea for a thrilling, romantic story. One day, in Springfield, was sitting with his feet on the window sill, chatting with an acquaintance, when he suddenly changed the drift of the conversation by saying: "Did you ever write out a story in your mind? I did when I was a little codger. One day a wagon with a lady and two girls and a man broke down near us, and while they were fixing up, they cooked in our kitchen. The woman had books and read us stories, and they were the first I had ever heard. I took a great fancy to one of the girls; and when they were gone I thought of her a great deal, and one day when I was sitting out in the sun by the house I wrote out a story in my mind. I thought I took my father's horse and followed the wagon, and finally I found it, and they were surprised to see me. I talked with the girl, and persuaded her to elope with me; and that night I put her on my horse, and we started off across the prairie. After several hours we came to a camp; and when we rode up we found it was the one we had left a few hours before, and went in. The next night we tried again, and the same thing happened—the horse came back to the same place; and then we concluded that we ought not to elope. I stayed until I had persuaded her father to give her to me. I always meant to write that story out and publish it, and I began once; but I concluded that it was not much of a story. But I think that was the beginning of love with me."

A MOVING MOUNTAIN.

Ask the older folks to tell you what the smoking of the earth is called. Most people forget that geology is not altogether a history of the past. The forces that made the mountains are still going on. Some mountains are growing, some are wearing down. Because these processes take a long time to show results, one is apt to form the idea that they have ceased, and that the face of the earth is fixed once for all. A case of geological action so rapid as to be easily observed is the moving mountain in Hunterdon County, New Jersey.

This "mountain" is a knob, or mound which is sliding down the side of a full-sized mountain.

It has filled old turnpikes and roadways, and threatens to slide suddenly and do great damage. The landslide already covers twenty-five acres of one farm, and has destroyed the fences of another.

At the point where the mound has torn away from the mountain is a deep gully in which have been found many Indian relics. The place is so dangerous from ledges and banks which threaten to fall that nobody has dared explore the cleft thoroughly.

U. S. YIELDED TO GREAT BRITAIN IN 1862

Stopped Seizures of Suspicious Vessels After Earnest British Protest.

Washington, Jan. 3.—When the United States was engaged with rebellion at home in 1862 and Great Britain, the greatest overseas trading power, was neutral as between the United States and the Southern Confederacy, Great Britain lodged a protest against detentions of merchant vessels, in almost precisely similar circumstances as the present, and the United States forthwith revoked orders to its navy officers to detain suspicious craft stopped on the high seas pending thorough search.

As in the present case, Great Britain pointed out in her protest against the conduct of the American naval authorities that such seizures might occasionally be expected, and interpolated in her protest the suggestion that only when such seizures on suspicion became "systematic" did the real ground for protest exist.

In the present circumstances, the British have seized and detained more than twenty vessels conveying American cargoes to neutral ports. Whether or not this constitutes "systematic" detention is the question which concerns the international lawyers in drawing an analogy between the conditions existing in 1862 and in 1914-'15.

When William H. Seward, Secretary of State, notified Great Britain that modifications in the orders to naval officers had been made Earl Russell, then British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, sent a dispatch to the British charge d'affairs at Washington in which he said:

"If these orders had been sanctioned and continued in force by the government of the United States they would have called for prompt and firm remonstrance on the part of her majesty's government, and it will be proper that you should intimate to Mr. Seward, while expressing the satisfaction of her majesty's government at their revocation, that her majesty's government are glad to be thereby spared from the necessity of stating their decided objections to their tenor.—"You will say that to order vessels, though apparently and prima facie carrying on a lawful trade, to be systematically seized on the high seas, without any preliminary search, or without the discovery during such search of any strong evidence of suspicion against such vessels, would be to subject the mercantile marine of neutrals to a system of oppression and annoyance which no neutral government could be expected to tolerate."

NIGHT SCHOOLS.

Prof. J. R. Fairgrieve announces the opening of night school at the Phillips st. building tomorrow night, continuing thereafter on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings. Principal Lanigan and Prof. Merrill will be in charge.

Mr. Lawton, instructor in manual training will continue to conduct the Union st. school.

CTIVITY MARKS U. S. TRADE

imism Prevails; Commerce Continues to Expand; New Hope On All Sides

Dun's Weekly Review, Jan. 2. says: The New Year opens with a decided improvement in the business outlook although the actual volume of transactions is still much below the average. At every leading center there is a notable expansion of confidence, owing to the remarkable progress which has been made in restoring the financial situation to normal and in reestablishing the favorable balance of international trade, in spite of the limited shipping facilities. There are, moreover, unmistakable signs of increasing activity in domestic business, notwithstanding that conservatism continues the controlling policy in all quarters. On the constructive side there is the basic soundness of an absence of large stocks carried on credit, while the recent railroad decision is already having the effect of stimulating more liberal contracts for rails, cars and other equipment. The iron and steel industry, though still operating at less than 50 per cent. of capacity, is facing the future with new hope based upon actual indications of improvement. Gross earnings of the common carriers during the first three weeks of December showed a decrease of 12.4 per cent. as compared with the previous year, but all statistics necessarily reflect the depression of the past six months. The holiday trade, while revealing the economy of the people in purchasing cheaper and useful articles rather than costly luxuries, was nevertheless of gratifying volume. This nation's oversea commerce continues to expand, merchandise exports from New York for the latest week showing a material increase over the preceding year, and it is a remarkable fact that, in spite of the war, the total at this port for the entire year will be somewhat in excess of 1913. An advance in cotton is especially helpful to the south, where prosperity so largely depends upon remunerative prices for this crop. In the textile industries there are many mail inquiries which promise a more active spring trade, and the colder weather tends to promote better conditions in footwear. The decline in sterling exchange to the lowest level in over a year, and to a point that would mean gold imports under different circumstances, clearly illustrates the recent remarkable change in the general situation.

Relief Coming.

"Favorable factors predominate in iron and steel as the new year opens and there seems every prospect of relief from the marked depression apparent during 1914. The process of recovery is not expected to be at once rapid or uniform, but all indications point in the right direction. This is ordinarily a quiet period under any conditions, yet some expansion in operations is anticipated after the holidays and more men will find employment as machinery at the mills and furnaces gains momentum. The most encouraging feature is the outlook for increased railroad purchasing; the transporting companies have already commenced to make inquiries for 1915 rail requirements and with a wider demand from this quarter the general situation will improve. Prices in many lines continue at a low level, but in some cases a firmer tendency has developed and concessions are now the exception rather than the rule. Betterment in the scrap material market is reflected in an advance of $1 a ton, heavy melting steel being quoted at $11 and $11.50. Additional coke ovens have been blown in and stocks in the Connellsville region are well cleaned up.

Strong Tone.

"The steadiness of prices in the dry goods markets during a week of seasonably quiet conditions is significant as reflecting a stronger underlying tone than has been in evidence for some time past. Some of the leading lines of bleached cottons have been placed at value and colored goods are held very firm. Many requests were received over the extended Christmas holidays to ship merchandise not due until the middle of January and the first of February, thus indicating that trade is exceeding early expectations. Export sales to the Far East develop slowly, although prices are lower than in three or four years. Openings in fine and fancy cottons for spring has commenced in the large retail stores and conditions in this quarter are being closely watched in the hope that future orders will be increased by jobbers and cutters who already have booked a positive indication of style tendencies in fabrics. Preliminary advance trading in overcoatings of a fancy character is reported on a price level at least 10 per cent. higher than last fall and in the dress goods markets the demand for coverts is increasing.

NEWS ODDITIES.

Among the government measures to come before the Norwegian Storthing when it assembles, after January 10, is an amendment of a paragraph of the constitution concerning the composition of the cabinet. It will provide for the admission of women as members of the government.

The amount of champagne consumed in New York City welcoming the New Year does not appear to have been any less because of the war.

Guglielmo Marconi, of wireless telegraphy fame, has been appointed a member of the Italian Senate by King Victor Emmanuel.

New Year's greetings from the United States to all the world did not circle the globe last night, as has been the custom for many years. The land telegraph and cable systems are in a disorganized condition because of the European War. The Navy Department by prearrangement formerly has flashed the time around the world in a few seconds.

A Government lottery for the benefit of the wounded and relatives of soldiers opened today. It is based on that which proved so successful in 1803, when large sums were raised by this means for the relief of victims of the terrible famine over a large part of the central provinces of Russia. Tickets are $2.50 each, divided into five identically numbered portions by perforations for the benefit of the poorer classes. Those who believe in acquiring the largest number of chances may buy one-fifth part of one ticket. Prizes range from $50,000 downward. The lottery will produce $10,000,000 clear for the purposes named.

The Perry Herald:—"Editing a newspaper in some respects is a good deal like preaching. But, while preachers and editors are criticized for what they do say, no one thinks of giving them credit for what they do not say. Very many people harbor belief that newspapers are eager to publish derogatory things. It's a mistake. There's not a newspaper that could not spring a sensation in the community at any time telling what it knows. There is not a newspaper that does not keep under the lock of secrecy scores of derogatory things that never meet the public eye or reach the public ear."

Has anybody seen anything of a stray libel suit brought by Mr. Barnes of Albany against Mr. Roosevelt of Oyster Bay, which both were so very anxious to have tried before election?

The Safety First Movement took hold of the country to a marked degree last year. Various industries and particularly the railroads and street railways advertised extensively in favor of practicing caution, and the result has been that many are living healthy lives who otherwise would be dead or maimed. The movement has resulted in striking reductions in accidents compared with similar periods the year before. A far-western railroad is one of the latest to testify to the results. In 1913 there were 824 personal injury cases among the employes of the San Pedro Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad, while in 1914 the number was reduced to 544, a decrease of about 39 per cent.—Utica Dispatch.

BIJOU RUSSELL.

Lovers of vaudeville of the kind that the Quirk has produced of late, will find in the bill for Tuesday and Wednesday (matinees and nights) acts that are entirely new to Fulton and of a class better than ever shown here. The list contains names of celebrities in their respective line and great liberality, on the part of the management is shown by the swelling of the bill with the great added attraction, Bijou Russell, the greatest of all single lady dancers in the profession. Many will remember her as appearing one Friday night while on a visit here. So many clamored for her return that by great effort she has been secured for these dates. Matinees 10c and 15c. Nights 10c, 15c and 20c. Reserve seats now.

SUPREME COURT OPENS TODAY

Cases Number One Hundred Four; Two of Importance to be Taken Up

The January trial term of Supreme Court opens at Oswego today, Justice Leonard C. Crouch presiding. The number of cases total 104.

Sarah Davenport and Anna Ranous have brought an action against Howard Corning individually and as executor to set aside the will of John S. Corning, who died several years ago. It is contended undue influence was brought to bear on Mr. Corning when he made the will, Thee other defendants in the action are John Bert Corning, Mary Louise Carson; Annie M. Dunham, Glendora Wilson and Alice E. Perry.

Another action involving in a will is brought by Frank L. Ball against Anthony Salladin as administrator, Hiram J. Ball and Kate Ball, to obtain adjudication upon and determine the validity of the probate of the will of Ruth Ann Ball and for the construction of the will.

Several actions for slander are noted as follows:.

Allie B. Scutt against Henry A. Peckham; Frances M. Hall against Emery P. Dawley; Frances M. Hall against Mabel Howard; George Hulett against Enos Gary; Frances M. Hall against Mary Freeman; Lizzie Paternoster against Tomasco Paucia and Charles A. Peterson against Frank C. Wolever. A Grand Jury will sit in connection with the term.

A number of cases will be presented for consideration by District-Attorney Francis D. Culkin. The wreck of the Lackwanna Flyer at South Granby last October is one of the important cases to be investigated.

The charges of several prisoners held at the county jail for burglary and larceny will be taken up.

Gen. Scott Wants Wilson to Be Firm

Washington, Jan. 4.—Reports that Gen. Villa has sent General Cabral and 8000 troops into Sonora, Mexico, to supersede Mayterena at Naco, brought relief to leaders here today. It was their belief that this may avert a clash with the United States over the border situation.

Major General Scott, who has tried in vain to get Maytorena to agree to the establishment of a neutral border zone has reported that the Cabral troops now are at Casas Grandes.

President Wilson had under consideration recommendations from Gen. Scott that this government take vigorous action to enforce its demands that the firing across the line cease, but officials see a way out of the problem in the move by Villa. They generally were of the opinion today that Cabral would sign an agreement making Nace neutral and permitting General Hill to move his Carranza troops to Agua Prieta, where the Villa army could attack him without endangering life and property on this side of the boundary.

Vatican Receives U. S. Message

Rome, Jan. 4.—It is rumored here today that the U. S. is sending a special envoy to discuss with the Pontiff and his secretary a message that should result in terminating the war in Europe. It is impossible to secure any confirmation of these rumors but they are receiving considerable credit because of the source from which they come.

WILSON GOES TO CALIFORNIA

San Francisco, Jan. 4.—President Wilson will in all probability be the principal speaker at the Inland waterways commission of California annual congress to be held in the exposition auditorium March 25, 26 and 27 according to advices received from Washington. President Wilson telegraphed he would attend if it was possible for him to get away from Washington.

MANN WILL SIGN.

Chicago, Jan. 4.—Publicity attending the coming here of Leslie Mann, outfielder of the Braves, put the local federal league officials on their guard and his meeting with Joe Tinker was staged under cover. It was reported today that Mann would probably sign with the north side organization in a few days.

FRENCH WINNING IN AISNES AND CHAMPAGNE

Paris, Jan. 4.—Though heavy rains have crippled infantry operations between the North sea and the Oisee river, artillery duels between the Germans and the Allies continue with grat violnce. An official statement issued here this afternoon says that at several points at the front French artillery have slences that of the Germans, while in the Aines and the Champagne districts French batteries have established their superiority and shelled the troops of the enemy. Several important points held by the Germans in the Argonne region and between the Argonne and Meuse river have been captured. In upper Alsace the French have taken the heights west of Cermay, and at Steinbach which has been the center of fighting for more than a week the French have captured the center of the town around the church, also the cemetery. At the river Meuse ther was an intermittent cannonade. An attempt was made yesterday by French troops to capture Doureuilles but it was not successful. Progress continues in the forest of La Tretrea.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Constantinople, via Berlin and Amsterdam, Jan. 4—Thee chamber of deputies has passed a bill authorizing the Turkish government to conclude a loan of $25,000,000 at 6 per cent. to carry on the war. Parliament has extended the meratorium until April 13.

Berlin, Jan. 4.—The Russian cruiser Askold attempted to land troops near Jaffa, Syria, on Saturday, according to a dispatch from Constantinople, but when the Turkish coast guards fired upon the Russians they fled to their boats, leaving several dead behind them.

Amsterdam, Jan. 4.—Many German soldiers were killed by bombs thrown by French aviators in an aerial raid upon the aviation station at Etterbeek, near Brussels, Saturday. Advices received here today state that this was the third attack within a week upon Etterbeek and that the French flyers succeeded in partially destroying the German station. It is believed that Etterbeek is the main headquarters of Zeppelin airships being assembled for a raid upon England and that the success of the French attacks will delay the German flight across the North sea.

Gibraltar, Jan. 4.—Private Owen Ross of the British garrison was upheld today for killing Ernest Palm, a German, who was trying to escape. Coroner's jury returned a verdict of justifiable homicide. Palm was buried with full military honors.

Amsterdam, Jan. 4.—The Telegraaf publishes, under reserve, a report current in the Belgian village of Overpelt that all Belgians of the 1914, 1915 and 1916 classes of reservists remaining in Belgium have been ordered to report for enrollment in the German army. This is the first intimation of conscription among the Belgians by the German military authorities.

Six-Day Grind Begins In Buffalo

Buffalo, N. Y., Jan. 4.—Buffalo's six-day grind in which domestic and foreign cycling cracks are participating was started shortly after midnight with ten professional teams entered. The riders started off in bristling style and kept up a dizzy pace through out the night. A 8 o'clock this morning they had covered 157 miles four laps. All teams were tied. They will race all day today concluding a twenty-four hour stretch at 11.30 o'clock tonight that will be a part of the six-day race. The teams will resume the race in positions maintained at 3 o'clock Tuesday.

WOMAN U. S. SENATOR.

Salem, Ore., Jan. 4.—Governor West today announced the appointment of Miss Katheryn Clarke, of Glendale to be state senator to fill a vacancy caused by the resignation of Senator George Deuner, named district attorney for Douglass county.

If seated Miss Clarke will be the first woman to serve in the Senate.

B. T. CLUB OFFICERS.

The Borrowed Time Club elected the following officers at today's annual meeting: president, Dr. G. G. Whitaker; vice president, A. D. Clark; secretary, H. N. Gilbert; treasurer, Major W. D. Ferguson; chaplain, S. P. Mason; entertainment, S. P. Mason, Dr. G. G. Whitaker and H. N. Gilbert.

After the election of officers the secretary read interesting communications from F. A. Arnold, president of the B. T. Club of Seattle, Wash., descriptive of the copper mining industry of Butte, Montana, and also from Prof. L. P. Storms, former Fulton teacher and school commissioner, signed for "Auld Lang Syne." Prof. Storms is now located in Florida.

WOLGAST MUST REST.

Cadillac, Mich., Jan. 4.—While it has been announced that A. D. Wolgast and Joe Shugrue are to box ten rounds in New York on January 13, Wolgast says he is far from certain that he will be able to enter the ring by that time. His physicians have advised him to rest until at least January 23 to allow his hands to get well.

POLISH TOWN TAKEN BY THE GERMAN TROOPS

Berlin Thinks England's Supremacy at Sea Is Ended; Also, That Fall of Warsaw Is a Matter of Early Realization

By FREDERICK WERNER.

Berlin, Jan. 5.—(By wireless)—Germany is jubilant today as a result of official announcements that the British battleship Formidable was sunk by a German submarine, and that the Polish town of Berjimow has been taken by German troops.

The announcement that a submarine had destroyed the Formidable confirmed earlier unofficial reports current here and the rejoicing was increased by the news that the little submrine had escaped, thus setting at rest rumors that she had been sunk by a mine.

German naval experts declare the submarine's feat is further evidence that England's supremacy in the sea is seriously menaced, while the military experts assert that the fall of Borjimow is of great importance in the campaign against Warsaw.

Berjimow lies nearly fifty miles east of the confluence of the Bzura and Rawka rivers and commands a direct highway from Lowicz to Warsaw. The little town and the height upon which it rests had been strongly fortified by the Russians and they made desperate attempts to hold it. After it was captured by the Germans, the Russians made seven attacks in an attempt to recapture the town, but all these were repulsed.

More than 2,000 Russians, mostly Siberian troops, were captured by the Germans at Berjimow. From the position they now occupy the Germans command a wide sweep of the surrounding country and their advance upon Warsaw will be greatly facilitated.

"The Germans are going to break through the Russian lines here unless the Czar's troops forestall this by a general retreat," says the military expert of the Lokal Anzeiger. "The situation south of the Vistula is now more promising than at any other time. Our troops are almost in sight of their goal.

"News from the Galician theatre as conveyed in the Austrian official reports is more reassuring than it had been for several days past. The Austrians state that the repeated efforts of the Russians to break through their lines west and northwest of Gorlice were defeated with heavy losses to the attacking forces.

"Reports from Turkish allies, too, show that the Russians are suffering heavy losses in both men and munitions of war. Ottoman troops captured two Russian military trains between Sari Kamysh and Kars and then destroyed the railroad. The Turks won a decisice victory at Sari Kamysh and have taken 2,000 prisoners, eight cannon and 13 machine guns since Christmas, together with large quantities of ammunition and provisions.

"The Turks have invaded Russian territory in force and at Taushkerd, where they attacked a Russian battalion in a gorge, they killed 200, captured 400 and dispersed the rest."

GERMANS CROSS RIVER PELICA; HEAVY LOSSES

By FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY.

Petrograd, Jan. 5.—A long an irregular battle front extending from the Bzura river south and southwest for eighty miles, the Russians and Germans are again engaged in a terrific battle. The Germans are again on the offensive along this whole front, but the Russians are occupying positions of great strength and reports received from the front today state that the Germans "attacks are being repulsed at all points where their successful advance would prove a menace to the Russians.

At some points the Germans have succeeded in capturing a few of the Russian trenches, only to lose them in counter attacks by the forces of Grand Duke Nicholas. The only point where the Germans have succeeded in holding captured ground is about Belimow, where they have taken part of the town of Berjimow. The Russians still hold their trenches on the eastern outskirts of Berjimow and are making night and day attacks to drive the Germans back.

The Germans suffered heavy losses in their capture of Berjimow and it is believed that they will be unable to hold the ground they have won.

At points along the Pilica river the Germans, by the sacrifice of thousands of men, have succeeded in crossing the stream, but their positions in the valley will prove untenable upon the arrival of Russian reinforcements that have been sent to strengthen the troops holding their heights upon the west bank.

Sunday afternoon three Zeppelins flew over the Russian positions in the forests about Kielce and dropped bombs upon the batteries hidden there. Only one gun was badly damaged. On their return flight the Germans dropped seven bombs upon the town of Kielce, killing more than twenty persons.

Las Palmas, Canary Islands, Jan. 5.—Continuing its daring raids in the Atlantic, the German converted cruiser Kron Prinz Wilhelm has sunk four more vessels owned by French and British concerns, the Bellevue, Montagel, and the Bretagne and Union. The crews of these ships were brought here today by the German steamer Otabi. The Bellevue and Montagel were steamers and the other two vessels were sailing ships.

The Kron Prinz Wilhelm is the former North German Lloyd liner which was converted into a cruiser after the war broke out. She has been active in the South Atlantic.

MOUNTAINS TREMBLE AS GERMAN GUNS THUNDER

By FRANKLIN P. MERRICK.

Paris, Jan. 5.—The great battle line in the western theatre of was has been extended until the lower end of it now touches the Swiss frontier near Sept, while the northern extremity, lying on the North sea near Nieuport, is three hundred and seventy five miles away.

Official dispatches state that the Germans lying east of Cernay (Sennheim) in upper Alsace, have been delivering counter attacks in an effort to recapture lost ground, but all were repulsed. Steinbach has been destroyed by artillery fire and the French are now bending their energies to take Sennheim which lies upon the railway leading into Muelhausen.

French artillery has been mounted upon the recently captured heights northeast of Steinbch and the German lines at Cernay are being vigorously bombarded. The French line has now been extended south from Altkirch to prevent the Germans from trying a flanking operation.

From the southern foothills of the Vosges the battle front lies east of Thann, through Steinbach southward through Aspach and Eglingen near Altkirch to a point near Sept.

A dispatch from Basle, Switzerland, says:

"A motorist who has just arrived here from the vicinity of Steinbach in Upper Alsace, says:—'The fighting in that part of Germany has been formidable for the past three days. The mountains have been trembling with the roar of big guns and the hillsides are running with red, with French and German blood. The valleys are filled with ruined cottages and the carnage of war. The Germans had an extensive system of trenches cut through the rocks and the French victory produced a profound impression everywhere in Upper Alsace.'"

British warships are again bombarding the German lines on the North sea coast of Belgium. The water tower at Zeebrugge the new German base, has been demolished. Heavy volumes of smoke can b seen on the Holland frontier arising from Duinbergen, between Heyst and Knocke and it is believed that the village is burning.

A dispatch from a Dutch source, received by way of London, says:

"Germans artillery and Uhlans that have been stationed at Turnout (15 miles east of Antwerp), will leave for the western front tomorrow. Members of the Landsturm, aged from 45 to 55, will take their places. From December 27 to January 2, about 225,000 fresh German soldiers passed by train through Louvain en route for the western front. A smaller number proceeded toward the east. At Louvain the sound of heavy guns is incessant, the noise coming from the region of West Flanders."

Severe artillery duels are reported from the region east of Amiens, the Aisne and the heights of the Meuse.

BEHIND TIME

Albany Legislators are slow in gathering here today for the caucus which both the Democrats and Republicans will hold tonight. The main contest is over the chairmanship of the senate finance committee, which is now a three-cornered battle with no candidate as favorite.

WEATHER FORECAST.

Unsettled weather with snow or rain late tonight and Wednesday. Warmer tonight and Wednesday. Increasing south wind.

FRENCH INFANTRY GAINS NEAR ST. GEORGES

British Squadron Trying to Destroy German Torpedo Flotilla Near Ostend; French Gains in Olsace

Paris, Jan. 5.—French infantry attacks have been resumed in Belgium and have resulted successfully in the sand dunes near Nieuport. In the vicinity of St. George the French have gained at various points from 200 to 500 yards capturing parts of the German trenches. This information was officially announced in a statement issued today. It stated that the Germans have blown up the French trenches near the Allile highway and have captured it, but later recaptured it. In Alsace the French have fortified ground gained on the road from Thann to Cernay, and have maintained their progress.

Balain, France, Jan. 5.—The British warships have renewed their bombardment of the Germans on the Flanders coast, according to officers who have arrived here today. The Germans have assembled a torpedo flotilla at Ostend, and the British squadron is attempting to destroy this squadron.

"KAISER'S TROOPS WILL NEVER SURRENDER"

—A German Commander

By FRANKLIN P. MERRICK.

Paris, Jan. 5.—Details received here today of the six day battle between French and Germans for the possession of Steinbach, in Upper Alsace, show that it ranks with the battle of the Yser in ferocity. On December 31, General Pau, commanding the French, sent a summons to the German general at Steinbach to surrender, saying in his demand that heavy loss of life could thus be avoided as the German forces were surrounded. The German commander sent back a refusal, declaring that, if he had to retreat, he could still retire upon Cernay (Sennheim), as that road was still open.

"The Kaiser's troops will fight to the last man, but they will never surrender," said the German commander.

The French assault began at once, the men advancing to the attack through a forest of fir trees.

The German artillery and machine guns opened upon the advancing French forces, but the latter were protected by the trees and the cannonade proved ineffective.

The Alpine Chasseuers were in the vanguard of the French army and they bore the brunt of the fighting in the conflict for the western entrance to the village.

After a sanguinary encounter the Alpine Chasseuers gained possession of a farm, only 200 yards from the entrance of the village, throwing upon the entrenchments and taking advantage of the buildings for shelter.

French correspondents charge the Germans with a breach of the laws of humanity in the fighting for possession of this farm. They declare that the Teutons placed women and children in front of their ranks so that the French could not fire upon them. Being unable to use their rifles and machine guns the Chasseurs were compelled to carry the farm at the point of the bayonet.

The Germans had mounted quick firing guns upon the roof of the farm buildings and these inflicted heavy losses upon the French before the defenders were killed, captured or driven off. Fierce hand-to-hand fighting raged about the buildings. The French turned the granaries and farm house into improvised blockhouses when they were taken and these afforded excellent protection for the sharpshooters.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Rome, Jan. 5.—Italian marines were landed at Durazzo, the capital of Albania last night, according to a dispatch from Brindisi and are now holding the city to prevent it from capture and looting by Mussulman insurgents.

Members of the various legations there have taken refuge on the Italian warships which shelled the insurgents' positions yesterday. It was stated today at the foreign office that the landing of marines at Durazzo would have no political significance and that Italy would only do as she had done at Avalona, protect the lives of her own subjects and other foreigners.

Lisbon, Jan. 5.—Portugal has entered the war on the side of the allies. Official announcement was made today that Portuguese troops had been engaged with German soldiers in Angola, western Africa.

The announcement was made at a meeting of senators by the Portuguese premier, who stated that 4,700 more soldiers had been concentrated in Angola for the campaign against the German forces.

The result of the first engagement between the Germans and the Portuguese was not made known.

La Rochelle, France, Jan. 5.—The French steamer Kabylie has foundered at sea with the loss of 36 lives. Only the mate was saved. The Kabylie was sailing from Morocco to French when she was lost.

Berlin, via Amsterdam, Jan. 5.—Prof. Auten Von Werner, Germany's most famous historical painter, died Monday in his 75th year.

Opinions

A Sound Principle of Taxation

As a matter of sound principle of taxation, instead of taxing improvements, the city officials should tax heavily the unoccupied, ugly and unkept premises, thus forcing the owners of vacant lots and useless or near useless buildings to improve their places and make it pay, instead of holding them for a "rise in values," while all the time their property is an eyesore to the community and a fine place to breed disease in. The man who keeps his property in miserable condition, waiting for a time when it may bring more, not by anything that he may do to increase its value but by the efforts of the hustling portion of the community, is the man who should be taxed, for his land values come to him, not as the fruit of his work, but simply because he can afford to wait and because the assessors do not tax his property as they should. If he were to pay stiff taxes, he would very quickly see to it that it brought him some returns for his money, and in order to do that he must improve it.—Elmira N. Y.) Advertiser.

Bird Refuges.

The Rockefeller Foundation has purchased a bird refuge of 5,000 acres on the northern shore of the Gulf of Mexico for $225,000. The Lousiana Conservation Commission will provide game wardens for the tract to protect the birds from molestation. The tract has many shallow ponds or lakes and there are many trees and much brush for cover. There is plenty of natural food for the large numbers of birds which remain there for the winter. In the spring they migrate to the north where they eat insects and make folks happy with their songs.

The 5,000 acres is known as the Grand Chenier tract and is not far from Marsh Island which Mrs. Russell Sage turned into a bird refuge at a cost of $150,000. For many years Marsh Island was the greatest slaughter grounds for ducks in North America.

It is proposed to make the Grand Chenier tract and Marsh Island a part of a 500-square-mile preserve with 75 miles frontage on the gulf coast. This preserve will include 250,000 acres already devoted to wild life through the generosity of E. A. McIlhenny.

The persons chiefly interested in bird refuges are the so-called sentimental people who like to see and hear birds and enjoy having them around. But these people generally have also a keen sense of the practical value of birds, for they have observed that the birds eat large numbers of insects. These people have lately read of examinations of birds' stomachs proving that large quantities of insects are consumed by the birds. They understand that birds maintain a balance of nature by keeping insects reduced to their proper place. So, while a sentimental affection for birdlife may be the chief reason why many persons urge bird refuges and the preservation of bird life, they realize that at the same time there is a most sound economic reason why the destruction of birds should be halted.

In the South where a robin or a humming bird is fair game, refuges have a place maintaining the bird life of the North.—Utica Observer.

A High-Brow Convention.

One of the institutions of the times is the convention. There are religious conventions, political conventions, fraternity conventions and many other sorts of conventions. Just at present the American Association for the Advancement of Science is holding a convention at Philadelphia. Here 1,500 geologists, psychologists, chemists, agriculturalists, engineers, physicists, botanists, etc., etc., are gathered to swap discoveries, speculations and opinions. These men are pioneers but not of the geographical sort. They blaze the way in medicine, engineering and science generally and are highly useful, even as Daniel Boon was.—Utica Observer.

Diphtheria Robbed of Its Terrors

It is just twenty years since the use of diphtheria antitoxin was introduced into New York City and into the United States by the New York City Department of Health.

It seems timely at this moment to briefly review the results of its use and to emphasize again the necessity for the early administration of this remarkable remedy in every case of suspicious sore throat, especially in those occurring in young children.

The extravagant claims made in the early years as to the value of diphtheria antitoxin have been more than justified by the results which have followed its application. The death rate has been reduced in cases treated during the first two or three days to not to exceed 2 per cent., while formerly in young children with any method of treatment the death rate varied from 25 per cent. to 40 per cent. Diphtheria has been almost robbed of its terrors.

In the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx in New York City in 1894, the last year before the introduction of diphtheria antitoxin, there were 2,870 deaths from diphtheria and the deaths per ten thousand of the population were 15.5. In 1913—data for the present year not yet being available—the total deaths in these boroughs were 783 and the deaths per ten thousand of the population 2,4. The population in the interval having increased from 1,851,060 to 3,180,586. This history has been duplicated more or less completely in every great city in the world, depending in extent upon how universal the use of antitoxin.

Even these extraordinary results do not indicate the full measure of the value of this remedy because diphtheria is often so insidious in its development, and the diagnosis is often delayed so long, that antitoxin is administered too late to produce its full specific effects, irreparable damage having already been done by the extraordinarily active poison of the disease.

The difference in the results when the remedy is administered early and later in the disease is shown in the following table:

Day	No. Cases	Deaths	Case Fatality Percentage
1 and 2	1009	20	2.
3 and 4	464	25	5.3
5 and over	137	11	8.0

Last year there were in New York State 1817 deaths from diphtheria. At least 1,000 or 1,200 of these lives could have been saved if the remedy had been administered in full doses earlier. The State Dearment of Health desires to urge upon the people of the State the vital importance of having every case of sore throat at once by a competent physician, and also urges upon all physicians the importance of taking cultures in every case and the administration of antitoxin at once in every suspicious case, without waiting for the results of the laboratory examination.

Antitoxin is furnished free by the State Department of Health, and it and culture tubes can be obtained from every health officer in the State and from numerous supply stations which have been established during the past year in various cities, towns and villages. The Department of Health has determined to make a sustained effort to materially decrease the number of deaths from this disease during the year 1915.

Newspapers Can Do Much For Cities

George G. Card, secretary of the Mobile (Ala.) Chamber of Commerce, says:

"The Mobile Chamber of Commerce for the past couple of years has not taken any page space in newspapers; but we have had occasion recently to have a great deal of newspaper publicity on several matters and the results from same have been far beyond our expectations.

"Within the past two weeks we had a campaign for the raising of better live stock, which was commented on by the newspapers throughout the country, and brought us scores of inquiries from all parts of the United States. Without this newspaper publicity our campaign would have been for naught, as it was through the newspapers that the interest was aroused, and today everyone in this section is talking cattle raising.

"Another instance:

"Some few weeks ago we inaugurated a movement to celebrate a day in honor of the Satsuma orange, grown in this section, which is a recent industry. Our purpose was to advertise it through the stores, hotels, etc. We did not think our first attempt would be a big success, but the newspapers took up the matter with a vim and the attendance from surrounding sections was far in excess of what we anticipated.

"This was all accomplished entirely by the newspapers, and without their co-operation we do not believe we could have had such a success."

Problem of the Unemployed.

The following communication was received at the office of the East Syracuse News:

To the Editor:

Hardly a day passes that I do not have calls from one or more men who have not had work for sometime past and are destitute. They will be glad to work on farms and most of them are certainly not particular about their wages, at least for the remainder of the winter.

Some are undesirable, others are desirable, but have had no farm experience. They could learn to do chores, however, to pay for their board very quickly and would soon be rather valuable in other farm work. There are a few who come in also who are both desirable and experienced in farm work. I have had to turn these men, some of them with families depending upon them for support, away for I have not known where the work was to be had. It seems a pity that the good men should go begging when there is so much winter work that could be done and they can be had so cheaply.

I am writing this letter in hopes that it may be inserted in your next issue and that it may be read by some one of your readers to whom the situation may appeal. People desiring any such help may be assured of all the help that the Farm Bureau can give them in securing a good man. We require only that they pay telephone charges and the man's transportation.

Yours very truly,
S. A. MARTIN,
Syracuse, N. Y.

FUNERAL OF C. B. BENSON.

A host of friends of Cadwell B. Benson gathered at the former residence at 2 o'clock this afternoon to pay their last tribute to one who was so generally loved and respected. The Rev. Dr. S. W. Steele and Rev. Dr. Wills officiated, and interment was made in Riverside cemetery.

Mr. Benson was interested in the Tidewater Oil Company, of Bayonne, N. J. He sold the company its land at Bayonne which was purchased by him when it was a swamp. He was also interested in the contracting firm which dredged Hell Gate, New York.

Mr. Benson was one of the pioneer shade cloth manufacturers in this country. The mills which he erected at Minetto were the largest of their kind in the world. They were known as the Columbia Mills, and were sold recently to the Minetto-Meridan Co. He was ex-vice-president and a large stockholder in the Empire United Railways, upon one of whose cars he died.

Mr. Benson was one of the richest men of Oswego county, and was a member of many bank boards. He was seventy-five years old, and leaves a wife, two nieces and two nephews.

ICE HARVEST STARTED.

New York Central Will Use 16,000 Tons on Ontario Division.

Oswego, Jan. 5. The New York Central started to cut its next summer's supply of ice today, the work being done by the Natural Spring Ice Co. of which John A. Ashe, now of Rochester, but trainmaster at Ontario division headquarters here, is head. The ice is being harvested from the company's preserve at Silver Lake. It is of excellent quality and thickness. The Central will use 16,000 tons of ice on the division, according to estimates, and this amount will be harvested as quickly as possible while the quality is good. Facilities for storing 7,000 tons are available at Oswego and the balance will be distributed along the division for storage where ice houses are located.

BICHLORIDE KILLED HER.

New York, Jan. 4.—Little John Rogers, aged 2 1-2 years, whose mother, Mrs. Ida Sniffen Walters "Rogers" gave him poison at the same time she poisoned his eight months' old sister and herself, in their home in the Bronx, last Tuesday, died in the Lebanon hospital today. As the child died, his mother lay at death's door from bichloride of mercury poisoning in an adjoining ward, pleading to see her husband whom she is alleged to have deserted for Lorlys Elton Rogers, a lawyer and the male figure in the strange tragedy of love and death. The other children died a few days ago.

SPEAKER SWEET IN OSWEGO.

Oswego, Jan. 5.—Assemblyman T. C. Sweet is expected here the latter part of the week for a conference with Republican leaders before the conveying of the assembly. His election as speaker is assured and there will likely be no opposition. Today there were many former assembly employes in town conferring with Republican leaders looking for endorsements to get back their former places. It is not yet known whether appointments will be announced. Wednesday or held until the following week, when the permanent organization of the legislature is to be effected.

Bishop Postpones Visit.

Oswego, Jan. 5.—The annual visit of the Rt. Rev. Charles Tyler Olmsted of Utica, bishop of Central New York, to Christ church, this city, customarily made on the third Sunday in January of each year, has been postponed at the request of the rector the Rev. Dr. Richmond H. Gesner, until some time after Easter, which, this year, falls on April 4. Dr. Gesner will leave the city on Monday of next week and will be absent on the following Sundaq, January 17, when the services at Christ church will be conducted by the Rev. Dr. Clark, a pro-

HOLY NAME MEMBERSHIP

Oswego Jan. 5.—Father J. A. Hopkins at St. Mary's church Sunday announced that the Rosary society of the church now totals, 1,001, and he also announced, at vesper service, that an effort is now to be made to bring the membership of the Holy Name society up to over 1,000 within a few weeks. All sermons delivered at the church Sunday were on the Holy Name.

Where Shall We Get Our Fertilizers?

Washington, D. C., Jan. 5.—Present agricultural practice prescribes the use of three chemical elements as a "soil amendment," a "stimulant for plant growth," or a "plant food," as it is variously put. These three elements when applied to the soil in which a crop is growing have been found by practice to afford an increased crop yield. They have phosphorous, potassium, and nitrogen, spoken of by the respective trade terms of phospheric acid, potash, and "ammoniates."

In the commercial fertilizers phospheric acid is found in the form of calcium phosphate, which is bone phosphate or rock phosphate, usually treated with sulphuric acid to render it soluble. Potash is found as a salt or salts of potassium, either sulphate or chloride, and the "ammoniates," as the inorganic salt of ammonia, ammonium sulphate, the inorganic salts of nitric acid, sodium nitrate, and inorganic compounds of nitrogen, calcium cyanamid, or the organic compounds of nitrogen, contained in animal or vegetable refuse matter, cottonseed meal, abbattoir tankage, or fish scrap.

The usual commercial fertilizers contain these three elements and have the designation of "complete fertilizers." These are sold under various brand names, the various brands frequently being recommended for particular crops. The proportion of the three essential ingredients is varied; as a usual thing that of the phospheric acid is considerably higher than the other two, which are present in about the same proportion. Thus, for example, a "6-2-2 mixture" contains 6 per cent. phospheric acid (P_2O_5), 2 per cent. ammonia (NH_3), and 2 per cent. potash (K_2O). Its selling price in the retail market is based on its analysis. Little attention is paid to the source of these ingredients so long as the essential compounds are "available," or readily may be decomposed or made soluble for the use of the plants.

The nation's supply of these three common ingredients of fertilizer may be summarized as follows: Of phospheric acid there is an abundant supply in the large deposits of phosphate rock in Florida and Tennessee, and the enormous deposits of Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming.

Of potash, now obtained exclusively from the German mines, there is little known in this country outside of the dessicated residues in Searles Lake, Cal., and the giant kelps of the Pacific litteral. In the latter there is much more than enough to supply the present demands of the fertilizer trade of the United States, the present annual consumption of potash being about 1,250,000 tons, of varied composition. At present the kelps are not supplying any of this, since it has not been determined by actual experimentation on a commercial scale that they can be used economically as a source of potash. Estimates based on costs of similar operations indicate that they can be so used.

Of "ammoniates" there is a large source in the ammonia produced as a by-product in the distillation of coal for the production of gas or coke, or both. This source is but partially developed, as by the methods most commonly practiced in this country this possible by-product is not recovered. The amount of ammonia now going to waste is almost large enough to supply all of the "ammoniates" now demanded by the fertilizer trade. The abattoirs supply a large amount of tankage and dried blood of high fertilizer value; but of these possible by-products there is still an enormous loss through the lack of organization and co-operation in the small-scale slaughter of animals for food.

JOBS AWAIT NORMAL GRADS

In Manual Training There Are Many Teachers Wanted; June Classes Prolific

Oswego, Jan. 5.—In the list of January graduates at the Normal, which will be announced within a short time, there will be but three or four graduates of the manual training department. Most of the members of the class who are advanced in this department will graduate in June when, it is expected, thirty students will receive manual training diplomas. A number of good offers have been received at the school this month. Normal graduates of other classes who have been unable to secure desirable locations will be offered the opportunity of applying for the places, provided they make the necessary application to Professor J. C. Park, who is at the head of this department at the school.

"Manual training is becoming one of the greatest fields for teachers of any of the educational branches," Professor Parks said yesterday, "for many schools are establishing this department and this means that teachers will have to be secured. Industrial education is being taught now in many schools throughout the middle west and eastern states and teachers who have had experience are having no trouble in securing desirable positions. The graduates of the Normal receive instruction and experience at the same time, for they are compelled to turn out many pieces of work, and thus, upon graduation, are unusually competent."

A Gymnasium Exhibition.

Oswego, Jan. 5.—Physical Director J. B. Moore of the Y. M. C. A. is preparing a program for a gymnasium exhibition to be given at the association on January 15. It will be the last gymnasium exhibition before the indoor circus, which will be put on in March. One of the features of the exhibition will be the work of the well developed corps of leaders and tumblers. A small fee will be charged.

New County Attorney in Charge.

County Attorney W. M. Gallagher of Constantia formally assumed the duties of the office yesterday morning. Mr. Gallagher will occupy offices with Superintendent of Highways Howard. He will make regular trips to Oswego as did his predecessor, Judge Coville.

MORRILL'S PEACE CALENDAR

(Oswego Times.)

The Morrill Press of Fulton is distributing a handsome and artistic "Peace" calendar and it is one of the best worked out ideas seen so far this year. It is in fourteen pages with quotations favoring peace from the great men of all ages, poets, statesmen and warriors. With all of the world war-mad a peace calendar is a welcome relief and that sent out by the Morrill Press is a credit to the concern.

[illegible] A. Peterson Claims [illegible] Wolever Called Him a Liar; Suit Now on Trial

[illegible]wego, Jan. 5.—An action for $10,[illegible] alleged slander was the first [illegible] for trial before Justice L. C. [illegible]ch in Supreme Court at the [illegible] House this morning. Charles Peterson is the plaintiff and Frank Wolever, the defendant. They [illegible]e partners in the Ontario Garage [illegible] Motor Co., with offices in W. 2d [illegible]t disagreed last fall. The com[illegible]t alleges that on September 30, [illegible] Mr. Wolever called Mr. Peter[illegible] thief in the presence of a num[illegible]d persons in this city. The ac[illegible]ion grew out of the sale of an [illegible]mobile by Mr. Peterson, as he [illegible]s as an officer of the Ontario [illegible] Co., to Waterman T. Parsons. [illegible] defendant admits the remarks [illegible] pleads justification. Fred T. Ca[illegible] attorney for the plaintiff and [illegible]as L. McKay appears for the [illegible]ndant.

[illegible]e calendar of causes numbers [illegible] and when it was called a majori[illegible] of the cases were reserved gen[illegible]y. Aside from the Peterson-Wol[illegible]e action, the following cases were announced as ready:

[illegible]. C. Smith Bros. Typewriting Co. vs. E. W. Austin. Breach of contract.

Arthur J. Thompson vs. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. R. Co. Negligence.

George B. Stearns vs. Peter Savas, et al. To foreclose a lien.

Waterman T. Parsons vs. Peter Savas. Replevin.

Huggins Lumber Co. vs. James J. Campbell. Breach of contract.

The case of Richard F. Shuls vs. Phoenix Bridge Co., and D. M. Rossi Engineering Co., an action to recover damages for injuries received by being knocked from the railroad bridge in process of construction, was reserved for settlement.

John Haegerty vs. Merchants' Mutual Line. Negligence. Settled.

Frederick Weinheimer vs. Mary McPhee and Florence M. Gile. Settled.

Taken Off the Calendar.

Michael Dorogokupec as adm. vs. Fulton Heat, Light and Power Co., Venue changed to Onondaga county and taken off calendar.

Sarah L. Davenport and Anna Ragan vs. Howard Corning, et al, an action to set aside the will of John S. Corning, was taken off the calendar.

The following trial jurors were excused: Elmer E. Taylor, William Davis, Gustavus Kline, Oswego; F. W. Alvord, Phoenix; Charles Whitney, Mexico; James Driscoll, Oswego; Erwin Brownell, Pulaski; John K. Lynch, Oswego.

Investigating Granby Wreck.

A brief session is expected of the Grand Jury in session, is the opinion of District Attorney Culkin. E. B. Tice of Mexico, is foreman. The most important matter in hand is the investigation into the Granby wreck in October.

MRS. JULIA PULLEN.

Mrs. Julia Pullen, 70, died early this morning at her home 453 Erie st.

Surviving are her husband, Oliver Pullen, and six daughters, Mrs. Wm. Greene, Mrs. Patrick Lilly, Mrs. Frank O'Niel, Miss Jessie Pullen of this city and Mrs. John Burns of Providence, R. I. Mrs. Wm. Fitzpatrick of Syracuse. There are two sons, Edward Pullen of Franklin, Mass., and Norman Pullen of this city. One sister and seven brothers, seventeen grandchildren and twelve great-grandchildren also survive.

Funeral arrangements have not been completed.

SHOT HOTEL CLERK.

Malone, N. Y., Jan. 5.—John Morrison, aged 40, a woodsman, shot and killed a clerk in a hotel early yesterday and then turned a rifle on himself with suicidal intent; he has little chance for recovery. Morrison who it is believed was intoxicated, today claimed he had no recollection of shooting his man or of sending a bullet through his own breast.

WELCH—SILER.

Miss Freda Siler and Harry Welch of Granby Center were united in marriage last evening by the Rev. M. J. Peters, rector of the Zion Episcopal church. Ralph Wilcox of this city and Miss Evelyn Moseley of Kingston, Ont., attended the couple.

Mr. and Mrs. Welch will make their home with the groom's parents at Granby Center.

INQUEST TO BE HELD.

Dr. Cusick will hold an inquest tomorrow fternoon at 2 o'clock, inquiring into the sudden death of Alfred Orduduine, who was recently asphixiated by gas at the bottom of the pit at the construction work for the Woolen Mill.

B. & O. TRAIN WRECKED.

Warwick, O., Jan. 5.—Nearly 100 passengers on the Chicago-New York passenger train on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad were given a scare, but escaped injury today when four Pullmans and the smoker jumped the track here.

None of the cars overturned. The fact that the train had slowed down while going through the town probably saved a serious wreck.

A loose wheel on the smoker striking a switch caused the derailment.

BANKS CALLED UPON.

Washington, Jan. 5.—Comptroller of the Currency Williams today issued a call for the condition of National banks at the close of business December 31, 1914.

WORDEN EQUIPS A NEW THEATRE

Shipment of Fine Scenery Marks This City As Possessing a Growing Industry

A. E. Worden's scenic studio, located at 511 Academy st., has just completed a long theatrical contract which consists of borders, kitchen, fancy, and tormentors. This consignment is being shipped today to Mohawk for the equipping of a new opera house at that place. A fire proof curtain, a street drop, a garden drop, and a landscape wood is to be painted and shipped later on.

Mr. Worden came to Fulton in 1880, from Indiana, and for the past 35 years he has devoted much of his time to fitting out opera houses, lodges, and churches with scenery. About 80 per cent. of his work has been shipped to New York city. More than $100,000 worth of scenery has been designed and painted in Mr. Worden's small shop. He is assisted in the work by his two sons, and a son-in-law. All capable and willing workers.

A carpenter shop is attached to the plant in the rear of the paint shop which is 20x50 feet, and is equipped with a four-horse-power engine that drives the light shafting and operates the saws, planers, etc. The paint shop and office occupies a space of 20x60 feet, and at the present time is well stocked with scenery ready for shipment.

Although Mr. Worden has been doing business in Fulton for 35 years, today was the first time he has ever been visited by a reporter of Fulton. The information The Times scout received was as valuable as it was gratefully acceptable.

This grand old man is a wonderful worker, handicapped as he is with an arm that has been broken at four different times. Mr. Worden has met with many accidents during his professional career. In 1907, while at work on the Richfield opera house, he fell from a staging breaking his right arm, collar bone, three ribs, and the right hip suffered seious injury. The doctos gave him up for dead, but he managed to live through it and in spite of all these handicaps he is still able to produce some handsome and wolderful pieces of scenery.

A large order from Ilion containing 20 drops and 15 set pieces has just been received, and the work on this production will begin in a few days. There has also been received an order from the Odd Fellows lodge of Watertown for theatrical scenecy costing $1,200. This work will be completed within the next thirty days.

There is no reason why theatrical people cannot find what they need in the theatrical equipment line at the Worden studio; for on display in the office ared esigns of over 5,000 different patterns, made up of flats, set pieces, drops, etc.

The Times reporter was conducted over the entire plant by Mr. Worden, who was courtesy itself. It was the first time the writer had ever visited a scenic studio, and the excitement he felt at all the wonderful artistic displays was equal to that of Alice when she found herself in Fairyland.

The Times extends its grateful thanks to Mr. Worden for the information received, and wishes him a happy and prosperous New Year.

HANDSOME BLOUSE DEVELOPED IN PLAIN AND EMBROIDERED CREPE

The blouse illustrated is especially charming, and much of its charm is contributed by the clever arrangement of the embroidery. The ragian sleeves and all seams are hemstitched.

The Assemblymen Can't Leave Seats

Albany, Jan. 5.—Time will be too precious and the coming legislative session too important this year to permit the leaders of the Republican and Democratic parties in the Assembly to leave that house when summoned on the telephone. But this fact will not prevent either Assemblyman Harold J. Hinman or Assemblyman A. E. Smith from talking from their seats to those who call them on the "Hello" instrument. There has just been installed two telephones in the Assembly chamber, one connects with the desk of Leader Hinman, the other with that of Leader Smith. The wires pass through the floor directly under the desks of the Assemblymen in question.

The new telephones are innovations in that never before have similar devices been installed at the State capitol. There have been always telephone booths in the Assembly chambers but such contrivances as are being set up are decided novelties.

When the telephones are ready for use it will not be necessary for the Assemblymen who are to use them to speak loudly and thus disturb a debate on the business of the House as the sounding coils and transmitters have been made unusually sensitive.

KILLED IN PISTOL FIGHT.

Chicago, Jan. 5.—Policeman John Sausman and George Hennessy, an alleged burglar, were killed in a pistol fight early today at 29th st., and Wabash avenue. James O'Neil, Hennessy's companion, was taken to a hospital wounded probably fatally. The policeman saw the men loitering and asked them to hold up their hands so that he could search them for weapons. One shot Sausman through his overcoat pocket. Thomas Langan, Sausman's partner, finally shot both the suspects.

"TOPSY" WON KIDS' HEARTS

"Lawyer Marks" Also Pleased Them, and Their Elders, Too; Crowded House Last Night

Numbers of children were in evidence at the Quirk last night to see Harcourt's Uncle Tom's Cabin. Every seat in the gallery was occupied long before the curtain went up on the first act. Considerable excitement arose just before the orchestra appeared when the ushers announced that many of the seats occupied by the children were reserved. A scramble for seats higher up followed, and for a few minutes the rush resembled a small sized riot, but fortunately no one was hurt during the rush.

The Times reporter was everywhere at all times, making the rounds from stage to gallery, and when he looked over the faces of the older patrons seated in the heavenly rows, it appeared to him that some of them sacrificed the price of a shave that they might see Harriet Beecher Stowe's wonderful melo-drama once more before old Father Time called them across the Great Divide.

The acting was superb, and the comedy displayed by Lawyer Marks delighted the children so much that peals of childish laughter rang throughout the fine theatre.

The colored quartette, composed of Messrs. James, Davis, Dent, and Caster, sang "It's a long, long way to Tipperary," and "Good bye boys." The harmony was great, and the singing splendid.

Miss Gladys Alberta, as little Eva, played her part well, and the scene in which she responds to the master's call, brought tears to old and hardened men as it did to the eyes of the weaker sex.

Mrs. C. B. Harcourt, as Topsy, was a scream at all times, and pleased the children with her wit and humor.

Mrs. C. T. Harcourt, as Ophelia and Tom Davis, as Uncle Tom, carried through their parts in excellent form, and much credit of the show's success should be given these two people.

Manager Harcourt has indeed a splendid troup of performers, and the scenery was excellent; quite fitting to the rest of the good things that Fultonians witnessed at the Quirk last night.

NIGHT FIREMAN INJURED.

Henry Burg of 220 S. 2nd st., night fireman at the Nestles' Food plant was badly injured at 6.30 o'clock last night when five tons of coal which he was firing from, caved in and caught him.

Mr. Burg sustained a badly wrenched back and his left leg is broken.

Dr. Keller attends the injured man and regards his condition as favorable.

DR. ELIOT CONDEMNS CREED IN CHURCHES TODAY

Impotence of Christianity to Stem War's Ravages Reflects Inability to Inculcate Ethical Principles

The impotence of the Christian churches, in the face of the war now convulsing Europe, grimly reflects their inability to inculcate sound ethical principles, and their eternal tendency to cling to autocratic forms of government, according to Dr. Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard University, who is attending the annual convention of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in session at Philadelphia, Pa. In a lecture at Witherspoon Hall, under the auspices of the Unitarian churches of this city, he condemned outworn creeds and dogmas as being opposed to the spirit of freedom and democracy, and of virtually no value as moral forces.

The churches have lost their hold, Doctor Eliot held, because of their adherence to archaic formularies that thinking men of the twentieth century look upon without reverence. God, as pictured by the so-called Christians, is hideous, cruel and martial, according to his view, and the story of Christ's suffering to save souls of humanity is only revolting to beings with a true sense of justice in their hearts.

"The idea of an individual taking upon himself the sins of thousands would never be accepted in a modern court of justice," added Doctor Eliot. "Yet we are expected to believe that an all-wise, all-merciful Creator would impose such an unjust sacrifice upon his Son; that an innocent being should suffer, while the guilty go free. It is incredible that any rational being should accept such a basis for religious belief."

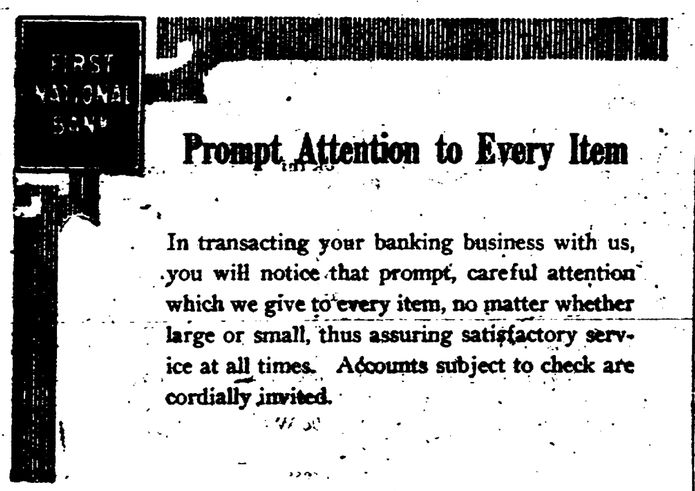
Doubts "Fall of Man."

After ridiculing the idea of there ever having been a "fall of man," Doctor Eliot went on to say that far from joining in a concerted effort to stamp out the blighting curse of war, the Christian churches in the past centuries actually have supported it. Their very hymns of praise, he pointed out, are steeped in the martial spirit. And he quoted:

The Son of God goes forth to war,
A kingly crown to gain.

"That," said Doctor Eliot, "of course, is the meanest of all incentives for going to war." He then mentioned "Onward Christian Soldiers" and other hymns as typical of the manner in which the church draws its imagery from the battlefield.

The speaker dwelt at length upon the utter impotence of the Christian churches to advance the cause of liberty throughout the world, so long as they rely for their moral appeal upon symbolism, mysticism and ecclesiasticism. He denied that the churches had contributed to the rapid advance of civilization made within the last two centuries, but attributed this to the labors of scientists.



The churches saw in science a naural foe, Doctor Eliot said, and systematically obstructed its progress. Soon after the foundation of the church, he pointed out, in giving a brief sketch of the evolution of modern Christianity, there came a wider and wider departure from the precepts laid down by Jesus Christ. The sort of belief imposed upon members of churches, today, he said, lacked the true essence of Christ's ethical teachings. Not only have the churches ceased to be the social centres they were in th past, he said, but the Sunday schools, as well, have become so inefficient that they compare unfavorably with the day schools with regard to instruction in elementary ethics.

Defines New Christianity.

Doctor Eliot characterized the war in Europe as a struggle between freedom and democracy on one side, with "divine right" and militarism on the other. The churches in Europe were not only powerless to prevent the miseries and horrors of the war, he said, but they did not play an important part in the work of alleviating these horrors. Rescue work, nursing and other humane undertakings in the theatre of hostilities, he said, for the most part were directed by, secular organizations.

A new Christianity, the speaker said in conclusion, was needed to supplant the mass of empty ceremony and vain ritual piled up by the centuries—a Christianity truly founded upon the ethics taught by the Nazarene 1900 years ago; a Christianity with truth, justice and love as its core; a Christianity interested in the advancement of happiness and welfare of mankind on earth, and not based upon perpetual promises of bliss in a future existence; a Christianity watchful of the deeds of its adherents rather than their doctrines.

Her family have the sympathy of all.

Miss Bertha Druce has had to give up her school on account of her ill health, although she is somewhat better than a short time ago.

Miss Gertrude Ingeroll returned to New York last Saturday after having spent her vacation of two weeks with her parents here, Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Engeroll.

Roy Doris of the U. S. S. Minnesota has a furlough of 20 days. He is visiting his grandmother, Mrs. Betsy Wright of this place. Until quite recently his ship has been stationed at Vera Cruz, Mexico, but it is now at Philadelphia.

Mrs. Geo. Gates and children spent New Years with her uncle Geo. Jackson and family of Palermo.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. McDougall entertained Earl McDougall and family Leon McDougall and family, and Miss Fae Eastland, New York.

Our school reopened today, after a vacation of two weeks.

James Haynes and family have moved to Moravia for the winter.

Brown is a melancholy soul. Rumor hath it that once he was crossed in love. At any rate he, is usually pessimistic about things in general, and always particular as to what he eats.

The other day he went into a restaurant, and having scanned the luncheon menu, said to the waiter:

"I see you have some calves' hearts."

"Yes, sir—yes, sir," agreed the waiter, hastily flicking crumbs from the tablecloths.

"Well, how about it?" continued Brown. "Are they tender?"

"Yes, sir," declared the waiter. "Beautifully tender."

"Then bring me some," he said. "If there is in the world such a thing as a tender heart, I want it."—New York Call.

NEW TELEGRAPH CABLE.

A new cable will be laid in Oneida st., bridge, permission being granted to the Western Union Telegraph Co., at last night's meeting of the Board of Public Works. This cable will replace the one in use, which has become practically worthless.

In the absence of funds with which to meet accounts due city debtors, the Board audited just a few of the bills presented for payment.

Engineer Hill acted in the capacity of City Clerk, the enforced absence of Clerk Scudder making necessary this substitution.

HOSPITALS INDIA'S GREATEST NEED

Missionaries Made Strong Appeal at the First Baptist Church, Syracuse Recently.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Baker of Ongole, India, before the congregation of the First Baptist church on Sunday. The missionaries stated that it would be impossible for them to recite horrors equal to those of the battlefields of Europe were they to tell the existing conditions in their own community because of the lack of equipment to provide for the sick and injured.

Mr. Baker declared that the parish administered over by Mrs. Baker and himself comprises 1,000 square miles with 330,000 natives and there is not a physician in this territory. He told of a plan on foot to build and equip a hospital at Ongole.

Their daughter, Mildred May Baker, a girl of 7, appeared in an Oriental costume and sang in the Indian tongue. Mrs. Baker, in a brief address, declared that India needs freedom and only can it be obtained through Christianity.

"You may not know it" said Mr. Baker, "but India raises more tea than China and Japan put together, and it stands next to the United States in the production of cotton. Last year the wheat crop amounted to 386,000,000 bushels. It has 40,000,000 acres of land under irrigation. It is the fourth country in railroad mileage.

"She is worth saving because of her value to commerce as well as her value to the nation and her sciences. So many people think that the sciences are only found in the United States and Germany. To see the greatest building in all the world with its matchless beauty and wealth of precious stones you must journey to the jungles of India.

"Mrs. Baker and myself have baptized 5,000 converts. It is the most marvelous work the church knows in any land. The simple preaching is not enough. We are the only white people going among 330,000 natives. The governmental helps to provide for the industrial work, but we do need more workers and equipment."

The service at the First church yesterday was interesting in a musical way. Charles M. Courboin commenced his duties as organist. His work was greatly enjoyed. In the evening he gave a short recital. At the morning service Miss Daisy Connell made her debut as soprano soloist in this church and her rendering of "Hear Ye Israel," from Mendelssohn's "Elijah," was a delightful part of the programme.

When Mr. Courboin finished playing the postlude last night many of the congregation remained in their seats and applauded his efforts generously. A number of requests for repetitions of some of the numbers of his recital were taken to Mr. Courboin by Albert F. Eckel. All the requested selections were played. Mr. Courboin was highly pleased with the reception accorded him by the congregation.

TOO MANY HOMELESS.

New York, Jan. 5.—All previous records for the number of persons sheltered at the municipal lodging house were broken Sunday night when 2,530 homeless men, women and children were taken in, fed and given a warm place to sleep. Of these thirty-six were women and five were children. The previous record was 2153.

Although the thermometer registered only 19 above zero at 4 a. m. yesterday and had risen three degrees by 8 o'clock, the number of persons seeking shelter was greater than on previous occasions when the weather was colder. Superintendent A. Whiting attributed this fact to economic conditions.

"The big rush was caused by the great amount of unemployment prevailing here now," said Mr. Whiting today. "We must prepare to care for more homeless this winter than ever before. The chief reason for conditions is the war in Europe, which has thrown many persons out of work."

The general executive committee of Mayor Mitchel's committee on unemployment, was called to meet this afternoon in the office of E. H. Gary, chairman of the U. S. Steel Corporation, to consider three proposals for the immediate relief of the unemployed.

City Chamberlain Henry Bruere, chairman of the general committee who has been making a personal investigation among the bread lines and other charitable agencies, said he would outline the proposals, some of which are based on his own investigations.

APARTMENT HOUSE FIRE.

Johnstown, Pa., Jan. 5.—Many thrilling rescues were made early yesterday when fire was discovered in the Conrad apartment building at Vine and Franklin streets, near the heart of the city. Several women were overcome by smoke and had to be carried down ladders by the firemen, as the stairway and fire escapes were enveloped in flames. The loss will be heavy, mostly in personal property of the residents. Nearby stores suffered heavy damage from water and smoke.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY DEPARTMENT

A Department Conducted to Meet the Demands of the Alert Home-Makers who Number Among our Readers.

The fireless cooker has come to stay. It has proved its weight in gold. In the making of soups, stews or in cooking the foods that require long periods of heat the fireless cooker has made itself a boon of economy. Many times the economical dishes are not used because of their economy being overbalanced on account of the amount of fuel necessary in cooking them.

Dried lentils, peas, lima beans, etc., are rich in nourishing qualities yet they are little used in most households. Perhaps the long period of cooking has been a mark in their disfavor. With the fireless cooker and the low prices of these valuable foods many a nourishing wholesome meal can be prepared at low cost, and too, without mother standing guard at the stove that the pot may not boil dry.

Many a housewife realizing the value of these cookers is unable to buy one has been skillful enough to make one from a box, excelsior and oilcloth. However, with the low priced reliable cookers, now on the market the prudent housewife can fit her purse to this investment of economy.

Mock Chicken Salad

Run through the coarse grinder of the food chopper enough raw peanuts to make one and one-half cupfuls; then add one and one-half cupfuls of wheat flakes, pepper and salt to taste and one tablespoonful of olive oil. Turn into the upper part of the double-boiler or fireless cooker and cook for at least six hours, the time necessary to cook the peanuts thoroughly. The long cooking of the peanuts develops a delicious flavor entirely different from that obtained by roasting them. When the mixture is cooked, pack in a square mold and chill. Prepare this mixture the day before the salad is to be served. Cut the mock chicken in dice, mix with chopped celery and blend with mayonnaise dressing. The mock chicken may be cooked in the fireless cooker. It will keep for several days in a cool place and time improves its flavor.

Grandma's Doughnuts—Cream two and one-half tablespoonfuls of butter with a half a cupful of sugar. Beat three eggs light and then add another half cupful of sugar and combine with the first mixture. Sift together three and one-half cupfuls of flour, four teaspoonfuls of baking-powder, one-fourth of a teaspoonful each of cinnamon and grated nutmeg and one and one-half teaspoonfuls of salt. Stir the dry ingredients into the creamy mixture and add enough more flour to make the dough stiff enough to roll. Divide into convenient portions, knead slightly on a floured board, roll to about half an inch in thickness, shape and fry in deep, either good lard or Crisco.

Whole Wheat Muffins—Sift together one cupful of white flour, one cupful of whole wheat flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt and three level teaspoonfuls of baking-powder. Beat one egg, add one and one-fourth cupfuls of milk and two tablespoonfuls of melted butter. Stir into the flour, beat well and bake in muffin or gem pans in a hot oven.

Waffles—Sift one and three-fourths cupfuls of flour, three teaspoonfuls of baking-powder and half a teaspoonful of salt. Add gradually one cupful of milk, then the yolks of two eggs well beaten, one tablespoonful of melted butter and the whites of the eggs beaten stiff.

Heat the waffle iron and grease it well on both sides before putting in the batter. In filling put a tablespoonful of batter in each compartment of the iron, cover it and the mixture will spread to fill the iron.

Be sure the waffle-iron is well greased for if the waffle sticks to the iron it will tear when it is taken out. Serve piping hot with butter and syrup or honey. Remember that waffles are delicate cakes and their success depends upon the deftness of the cook.

English Pancakes—Sift together one cupful of flour, one teaspoonful of baking-powder and a pinch of salt. Beat two eggs with one tablespoonful of sugar and a cupful of milk, and add to the flour, making a thin batter. Melt a little butter in a small round frying pan and pour about half a cupful of batter in it, turning the pan so that the batter will cover the entire bottom. Bake quickly, turning the pancake so that both sides will brown. Butter each pancake, sprinkle with sugar and roll it up.

Cereal Griddle-Cakes—Use one cupful of any variety of cold cooked cereal, mashed free from lumps and thinned with a little milk. Beat one egg, white and yolk separately, and add to the cereal together with half a teaspoonful of baking-powder. Drop by spoonfuls on a hot griddle and serve when brown.

Hot Muffins—Sift a large cupful of flour with a teaspoonful of baking-powder and a scant half teaspoonful of salt. Beat one egg into a cupful of half milk and half water, add a large tablespoonful of melted butter, then stir in the flour. Bake in gem pans in a hot oven. This will make eight muffins of the usual size.

Virginia Cornbread—Beat two eggs very light without separating. Add half a cupful of cold boiled rice, then sift in one cupful of white cornmeal to which has been added a scant teaspoonful of baking-powder and half a teaspoonful of salt. Add milk enough to make a very thin batter, beat well and just before pouring the mixture into the baking dish add a large tablespoonful of melted lard. The cornbread is served with a spoon from the dish in which it is baked.

CHAPTER III.

I Quote Omar Khayyam.

AT first the thing seemed smoothed over. It is true that the captain did not speak to the first mate except when compelled to and that Turner and the captain ignored each other elaborately. The cruise went on without event. There was no attempt on Turner's part to carry out his threat of the night before, nor did he, as the crew had prophesied, order the Ella into the nearest port. He kept much to himself, spending whole days below, with Williams carrying him highballs, always appearing at dinner, however, sodden of face but immaculately dressed and eating little or nothing.

A week went by in this fashion, luring us all to security. I was still lean, but fairly strong again. Vail, left to himself or to the women of the party, took to talking with me now and then. I thought he was uneasy. More than once he expressed a regret that he had taken the cruise, laying his discontent to the long inaction. But the real reason was Turner's jealousy of him, the obsession of the dipsomaniac. I knew it, and Vail knew that I knew.

On the 8th we encountered bad weather, the first wind of the cruise. All hands were required for tacking, and I was stationed on the forecastle head with one other man. Williams, the butler, succumbed to the weather, and at 5 o'clock Miss Lee made her way forward through the driving rain and asked me if I could take his place.

I said that I was probably not so useful that I could not be spared and that I would try. Vail's suggestion had come back to me, and this was my chance to get Williams' keys. Miss Lee having spoken to the captain, I was relieved from duty and went aft with her. What with the plunging of the vessel and the slippery decks she almost fell twice, and each time I caught her.

The second time she wrenched her ankle and stood for a moment holding to the rail, while I waited beside her. She wore a heavy ulster of some rough material and a small, soft hat of the same material, pulled over her ears. Her soft hair lay wet across her forehead.

"How are you liking the sea, Leslie?" she said after she had tested her ankle and found the damage inconsiderable.

"Very much, Miss Lee."

"Do you intend to remain a—a sailor?"

"I am not a sailor. I am a deck steward, and I am about to become a butler."

"That was our agreement," she flashed at me.

"Certainly. And to know that I intend to fulfill it to the letter I have only to show this."

It had been one of McWhirter's inspirations, on learning how I had been engaged, the small book called "The Perfect Butler." I took it from the pocket of my flannel shirt, under my oilskins, and held it out to her.

"I have not got very far," I said humbly. "It's not inspiring reading. I've got the wineglasses straightened out, but it seems a lot of fuss about nothing. Wine is wine, isn't it? What difference, after all, does a hollow stem or green glass make"—

The rain was beating down on us. "The Perfect Butler" was weeping tears, as its chart of choice vintages was spoiled with water. Miss Lee looked up, smiling, from the book.

"You prefer 'a jug of wine,'" she said.

"Old Omar had the right idea, only I imagine literally it was a skin of wine. They didn't have jugs, did they?"

"You know the 'Rubaiyat?'" she asked slowly.

"I know the jug of wine and loaf of bread part," I admitted, irritated at the slip. "In my home city they're using it to advertise a particular sort of bread. You know—'A book of verses underneath the bough, a loaf of Wiggin's homemade bread and thou.'"

In spite of myself, in spite of the absurd verse, of the pouring rain, of the fact that I was shortly to place her dinner before her in the capacity of upper servant, I thrilled to the last two words.

"'And thou,'" I repeated.

She looked up at me, startled, and for a second our glances held. The next moment she was gone, and I was alone on a rain swept deck, cursing my folly.

That night in a white linen coat I served dinner in the after house. The meal was unusually gay, rendered so by the pitching of the boat and the uncertainty of the dishes. In the general hilarity my awkwardness went unnoticed. Miss Lee, sitting beside Vail, devoted herself to him. Mrs. Johns, young and blond, tried to interest Turner and, failing in that, took to watching me, to my discomfiture. Mrs. Turner, with apprehensive eyes on her husband, ate little and drank nothing.

Dinner over in the main cabin, they lounged into the chart room—except Mrs. Johns, who, following them to the door, closed it behind them and came back. She held a lighted cigarette, and she stood just outside the zone of candlelight, watching me through narrowed eyes.

"You got along very well tonight," she observed. "Are you quite strong again?"

"Quite strong, Mrs. Johns."

"You have never done this sort of thing before, have you?"

"Butler's work? No, but it is rather simple."

"I thought perhaps you had," she said. "I seem to recall you vaguely—that is, I seem to remember a crowd of people and a noise. I dare say I did see you in a crowd somewhere. You know, you are rather an unforgetable type."

I was nonplused as to how a butler would reply to such a statement, and took refuge in no reply at all. As it happened none was needed. The ship gave a terrific roll at that moment, and I just saved the chartreuse as it was leaving the table. Mrs. Johns was holding to a chair.

"Well caught," she smiled, and, taking a fresh cigarette, she bent over a table lamp and lighted it herself. All the time her eyes were on me, I felt that she was studying me over her cigarette, with something in view.

"Is it still raining?"

"Yes, Mrs. Johns."

"Will you get a wrap from Karen and bring it to me on deck? I—I want air tonight."

The forward companionway led down into the main cabin. She moved toward it, her pale green gown fading into the shadow. At the foot of the steps she turned and looked back at me. I had been stupid enough, but I knew then that she had something to say to me, something that she would not trust to the cabin walls. I got the wrap.

She was sitting in a deck chair when I found her.

"Sit down, Leslie," she said, pointing to the chair beside her. And, as I hesitated: "Don't be silly, boy. Elsa Lee and her sister may be as blind as they like. You are not a sailor, or a butler, either. I don't care what you are; I'm not going to ask any questions."

I sat on the edge of the chair, somewhat uneasy, to tell the truth. The crew were about on a night like that, and at any moment Elsa Lee might avail herself of the dummy hand, as she sometimes did, and run up for a breath of air or a glimpse of the sea.

"Just now, Mrs. Johns," I said, "I am one of the crew of the Ella, and if I am seen here"—

"Oh, fudge!" she retorted impatiently. "My reputation isn't going to be hurt, and the man's never is. Leslie, I am frightened—you know what I mean."

"Leslie, I am so frightened."

"Turner?"

"Yes."

"You mean—with the captain?"

"With any one who happens to be near. He is dangerous. It is Vail now. He thinks Mr. Vail is in love with his wife. The fact is that Vail—well, never mind about that. The point is this: This afternoon he had a dispute with Williams and knocked him down. The other women don't know it, Vail told me. We have given out that Williams is seasick. It will be Vail next, and if he puts a hand on him Vail will kill him; I know him."

"We could stop this drinking."

"And have him shoot up the ship! I have been thinking all evening, and only one thing occurs to me. We are five women and two men, and Vail refuses to be alarmed. I want you to sleep in the after house. Isn't there a storeroom where you could put a cot?"

"Yes," I agreed, "and I'll do it, of course, if you are uneasy, but I really think"—

"Never mind what you really think. I haven't slept for three nights, and I'm showing it." She made a motion to rise, and I helped her up. She was a tall woman, and before I knew it she had put both her hands on my shoulders.

"You are a poor butler and an indifferent sailor, I believe," she said, "but you are rather a dear. Thank you."

She left me, alternately uplifted and sheepish. But that night I took a blanket and a pillow into the storeroom and spread my six feet of length along the greatest diameter of a 4 by 7 pantry.

And that night also, between six and seven bells, with the storm subsided and only a moderate sea, Schwartz, the second mate, went overboard—went without a cry, without a sound.

Singleton, relieving him at 4 o'clock, found his cap lying near starboard, just forward of the after house. The helmsman and the two men in the lookout reported no sound of a struggle. The lookout had seen the light of his cigar on the forecastle head at six bells (3 o'clock). At seven bells he had walked back to the helmsman and commented cheerfully on the break in the weather. That was the last seen of him.

With the disappearance of Schwartz the Ella was short handed. I believe Captain Richardson made an attempt to secure me to take the place of Burns, now moved up into Schwartz's position. But the attempt met with a surly refusal from Turner.

The crew was plainly nervous and irritable. Sailors are simple minded men, as a rule. Their mental processes are elemental. They began to mutter that the devil ship of the Turner line was at her tricks again.

That afternoon, going into the forecastle for some of my clothing, I found a curious group. Gathered about the table were Tom, the mulatto cook; a Swede named Oleson, Adams and Burns of the crew. At the head of the table Charlie Jones was reading the service for the burial of the dead at sea. The men were standing bareheaded. I took off my cap and stood just inside the door until the simple service was over. I was strongly moved.

Schwartz disappeared in the early morning of Aug. 9. And now I come not without misgiving to the night of Aug. 12. I am wondering if, after all, I have made clear the picture that is before my eyes—the languid cruise, the slight relaxation of discipline due to the leisure of a pleasure voyage, the Ella again rolling gently, with hardly a dash of spray to show that she was moving; the sun beating down on her white decks and white canvas, on the three women in summer attire, on unending bridge, with its accompaniment of tall glasses filled with ice; on Turner's morose face and Vail's watchful one; in the forecastle much gossip and not a little fear and in the forward house, where Captain Richardson and Singleton had their quarters, veiled hostility and sullen silence.

Aug. 11 was Tuesday, a hot August day, with only enough air going to keep our sails filled. At 5 o'clock I served afternoon tea, and shortly after I went to Williams' cabin in the forward house to dress the wound in his head, a long cut, which was now healing. I passed the captain's cabin and heard him quarreling with the first mate, who was replying now and then, sullenly. Only the tones of their voices reached me.

Beyond that the day was much as other days. Turner ate no dinner that night. He was pale and twitching. Even with my small experience I knew he was on the verge of delirium tremens. He did not play cards and spent much of the evening wandering restlessly about the deck. Mrs. Turner retired early. Mrs. Johns played accompaniments for Vail to sing to, in the chart room, until something after 11, when they, too, went to their rooms.

It being impracticable for me to go to my quarters in the storeroom until the after house was settled, I went up on deck. Miss Lee had her arm through Turner's and was talking to him. He seemed to be listening to her, but at last he stopped and freed his arm, not ungently.

"That all sounds very well, Elsa," he said, "but you don't know what you are talking about."

"I know this."

"I'm not a fool—or blind."

He lurched down the companionway and into the cabin. I heard her draw a long breath; then she turned and saw me.

"Is that you, Leslie?"

"Yes, Miss Lee."

She came toward me, the train of her soft white gown over her arm and the light from a lantern setting some jewels on her neck to glittering.

"Mrs. Johns has told me where you are sleeping. You are very good to do it, although I think she is rather absurd."

"I am glad to do anything I can."

"I am sure of that. You are certain you are comfortable there?"

"Perfectly."

"Then—good night. And thank you."

Unexpectedly she put out her hand, and I took it. It was the first time I had touched her, and it went to my head. I bent over her slim cold fingers and kissed them. She drew her breath in sharply in surprise, but as I dropped her hand our eyes met.

"You should not have done that," she said coolly. "I am sorry."

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

THE SELECTION OF STREET ILLUMINATION.

Better and Cheaper Light Than Ever In Future Is Prophesied.

In the selection of an up to date system of street illumination any community has today a large range of choice, not from inference, but actual example, writes T. Commerford Martin in the American City. One of the best things to do is, of course, to get the help of engineers and illuminating experts, but the whole country may be compared today to a large museum where all the prevalent systems can be studied in full operation. In some places the "old line" arcs shine resplendent with high economies in watts and lumens. In other places the flaming arc bestraddles the sky and belittles the moon and stars. A good many cities have "luminous" arcs on high posts or low posts, and the results are unequivocally satisfactory. On many a thoroughfare the clustered tungsten lamps employed in ornamental street lighting and with handsome electroliers and massive curb posts make one quite indifferent to the coming of the dawn. And now the nonvacuum, nitrogen filled incandescent lamps of large candle power, at the lowest wattage consumption known to mankind, are looming up as the latest addition to the electrical resources with which our streets are all to be made Great White Ways. The future is altogether one of hope, for out of this struggle of the types and methods emerges the assurance that we shall undoubtedly have better, lighter and cheaper lights than ever for our streets, not less than a more perfect electric candle indoors to light us to bed.

The Cost of Smoke.

A cloud of black smoke hovering over a city signifies industry. It also signifies extravagance. A lack of care in the using of fuel is doubly expensive, for the damage it causes costs the city many hundreds of thousands of dollars, and wastes for the city an even greater amount of money.

Chicago, for instance, has an actual annual damage bill of approximately $40,000,000. Cincinnati pays $100 a year for every family within its municipal limits. The cleaning of clothes and buildings and the cost of washing, repainting and repapering are the chief items in this expense. But the greatest expense is the expense which comes from the reckless waste of the valuable byproducts of the coal.

One of the chief elements of the remarkable commercial success of Germany is due to the fact that in the fatherland 85 per cent of the byproducts of the burning coal are utilized in many different ways.

How many pounds of these very same byproducts go out of the chimneys of our great manufacturing cities every year can never be estimated. But the facts are that we utilize 30 per cent of the products as compared with Germany's 85 per cent.

Extravagance seems to have had its day with the people of America. Economy is now in order, and one of the first and most apparent economies is that to be effected by a more careful supervision of the use of fuel.—Town Development Magazine.

A Live City.

The Industrial Association of Keokuk, Ia., has purchased an industrial tract, laid it out, decided upon a plant for the city, won a freight rate case, installed a lighting system and started to work on the improvement of the river front. All expenses for these improvements have been met in full, it is reported.

SUBURBANITES IN GET TOGETHER PLAN.

Representatives From Three Counties Unite For Betterment of Conditions.

Something new in the get together line, something destined to play an important part in the betterment of living conditions in the suburbs of Philadelphia, was started the other day in the auditorium of the Ridley Park Civic association. More than 300 persons, men and women, representatives of civic improvement associations of a round dozen communities in Montgomery, Delaware and Camden counties, held their first "suburban symposium."

The problems that perplex the dweller in the suburbs were ably handled by several experts. Particular emphasis was laid upon the necessity for community co-operation in all civic endeavors. Railroads and highways, sewage disposal, architecture and flowers, even historical pageants and mosquitoes, were discussed.

An important address was that of George Sullivan, secretary of the suburban metropolitan planning commission, who treated the sewage disposal problem.

He pointed out the advantage of a single disposal plant for all the suburban towns in Delaware and Montgomery counties to the southeast of Bryn Mawr. This plant, to be located at Eddystone, he said, would do for the section what up to date sewage disposal had done for Lower Merion township—increased its property assessment values from $7,000,000 to $25,000,000 since 1902.

In the past many advantages have been discovered in connection with borough co-operation or borough and township co-operation, and some of the local hardships in the way of community effort were presented by Benjamin Ludlow, president of the Suburban Improvement league, who spoke on "Unnecessary Legal Restrictions on Community Co-operation."

COMMISSION MANAGER PLAN

Discussed by City Manager Henry M. Waite of Dayton.

Henry M. Waite, city manager of Dayton, O., during the session of the National Municipal league, recently held at Baltimore, discussed "The Commission Manager Plan of Government In the Light of Experience." This new form of city government was a success, he asserted, and in answer to his own question as to whether it could be a permanent success he said:

"Its permanency depends upon intelligent citizenship and their continued determination to keep partisan politics out of municipal affairs."

The Dayton plan of five nonpartisan commissioners at large had resulted in the election of sound business men, he said. They selected the manager, who then selected the directors of the five departments—law, finance, welfare, service, safety.

"I cannot tell you the political faith of the commissioners or the directors," he said. "They are selected for their ability.

"In our finance department," he continued, "our new accounting system is the same as would be found in any large business. Our budget is scientific. Every month the head of each department receives a complete financial statement which shows the original allowance, expenditures and balance in each account. We keep our expenditures inside our allowances."

The committee on municipal program which has been at work for a year drafting a new model city charter for Baltimore presented a preliminary report during the convention. The committee proposes that the new model city charter shall provide for a city manager as the chief executive of the city, to be chosen by the council solely on the basis of his fitness. Six administrative departments are provided, each to be headed by a director appointed by the city manager. The directors are to be responsible to him for the administration of their departments and may be removed by him at any time.

The title of mayor is to be preserved, but will be applied to the chairman of the council. This body is elective, its members to serve four years and be subject to recall. A civil service and efficiency board to consist of three members is to be appointed by the council.

Cheap Light and Power.

Winnipeg, Dominion of Canada, has just celebrated the third anniversary of its municipal lighting and power plant, which, it is claimed, provides the cheapest light and power in the world to wholesalers—3 cents a kilowatt hour. The profits for this year have been $60,000 on an investment of about $7,000,000. The Winnipeg plant has 35,000 patrons, an increase of 5,000 for this year. The gross receipts of the year were $1,088,000, and the plant has been increased in power house capacity from 25,000 to 50,000 horsepower.

Federation For Social Service.

Through the instrumentality of the chamber of commerce of South Bend, Ind., the charities and philanthropies of the city have been united into a federation for social service. The organization is modeled after the federations of Cleveland and Dayton, O.

...SES'S RISE IS A SLUGGER

...ry Comes With Him; ...Will Not Retire From the Mats

By Frank G. Menke.

New York, Jan. 5.—Barnstorming ...r major league clubs on route north ...ross the winning camps is no longer ...opular. Very few of the clubs will ...play more than six games on their ...way home next spring. And most of ...them will be against other major ...league clubs.

There are two reasons for the shift. One is that the playing of about a ...dozen games en route seemed to take ...the edge off the players form. An...other reason is that the games in ...small southern towns rarely produce ...enough in gate receipts to make it ...worth the major's while to linger ...around. It costs from $200 to $300 ...for a club to stop over at one of the ...small towns, and very often the share ...of the gate that the major league club ...got did not meet the expense.

Most of the clubs in the American ...and National Leagues have refused ...to schedule the small town clubs, and ...will be content to play from three to ...six games against clubs in the rival ...league, in an effort to get back part ...of the training expense money.

At the age of 48, George Bothner, ...the most remarkable wrestler in the ...world, denies reports that he is going ...to retire from the mat.

"Why should I?" he asks. "I'm ...as good now as I ever was."

Bothner is right about it, too. Just ...the other night he grappled a heavy...weight wrestler and pinned his shoul...ders to the mat in jig time.

Bothner has been wrestling for 18 ...years. He has been in actual compe...tition more than 1500 times. He never ...was thrown by a man of his own ...weight. Bothner rarely has weighed ...over 135 pounds, yet he has met mid...dleweights and heavyweights. He has ...defeated most of them.

"I keep in shape by wrestling an ...average of 36 men a week" said Both...ner. "I conduct a wrestling school ...and grapple with all my pupils. I ...don't believe in strict training. I ...drink when I feel like it and I smoke, ...big, black cigars. And I inhale them ...too. It doesn't seem to have hurt my ...wind."

Sherwood Magee, one time Phil...lie outfielder, who has been traded to ...the Boston braves, is quite a slugger. ...Also he's a reliable fielder. Governor ...Whitman's "I shall vote for your bill" ...heads the list. No legislator will be ...able to overlook the suffrage souvenir ...because it is in a yellow cover, which ...shrieks its mission to the most indif...ferent eye. The Empire State Cam...paign Committee is responsible for ...these souvenirs, which are really cop...ies of the January number of "The ...Woman Voter," a special campaign ...number, containing many bits of in...formation which the suffragists think ...the legislators ought to know.

Every member of Father Knicker...bocker's official family is said to be ...on record as favoring votes for wom...en, and nine members of the state ...judiciary. The women's campaign ...committee has in its possession let...ters from every member of the Legis...lature stating his position on the ...question.

Inasmuch as all the political par...ties had planks in their platforms ...recommending the submission of the ...question to the voters in November ...there is scarcely a dissenting voice ...against the passage of the bill in this ...session of the Legislature, though an...ti-suffrage members express their in...tention of voting against the women ...at the polls. Thee woman suffrage ...bill was passed by the Legislature of ...1913, but it must be passed a second ...time before it is submitted to the peo...ple.

What the Mayor Said.

The suffragists did not succeed in ...wresting from Mayor Mitchel any ...stronger indorsement of their cause ...than his speech at the Carnegie Hall ...meeting last May, when he roused ...the wrath of Mrs. Harriot Stanton ...Blatch by his lack of enthusiasm for ...women in politics. However, they ...still number him in their list of ...friends. His words at that time were:

"Whatever may be the outcome of ...the suffrage movement, it is the un...mistakable trend of affairs today to ...bring women forward to positions of ...influence in public and private affairs. ...It is my privilege to take the first ra...dical step in this direction."

Comptroller William A. Prender...gast, who is a stanch supporter of the ..."cause," made the following state...ment:

"I never could understand why wo...men should not be allowed to vote. I ...have seen many women in public po...sitions and their work was done quite ...as well as men's. That isn't saying ...that I couldn't make it stronger. The ...value of women's services to the city ...and state is quite as pronounced as ...men's, and their general attitude to...ward the city is quite as exemplary.

"There are so many good reasons ...why women should vote that every...body is able to make a suffrage argu...ment. My argument is that we need ...the intelligence and active effort of ...women to make a better job of gov...ernment—particularly city govern...ment—than we have made before. We ...cannot afford to permit intelligence ...of half the adult population of the ...country to have no direct relation to ...the most important business of the ...country—that is, government. No ...man has a right to oppose woman suf...frage who cannot place his hand on ...his heart and say that the present ...man-government is incapable of bet...terment. I do not know any such ...man."

Seven members of the Board of ...Taxes and Assessments have put ...themselves on record as approving of ...the suffrage demand for "Taxation ...with representation." Commissioner ...George V. Mullan said, "I am in favor ...of woman suffrage and intend to vote ...for it as a matter of principle. I have ...never heard any good reason against ...it."

Judges Favor Cause.

Among the members of the judi...ciary who are in favor of woman suf...frage is Charles W. When the question is ...submitted in New York State I shall ...certainly vote for it."

Other judges who said they were ...in favor of suffrage include Justice ...Leonard Hand, Samuel Seabury, ...Townsend Scudder, Charles L. Gu...

The suffragists will make no fur...ther effort to distract the attention of the legislators on Wednesday, the opening day, but when they reassem...ble for business, probably on Mon...day, the women will be on hand. There will be no regular suffrage lob...by this year, however, as the women feel confident of the passage of their bill.

"We expect the Legislature to make our bill the first one they pass," said Mrs. Catt, chairman of the Empire State Campaign Committee, yesterday "We think they will rush it through by January 20, and that the vote for it will be unanimous. No; we aren't worrying about the Constitutional Convention. We shall get our bill through the Legislature first, no mat...ter what the convention may do in April. CHRISTIAN SCIENCE DEFENDED IN SENATE

CALIFORNIA SENATOR DE...RIDES DOCTORS; MONEY WASTED, HE ASSERTS, BY THE GOVERN...MENT.

Washington, Jan. 5.—Assailing the United States Public Health Service as an instrument of tyranny over the people, and demanding that every citizen be privileged to exercise his own belief or conscience as to the manner of preserving his own health, Senator Works of California defend...ed Christian Science and derided the doctors in a speech to the Senate to...day. He quoted statistics to prove that the federal government now spends more than $20,000,000 annual...ly on the public health service. Only one school of medicine or mode of healing, he explained was tolerated.

"In the endeavor to preserve the public health," he said, "we have giv...en the Surgeon General and his sub...ordinates almost unlimited powers. We have usurped the constitutional rights and liberties of the individual. If contagion is feared, or an epidemic of disease, the Surgeon General is clothed with or assumes despotic and autocratic power. His authority is not exceeded by that of the General of the Army in time of martial law.

Slaves to Doctors.

"But, unfortunately, most of our citizens are willing and submissive slaves to the doctor whether he ap...pears in the uniform of a public of...ficial or serves in a private capacity. The extent to which intelligent peo...ple submit to the ministrations of the physician or surgeon take his ob...noxious drugs, and submit to be carv...ed, maimed and mutilated, by the sur...geon's knife, is one of the wonders of the age. The country is filled with hospitals, many of them veritable slaughterhouses, as reputable sur...surgeons themselves bear witness. The incompetence and recklessness of some physicians and surgeons have filled more graves and maimed and mutilated for life more of their un...fortunate victims, made more drunk...ards and drug fiends, and more help...less suffering invalids, than probably any other cause."

Sen. Works declared that the bill proposing to reserve to the govern...ment all radium-bearing lands was in effect a government endorsement of radium as a cure for cancer, when as a matter of fact the doctors them...selves were far from agreed as to whether radium were of any value for the treatment of cancer. He read a series of extracts from medical journals to prove that eminent medi...cal authorities were abandoning the radium cure theory.

"Many of the physicians are devot...ed and self-sacrificing humanitarians," conceded the Senator, "But the dif...ference between us is that some of them have not discovered a better remedy for disease than the one they employ, and others are not willing to acknowledge that there is a better mode of healing than their own, in the face of the most convincing evi...dence to that effect. I, in my own ex...perience, and by later observations, have become convinced that drugs and other material alleged remedies do not heal, and that there is a rem...edy, that, if rightly applied, will heal all our diseases. I have been the more reluctant to enter upon this dis...cussion because it necessarily leads, in an indirect way, into a discussion of religion, because of the conscien...tious belief on my own part, and that of thousand of others, that the heal...ing of disease is as much a religious rite as a redemption from sin."

Sen. Works presented an elaborate series of testimonials to the beneficial effects of treatment in medical and surgical cases by Christian Science. He then voiced his objection to the adoption as members, by the Ameri...can Medical Association, of all health officers of the government.

"The government," he said, "should see to it that the service is removed from any such influence, and made the unbiased and honest searcher for the best that can be found as a means of preventing disease and preserving the public health.

TURKISH CORPS WIPED OUT BY RUSSIAN 10th

Commander Taken By a Single Company; 35,000 Ottoman Prisoners; Supply Columns Lost

By FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY.

Petrograd, Jan. 6.—Broken remnants of the Turkish army that invaded Transcausasia are being pursued today by the victorious Russian forces. The defeat of the Ottoman forces was a rout. The Russians are reported to have taken 35,000 prisoners, besides vast quantities of war munitions and many guns.

The Ninth Turkish corps was annihilated, it was officially announced today and the Tenth corps was so badly shattered that it was unable to offer any organized resistance.

Grand Duke Nicholas notified the war office today that the Russian victory was complete and paid a tribute to the valor of the Russian troops.

The country through which the fleeing Turks are trying to escape will impede their movements and it is expected they will lose thousands of men in the chasms and deep streams that run through the mountains.

The report of operations from Grand Duke Nicholas was as follows:

"The defeat we inflicted upon the Turkish army at Sari Kamysh is complete. The Ninth Turkish army corps was annihilated. We captured the command of the corps, Iskham Pasha; the commanders of the seventeenth, twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth divisions and two of their lieutenants, with all their staffs; more than 100 officers and a large number of men.

"The losses of the Turks in killed and wounded are enormous. We took many guns and machine guns, large quantities of ammunition and many supply columns.

"The honor of capturing the commander of the Turkish army corps fell to a single company of one of our regiments.

"Our victorious troops are pursuing the remnants of the Tenth corps which are trying to escape, and are inflicting heavy losses upon the routed enemy, as well as taking numerous prisoners.

"In the capture of Ardahan one of our Siberian regiments charged the enemy and killed two companies of Turkish infantry. A squadron from the same regiment captured the colors of the eighth regiment of infantry of Constantinople. The Turks are falling back in all directions.

The Russian commander-in-chief added to his report a statement that on the front there was no change in the situation.

WAR WILL BRING LASTING PEACE, SAYS LUDWIG

By FREDERICK WERNER.

Berlin, via Amsterdam, Jan. 6.—King Ludwig of Bavaria celebrated his 70th birthday today by contributing $2,500 for the relief of wives and children of his soldiers. He also issued a manifesto praising the Bavarian army and declaring his belief that the enemies of Bavaria and the German Empire would be overwhelmingly defeated.

"Every German is now imbued with one thought—to make joyfully every sacrifice for the honor and protection of the Fatherland," he said. "I express an earnest desire that there be no great festivities on the occasion of my 70th birthday.

"With joy and pride I look upon the Bavarian army which has confirmed its ancient renown in glorious battles and proved itself a worthy member of the German army. I thank the entire Bavarian people which, in this serious time, have so splendidly proved their loyalty to the Fatherland and the royal house, putting aside all differences; it has but one object, and that is to serve the Fatherland. My confidence is immutable, overwhelming in the belief that the defeat of our enemies will assure a lasting peace which is worthy of the heavy sacrifices that enable me to lead my people forward along the way of economic and cultural developments. I beseech God to protect our beloved Bavaria, the Kaiser and the Fatherland and to give the German and Austrian armies victory over our enemies. That is my innermost good wish for Bavaria on this, my 70th birthday."

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Berlin, Jan. 6.—A terrific battle is being fought by French and German troops for the possession of the heights of Seinhemm in Alsace. In an official statement issued here this afternoon says that the French again gained a foothold on the heights and were driven off by the Germans at the point of the bayonet. The Germans have captured several trenches in the Argonne district taking 2 officers and 150 men, and in Poland they are continuing their progress taking several of the Russian points of support, with 1,400 prisoners and 9 machine guns.

Petrograd, Jan. 6.—Telegraphing from Warsaw the correspondent of the Bourse Gazette states that the Germans along the Bzura and Pilica, rivers in Poland, are preparing to retreat. Russian progress in the Carpathians seems to have made the Germans afraid of a wide turning movement in that region. They are preparing to retreat, apparently fearing that the Russians will cut them off from the base.

WORST OF SUBWAY WRECKS IN NEW YORK

Worst Tieup In History; Guards Kept Cool Heads, Overting Serious Panic

New York, Jan. 6.—One life was lost and four persons were overcome by smoke and fumes and hundreds of others, injured in a fire which destroyed a crowded subway train today 40 feet beneath the pavement at Broadway and 56th st. For three hours after the accident the police and fire reports claimed that fourteen bodies had been recovered and that two hundred other bodies were in the train. It was the worst accident in the history of the subway and it is considered marvelous that hundreds of others were not asphyxiated.

Fumes from the burning train poured through the darkened tube and filled other crowded trains, blocking the way and throwing the passengers into panic.

At the time the fire started the entire subway was out of commission due to an accident at the power house. All trains were stopped and all lights extinguished. Suddenly trains lighted up the gloom of the wooden coaches of the train at 56th st. began to blaze.

The one loss of life was that of an unidentified woman. All hospitals of Manhattan and as far as Williamsburg are housing injured or unconscious victims of the accident. It is expected many will die of the injuries. Until a canvass of the hospitals is made the extent of the casualties is unknown. Many firemen and policemen were overcome in rescuing passengers. Sidewalks along Broadway were ripped up and many unconscious persons were hauled up by means of ladders and ropes. At the height of the excitement the pavements were dynamited to facilitate the work of rescue. Fire Chief Kenlon described scenes in the subway as "Literally a chamber of horrors."

Investigation was begun by the District Attorney's office this afternoon to fix the reason for the accident. District Attorney Perkins accompanied by members of the staff and police officials assembled at the spot this afternoon to make a first hand investigation.

FEVER RAGES AMONG THE TROOPS OF KAISER WILHELM

By BERNARD BELANCOURT.

Rotterdam, Jan. 6.—Typhoid fever is raging among the German troops facing the Ypres in West Flanders, information received here privately today from Liege says that many German soldiers have arrived there from the front suffering from fever. They are conveyed through the streets at night. Every military hospital in Belgium and many of them in north Germany contain their quota of sick cases.

The Germans are reported to have reconstructed the French forts around Maubeuege, so far as they have been able to do so, and have strengthened them with earthworks on the western side of the city and wire entanglements.

A number of French and British prisoners have just been taken through Liege from the district around Rheims where they were captured. This indicates that British troops have been sent to strengthen the French center along the Aines and to take the place of French soldiers withdrawn for the Upper Alsace campaign.

The Germans are requisitioning all the motor cars in Belgium. They are making a fine tooth search of the devastated kingdom for copper, a metal which they need badly for war purposes. The ruins of deserted villages are being raked over and copper is being taken from doors and pumps. The metal is being sent into Germany as fast as it is found.

Four big guns, which were taken from the French near Rheims, have been taken to Liege, en route to Germany. They were displayed there for the benefit of the effect upon the Belgian population.

SEVEN HUNDRED VILLAISTS KILLED IN BIG BATTLE

By C. R. CROSSMAN.

Vera Cruz, Jan. 6.—General Alvaro Obregon notified General Carranza early today that he had taken full possession of the city of Pueblo and that the Villa forces which he defeated there yesterday were in full flight. Fighting took place in the streets until a late hour last night but finally the Villaistas were driven from their positions.

General Obregon reported that he took more than 600 prisoners. Unofficial reports say that fully 700 soldiers were killed in the battle.

"We have won the greatest battle of the revolution," General Obregon added in his report. "The soldiers loyal to the First Chief are pursuing the beaten rebels."

The streets of Puebla are said to be strown with bodies of the dead. The battle began on the outskirts of the city, but the Villaistas were soon driven into the town by the fierce attacks of General Obregon's troops. The Villaistas had mounted machine guns on the houses and in the tower of the famous Cathedral, but these were silenced by the well directed fire of General Orbegon's men. The Cathedral was badly damaged.

Before opening his attack, General Obregon had cut the Interoceanic railroad, preventing the arrival of reinforcements for the Villaistas from Mexico City, 63 miles away.

The attacking forces were aided by three aviators who flew high above the city and scouted out the positions of its defenders.

Rome, Jan. 6.—Pope Benedict was notified today that both Germany and Austria had accepted his suggestion that prisoners of war incapacitated for further service should be exchanged.

It was stated at the Vatican that the Pontiff regarded the action of the Teutonic allies as indicating success in his efforts to relief, in part at least, the needless suffering caused by the war.

GOVERNOR SCORES GLYNN'S REGIME

Former Administration Charged With Gross Extravagance In Creating and Maintaining Expensive Positions; Too Many State Officials

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 6.—Governor Charles S. Whitman sent a message to the legislature today, giving in detail the changes which he thinks should be made in order to combat the extravagance of the past, and bring about a more business-like state administration. He condemned some flagrant abuses unstintingly, and promises to take up further features of the situation in later messages, as he receives more information about conditions.

He brought his lash down on the backs of the previous administrations in these words:

"The increase, on an unprecedented scale, in the number of state officials and employes, and the reckless increase in salaries in nearly all departments during the last four years are explainable only by the existence of a deliberate plan to fasten the control of a party upon the state by the use of a vast amount of official patronage.

"Indeed, careful inspection of the state's pay-rolls, and examination of the qualifications possessed by great numbers of the state's employees almost inevitably force a fair-minded man to the conclusion that for years the result of the administration by these charged by law with the duty of enforcing this provision of the Constitution, as embodied in the Civil Service Laws of the State, has been to defeat rather than to accomplish the purpose of the law.

"To maintain, for instance, that under the new Workmen's Compensation Commission there should be sixty-two positions, such positions as assistant cashier, chief statistician, inspector of risks and safety, investigator, examiner of policies, attendants, examiners of claims, etc., positions carrying salaries ranging from $1,200 to $10,000, none of which can be properly filled as a result of a competitive examination, is to hold that the framers of the Constitution were entirely in error as to proper governmental methods.

"The Labor Department affords an equally conspicuous example of the gross violation of the fundamental law of the state, presumably acquiesced in by the Civil Service Commission at the request of the Labor Commissioner, in which an absurd number of places, carrying substantial salaries, are all exempted for the sole purpose, as I believe, of advancing individual political ambitions or of strengthening the control of a party by means of patronage. Special investigators, supervisors of printing, assistant mediators, secretaries to the division of industrial hygiene, mediator of industrial disputes, chief mediator, chief clerk of New York office, secretary to chief investigator, chauffeur, inspector of second inspection district, detective, assistant secretary, mechanical engineer; all drawing salaries ranging from $1,800 to $5,000, have been exempted in order that district leaders may control patronage and hold power."

Governor Whitman recommended that the Department of Efficiency and Economy, and the office of the State Fire Marshal be abolished, as unnecessary. He also declared the custom of special commissions brings an unjustified burden upon the people of the state.

He recommended that the officers of the three superintendents of election be abolished, and one state superintendents of election be abolished, and one state superintendent of election for the entire state be created. He further declared that the officer of Commissioner of Elections in all the counties outside of the state of New York, and perhaps to counties of Erie, Monroe, and Onondaga should be abolished.

For the conservation commission, he recommended legislation creating a single head, under whom there should be three exports, one to take charge of the division of lands and forests, the second, the division of inland waters, the third the division of fish and game. All the members of this department, he said, should be selected by civil service for their special fitness for their work.

He spoke of the gross abuses in the highway department, and recommended a non-partisan commission of three members with over-lapping terms. This commission would be appointed by the governor, with the consent of the Senate, full terms to be for six years each. The Board of Claims should be made a judicial body, and it should be made possible for it to keep up with its calendar.

Governor Whitman asked the legislature to have the question of woman suffrage submitted to the voters this year. The state militia should not be slighted, he said. The methods of taxation should be changed so that the functions of assessment and collection be separated and not performed by the same person or body.

(Full Text of the Message Will Appear Tomorrow.)

FRENCH MAKE HEAVY GAINS NEAR RHEIMS

Paris, Jan. 6.—German troops in Flanders are attempting to regain the ground taken by the Allies in the sand dunes along the coast and southeast of St. George's. Two attacks have been repulsed, it is officially announced here this afternoon. Along the Aisnes and around Rheims the French artillery have silenced the German batteries. The French troops have advanced 500 yards.

In the Argonne the French have retaken 200 yards of trenches. In the same region the French have blown up 800 yards of German trenches and are occupying them.

The French have gained ground in the region of Thaan and have maintained their position despite bombardment by the Germans. In this same region the official statement says the Germans have succeeded in reoccupying one of the old trenches on the eastern slope of hill No. 425, but the French hold the summit of this hill.

The Meaning of the Argentine Loan

The floating in this market of a $15,000,000 Argentine loan is a sign of the times. It is the first loan which the Argentine government has ever placed through a New York syndicate, and is therefore evidence of a new-born appreciation of this city's importance as a centre of credit.

The European war is bringing the United States and South America together in many new ways. Though our commerce with the Argentine has been rapidly increasing, we have been greatly handicapped in pushing it by poor banking communications. Now our banks are establishing branches in Buenos Ayres, and to a much greater extent exchange can be made direct, instead of through London. One thing which the war ought certainly to bring us is closer financial relations with our South American neighbors. We can finance their enterprises, if they give us their business instead of sending it to Europe. Better communications are essential, and the country would be ready to applaud Mr. Wilson for pushing his government ship purchase bill if he would only face the real need of the situation and seek to put all the government's investment into South American lines, which can never be established unless federal assistance is granted.

Now is the time to break down the artificial barriers which have kept us out of touch with the growing countries of South America.—Evening Telegram.

Keep the Apple Hanging High.

Dr. Worcester used a simile in his testimony before the Senate Philippines Committee which sums up the true philosophy of our relationship to the Filipinos. "I believe," he said "that the practical way to develop the Philippine people is to let the apple hang high and make them climb for it, instead of telling them to hold their hats and shake the tree."

Whatever we are going to give the Filipinos—education, economic opportunity, political training, autonomy or even independence—we should use to make them work for it themselves with all the energy of which they are capable. Self-help is the best lesson in life—for people as well as for individuals. A great inheritance thrust carelessly on an heir will be wasted; a great opportunity put in the hands of an incompetent will be misused.

There is no royal road to efficiency, and it is only cowardly sentimentalism to picture the Filipinos in their present condition as fit for self-government—let alone being fit to govern the non-Christian races in the Philippines. They will grow up to autonomy very gradually—after how many generations possibly, as ex-President Taft suggested yesterday. The apple is not ripe now. The present administration is doing the Filipinos a grave disservice in recklessly shaking the tree.—City Ledger.

THE GREAT ARMY OF UNFED

The great army of the unfed are pounding at our doors asking for recognition in their needs. Here and there one reads of the various societies, clubs and organizations searching with the best brains our country affords to find the wherefore. Varied and interesting indeed are the reports that find their way into print. Perhaps the most clearly made point is that Americans do not possess the natural qualifications and tendencies that make good servants.

The farmer, the manufacturer, the shopkeeper all can testify to the truth of the statement. For as a people we will not take orders. When an order is given, the average American starts a line of backtalk. Too many times has the employer found that the office boy can tell him how to properly conduct the business, and when, as a result of his efforts, he suddenly finds himself in the street jobless his astonishment knows no bounds.

Yes, the fields are ready for the harvest but the laborers are few. In agricultural lines the discouragement is great because of the labor famine, yet we find hundreds beating upon the doors of charity. Labor famine and an army of unfed is a peculiar combination.

When the unfed awaken and say: "I will do any work that my hands find to do—and I will do it well," perhaps the vexed question will have found its answer.

Our Trusteeship in the Philippines

Ex-President Taft is entitled to speak with full authority on conditions in the Philippines. More than any other American statesman he has labored with the problem of administration there, and more than any other he has taken to heart the welfare and progress of the people whose lot he made for many years his own. What he says about them and their future is inspired by the highest disinterestedness.

Theorists here may argue that the best possible government for the Filipinos is self-government. But the fact remains that the kind of rule under which the islands would fall, were the United States to withdraw its authority, would be a sorrowful travesty on self-government. If we are to take seriously our obligations in the Philippines we must fit the people for some sort of workable scheme of autonomy before we begin to talk of imposing on them the task of governing themselves. Not only are 90 per cent of the Filipinos unfit to take care of themselves, except in the crudest semi-civilized way, but the educated 10 per cent who must control do not even understand self-government in the sense in which Americans use the term.

Why not educate a new generation, as Mr. Taft urges, and give the islanders a common language and some common political ties and conceptions before spreading among them the notion that they are ripe for full autonomy or for independence?. If the supporters of the Jones bill preamble would confess that their only concern is to get out of the Philippins, no matter what happens thereafter to the Filipinos, their position, though selfishly shortsighted, would be intelligible. But it is arrant humbug for them to pretend that they have the interests of the people of the Philippines in view. To give the Filipinos anarchy and call it self-government would be a brutal short-cut solution of the Philippine problem. But it would not be a solution in harmony with the dignity or the civilizing mission of the United States.—New York Tribune.

Probing The Albany Departments

Governor Whitman's project for a general investigation of state departments with a view to administrative reform is excellent—if it can be confined to that. If it becomes more than that—the investigation "for reprisals or to fix responsibility for official wrongdoing on individuals" which he said it would not be—it is likely to be spread out so that results could hardly be achieved within his term of office. Special investigations in cases where criminal responsibility was indicated might with fitness be an offshoot from the proposed general probe. That, however, should be strictly limited to the one object of ascertaining the nature of the flaws in department workings and their proper remedy.

For this inquiry there already exists a splendid basis, if the Governor can obtain it, in the findings of experts of the Bureau of Municipal Research, who have raked the departments in a survey of methods of handling affairs. It would pay Governor Whitman's investigators also to read the report of the Sulzer Committee of Inquiry and then to follow up much which that body didn't go into thoroughly. There have been plenty of suggestions for correcting department evils—enough to keep the Governor's probers in material for study for many a night. The trouble has been that the recommendations weren't followed. If Governor Whitman can get from his inquiry a definite and fairly simple scheme of betterment and then can put that into effect, he will deserve the thanks of the taxpayers.—New York Tribune.

SPANISH WAR VETERANS.

Senator-elect James W. Wadsworth has been invited and, will attend, a dinner to be given in Oswego by the veterans of 1898 Spanish War veterans, in February. Mr. Wadsworth is a veteran of that war, having seen arduous service in Cuba and the Philippines. He will honor at the dinner the city's patriotic societies, the G. A. R. and Sons of Veterans of the Civil War.

A committee consisting of John McDonald, Captain Torrey A. Ball, Lieutenant C. S. Martin, F. D. Culkin, Frank J. Gill and Alfred Sheridan was named to make the necessary arrangements. Congressman Luther W. Mott will be invited to be one of the speakers.

The following officers for the ensuing year have been installed in the Oswego Camp:

Commander, Roger T. Sherman; senior vice commander, Henry Robertson; junior vice commander, Walter Vickery; officer of the day, John Griffin, officer of the guard, Edward Murphy; trustee, Daniel J. O'Mara; adjutant, Alfred Sheridan; quartermaster, Roland T. Clark; chaplain, Paul F. Standke; historian, George W. Morley; surgeon, Alonzo Bice; sergeant major, Andrew O. Anderson; quartermaster sergeant, John McDonald; color sergeants, William Powers, James Clayton; chief musician, Herman Schatz.

FULTONIANS

Birthday Biographies.
Jan. 6, 1915.

Many of the goodly number of men who have achieved results that have redounded to the benefit of this community have been of a former generation. Today we have the privilege of mentioning one who is still with us, and who is still vigorously striving for the best things for Fulton and the people who live here.

Coming to this community 35 years ago, he has been constantly on the outlook for someone to help, to some better public advantage that seemed to be lacking. Perhaps that rugged country off the head of Lake Ontario where he was born (1815) this date, instilled into the young son of the struggling young Methodist minister (Richard Redhead and his wife Elizabeth) who had come from England some dozen years before, this spirit of helpfulness.

At any rate we're glad to name among our citizenship a man with such a spirit as Edwin R. Redhead posses. Mr. Redhead studied extensively as a young man, Fairfield Seminary, Wesleyan University finishing at Syracuse University in 1874, and in the law offices of Judge Hanland at Port Byron, afterward.

While he did not pursue the course he had undertaken but took up commercial and manufacturing lines, his heart has remained there and his generous assistance to others to attain what otherwise they might do without, as well as his long connection with his alma mater as a trustee testify to that fact.

So well known are his activities in the church political and social life of the community that they do not need specification. Just as prominent are his records as a manufacturer, banker and business man. The head of the Victoria Paper Mills, the Citizen's National Bank and a leading spirit in the State st. M. E. church. For many years his residence was the home on the corner of Buffalo and 3d sts., facing the park and recently sold to the church of the Immaculate Conception for the site of the new parochial school.

This is Mr. Redhead's birthday—fellow citizens.

HELD FOR GRAND JURY.

Mexico, Jan. 5.—Alexander Ward, resident in the town of Volney, was arrested by Deputy Sheriff William H. Fish late Saturday night at the Gantley House at Vermillion. The warrant charged him with grand larceny in the second degree in having taken a horse and cutter belonging to Roy Risley from a transient barn in this village. Ward was arraigned before Justice G. W. Johnson Sunday afternoon and held to await the action of the Grand Jury.

If your friends need boostin', boost 'em;
Don't hold back and wait and see
If some other feller's willin',
Sail right in, this country's free;
No one's got a mortgage on it.
It's just yours as much as his;
If a fellow needs a boostin', boost him,
You get in the boostin' biz.

"If things don't just seem to suit you,
An' the world seems kinder, wrong,
What's the matter with boostin'
Just to help the thing along;
'Cause if things should stop a goin',
Would just keep that horn a blowin',
Boost 'er up with all your might.

"If you see some people tryin'
For to make our paper go,
You can boost it up a little,
Then you're not a going to knock,
Just because it ain't your shout,
But you're goin' to boost a little Boostin' is the best thing out.".

MUSINGS FROM THE OLD ARM CHAIR

FULTON OF 80 YEARS AGO.

—"Old things are passed away."

There are some localities that change so little from their rudimentary beginnings that old land marks or relics of former days still survive. And size or growth are not tests of eradication by any means.

Now here's your own fair city fairly well modernized. You have no "century old" buildings. There's New York city, with all of its marvelous growth is still a treasure trove to the historian. With all its vast hordes of foreigners—aliens who care less for old things, in this country than the horses who haul heavy loads on those very streets—I say notwithstanding all these, such relics as old "Greenwich village," Trinity and St. Paul's churches and similar "land marks" are carefully preserved. The old Treasury and the Battery are still other forms of memorials from other days.

Not so in your city. Tradition is the only thing left to recall a hundred if not more, spots or buildings of local historical value.

Sometime since I called to mind a picture of the village as it was eighty years ago. Not that I ever saw it in that day—but as, leaning back in my old armchair, I called to mind the many things I had read and heard of that period. In boyhood days I used to take an interest in speculating why, if in those days the roads left the "landings" diagonally in going eastward they were ever discontinued. Many cities we know have diagonal streets crossing those laid out at right angles. We have no further to go than Syracuse.

Now when Fulton was incorporated as a village, April 29, 1835—just eighty years back there were two highways, one leaving either "landing" and meeting at the present juncture of Emery, and Utica at 7th. Yet today the only traces are Emery st. and the short block now styled Wells st.; I believe the latter can boast of three houses at the most.

In those boyhood days I could trace these roads by several old houses built at angles to the present (and then) existing streets. The only one still preserved is I believe just off Academy and 6th st., and I do not know but that may have been squared around in anticipation of the opening of 6th st. south.

There were a number of others, notable the Putterill house (standing opposite the residence of Fire Chief Waugh) and one on the road to the upper falls, also at least two points fences remained on those boundaries. On Cayuga, between 5th and 6th the fence indicated a lot but a few rods deep at the west and still less at the east. Doubtless it has been replaced by a dwelling, now.

The village charter in defining the southeast limit said:

"Beginning at the southwest corner of the State reservation at the Oswego Falls; thence along the south and east sides thereof to State st. thence along the public highway northeasterly to the four corners at the eastern boundary of Steen's location; then——"

Numerous "old" houses remain, but where are the two old colonial pillard front houses, one long known as the "Half-Way" and the other the home of Asa Phillips. Even the two Schenk homesteads have fallen into decay. I understand that what was the oldest, the one facing W. 1st between the approaches to the lower bridge has been demolished. The Phillips house burned, but the most centrally located of the lot the Crombie place after long infection by foreigners was torn down and new homes erected on the lawn once planted to trees.

There are places whose history dates back but little further than Fulton's where old log-cabin dwellings are pointed out with pride as some one's or other headquarters. But a short time since I had the pleasure of rambling about a quaint (to me) city because it was a mixture of this oldtimeness and most modern dwellings, public buildings and factories.

Before I draw the picture of Fulton back in 1835 let me refer to this contrast. A goodly city of perhaps 50,000, divided at its narrowest point by a dirty creek skirted by a railroad. The creek creeping like a tumbled down capital S. Just before reaching the last curve that stopped at the depot the railroad and creek skirted a fine new electric plant. Yet in the yard toward the street stood an ancient Friend's meeting house, disused now by them but still surrounded by the graves of its former tenents. Not an abandoned building for it was utilized as a mission. The most imposing part of this city is its fine old Dutch houses. Two genuine century old log-houses still stand two blocks from the city's central square And most tantalizing of all, an ancient rookery that looks just half a house as if some monster had sliced it in two and boarded up the highest side.

To resume, as the other long winded story tellers, say, let me sketch briefly this picture of your city eighty years back looking at it from a top the hill.

Clustered about the site of the present bridge that is about to be removed, some to the west and others to the east of the older wooden structure, for the canal was already there, were quite a number of stores. The low brick building on Wall and Oneida streets was new then, in fact it was being constructed.

These business houses were wooden buildings interspersed with a brick one or so. Lewis Falley's place occupied the city of the coal office which I presume you will soon see demolished. The next establishment had a big name, Cady, Case & Co. John I. Wolcott, Charles P. and Almon Tucker, the Tousey Brothers, Douglass & Comstock, Leonard and Whitaker, Forsyth & Highriter (hatters and glove manufacturers) and Oliver Burdick. He it was who was building the "new brick block of stores."

The Genesee mills had been erected in 1832. (The barge canal construction witnessed the demolition of their successors built on the same site. Two other grist mills and Falley tannery and a saw mill—and of course the post office. To the north "down the river" the houses at the lower landing to the south, at the Falls, the settlement, where Mr. Lyons the stubborn postmaster held forth in his store. The old stone saw mill was here too. Some 600 inhabitants dwelling in variously located houses. One prominent one being that of Almon Tucker where the Quirk theatre now stands.

Two churches the Presbyterian at the southwest corner of 2d and Oneida, flanked by a blacksmith shop and combination store and hall, the later occupied by the school that developed in Falley Seminary. The old school house (corner Cayuga and [illegible] was also the meeting of the B[illegible] and Universalists).

The latter had been holding services in the "upper" landing school located on the site of the present Free Methodist church, on State st. which places it as a block off the diagonally placed highway to the four corners.

Without a doubt the old Putterill home and the buildings of James Whitaker with the original Methodist church would occupy the foreground for we are looking at it from the east. The Whitaker property doubtlessly comprised several dwelling. A brick block on the site of the old Patterson block, (northeast corner Oneida and 2d) the old house up the alley, beside the dwelling now occupied by Dr. Keller and the oldest of his homes that building at 2d and Seneca. Charles G. Case was the proud possessor of a brick block at that time as well as the saw mill.

War: Pathos and Humor

BY HERBERT TEMPLE.

London, December 25.—Sniping in the trenches in Flanders is murder, says an Oxford University professor in a letter home which has just come into my possession. He gives a vivid account of the horrors of warfare in a pine wood where the Germans can be heard sapping 30 yards in front of the British line.

This professor of Greek and Latin has been a master of scouts since August. He writes to his junior dean from some place in the vicinity of Ypres. His letter is as follows:

"This is the thirteenth day in the trenches, at least I think so, but I can hardly tell, and I have experienced everything but a bayonet charge and a wash. We have been holding trenches in a pine wood—at least it was a pine wood, now it is match wood, soaked, splintered, spattered with wet and blood. There has been no hand-to-hand fighting. It has all been done by the shell and rifle fire, with pneumatic bombs. The German's main trench runs in a line, whose nearest point is 500 and furthers 1,300 yards from us. But in between they have been burrowing up, and in the last few days, when I have been scoutmaster, I have discovered subsidiary trenches, pits, and dugouts from within 100 to 30 yards of our line. You can't see them because of the tangled woods, but you can hear the men digging and hacking as soon as you get five yards out. I myself have constantly within the last few days been within thirty yards. This morning I shot at four men in a pit at a range of five yards in the weird light of a damp and frozen November dawn. It was all like a dream seeing the phantom spade rising and falling behind a mound of damp earth, creeping up pistol in hand through broken and small tree trunks, peeping down into a six-foot pit, sighting four ghostly blue-gray figures and punctuating the whole gray unreality with four red pistol flashes.

"I didn't wait long. I may have hit one or two, but the others had rifles in their hands by this time, and their main line of dugouts was only twenty yards in front of me. I turned, called upon the two scouts who were with me, and fled. (I am going to tell you what a brave man I am, because I don't know when I shall be hit, though somehow I feel confident I shall come through, and I want to leave a testimony. You'll think I'm a savage. Sniping is little little better than murder.)

"No one who hasn't seen this can realize what it is like.

The Germans have a hell of a machine which has been brought into play against our trenches in the last three days. Shot from a distance of 300 yards, a two-foot long projectile, which one can watch at all points in its flight, goes high into the air and comes down almost plumb at the point aimed at. It is called, I believe, a Minenwerfer—200 pounds of shell. A special corner of our line—not our company section, thank God—has been their special aim. They put these infernal bombs into a circle of thirty yards radius. They smash in the trenches, blow men to bits and stupify and poison others.

"I had the escape of my life yesterday afternoon. I had reconnoitered all the German positions in front of us, going out daily at dawn and dusk, and nearly always coming within thirty yards of our enemy—I and my four scouts. I reckon we have shot some Germans, though I am a rotten marksmen and the twilight and the pine wood is no help to scoring. In consequence, I think I have a certain kudos at battalion headquarters. We had nothing of the king before—a great mistake, for now the enemy do not let us move an eyelid above our trenches. Some spots are perfect death-traps before their snipers, thought fortunately the ground is too difficult to let them snipe all along the line. Still, they can mark accurately where we are, and, most unfortunately, where our Maxims are. It is useless now to push them back. We are not strong enough, and between their advanced dugouts and their main trench they can prepare their devilish device, the Weary Willie, their bomb, shot probably from a pnumatic gun, and which you can see coming at you all the way."

A census at Oxford shows that two-thirds of the students and faculty are either now in the fighting or in training camps. The Oxford dons has shown special enthusiasm. Every one aged less than 60 years has responded to the call, "Your king and country need you." The younger dons are commissioned officers in the active forces, while the older are enlisted for home defense.

This has brought about the curious situation that the British are in a minority at the university. The larger part of the student body consists of Indians, Americans and other foreigners. Instruction at the university is somewhat curtailed on account of the Red Cross work being done in Oxford. Thee examination schools, Town Hall and Masonic buildings are military hospitals while convalescents are using the college gardens. The students spend a part of the day nursing.

BY FRANKLIN P. MERRICK.

Paris, Jan. 6.—With three bombs he made himself an officer of engineers of the of the British army has just performed an exploit worthy of chronicling. He crept up to the German trenches and killed fifteen Germans, besides destroying a machine gun.

This sapper was stationed at a point of the battleline where the British and German trenches are near to each other. He fitted up a laboratory in a farmhouse in which he was quartered and here he began to manufacture hand grenades. These he decided to test personally.

A few dozen yards before the first British line was a German trench in which was posted a machine gun that had killed many English.

The trench was cleverly built in sections, so that the British could not capture one point and then fire down the trench. It was like a row of old fashioned church pews, each pew say six yards long with about five Germans in it. The machine gun was posted in a pew so situated that it could sweep the whole front for a long distance. Before it was a shield and a parapet.

The British officer selected a time when it was quite dark and crawled carefully to within about a dozen yards of the machine gun's position. He carried one of his home made bombs in each side pocket and another in his hand. He hurled the first right in next to the machine gun.

There was a terrific explosion and the single man in the trench to remin alive screamed with pain. The machine gun was hopelessly wrecked.

The Germans along the line did not realize what had happened. The bold sapper was not content with the damage he had wrought, so instead of crawling back to safety he leaped into the trench with the machine gun and the dead and dying Germans. The compartments of the trench were connected by passageways, making an angle. The Germans in the compartment next to that of the machine gun were in an uproar, firing in the direction of the British lines and evidently believing the Allies were delivering a general attack. The Englishman hurled his second bomb among them. Five or six Germans were torn to shreds. Into the second compartment the sapper crawled and cast this third and last bomb into the next group along the line. The effect was as great as before.

To clear out the three compartments of the trench had been the work of not more than three minutes. After completing his task the officer wriggled back to his own lines unharmed.

HOW TO FOIL THE BUTCHERS

New Yorker Tells Women How to Get the Best Cuts of Meat

New York, Jan. 5.—"How do you recognize a round of beef over the telephone?"

This was the first question flashed at Theodore Carlewitz, demonstrator for Richard Webber, butchers, of 120th st. and 3d av., when he set out to show the Housewives' League yesterday morning how to choose the different cuts. Mr. Carlewitz brought a whole beef to the headquarters of the league, on the sixth floor of 25 W. 54th st., and carved it before the eyes of the three hundred women who came to get the lesson. It was when he was explaining that the round end of the rump was the best for corned beef that a soprano voice inquired how she could know it over the wire.

Similar questions in regard to distinguishing lamb from mutton, getting the best cuts of the rib and so forth, indicated that in spite of the admonitions of Mrs. Julian Heath not to order by telephone most of the members of the league do so. The man in the white apron assured them that telephone customers are as well served as those who go to the shop, basket on arm.

"Learn the names of the different cuts, call for what you want by the right name and insist on having it," he said. "You'll get it."

The beef, which was a big one, made some commotion when it was carried up in the elevator, disputing passage with a group of suffragists who were headed for the Women's Political Union headquarters on the ninth floor. But Mrs. Harriot Stanton Blatch, declaring that "the home goes first," made way gracefully when she learned that the beef was to be used to teach women to be better housekeepers.

Two butchers, also in white aprons, assisted Mr. Carlewitz by cutting up the beef while he gave the lecture. Mrs. Heath soon had to come to the front and repeat his remarks, as his voice could not be heard by the audience. Their interest would have delighted those persons who fear that woman is losing her liking for housewifely occupations. Notebooks in hand, they listened eagerly while they were led all the way from chuck steak, at 16 cents a pound, to filet mignon, at 60 cents.

"Well! well!" murmured a white-haired woman, "I've kept house forty years, and to think I never knew that round-bone sirloin, at 25 cents a pound, had even less waste than flat-bone sirloin, at 25 cents. In fact, sirloin was sirloin to me, and I knew no difference in the cuts."

Short ribs, the demonstrator informed the women, make the most nourishing cut for soup, and are sold by honest dealers at 12 cents a pound now. He spent some minutes in extelling what he called "skirt steak," which at 18 cents a pound he said gave to buyers more for their money than almost any other cut.

"It looks rather measly to me," said a blond-haired bride in the first row.

"It's all right when it's cooked," Mr. Carlewitz assured her.

Getting meat in fairly large quantities was the best way of economizing, he said.

"You can get a ten-pound forequarter of lamb for $1.50 at the present time. Out of this you get a stew, a roast and twelve rib chops. The chops, if you bought them as chops, would cost 26 cents a pound. Same way with fillet of beef. Bought separately, cut up, they cost 60 cents a pound, but a whole piece, making about ten fillets, is only 50 cents."

Everybody crowded around eagerly when the demonstrator explained how to tell the difference between lamb and mutton.

"Get the butcher to break it at the joint," he said. "If it is a clean cut, showing round, smooth ends of bone, sort of white, it is mutton; but if the cut shows four rough protuberances, reddish in color, it is lamb."

"Well!" sighed his hearers, "we don't see how we can tell that by telephone."

The lesson at the league headquarters next Monday will deal with the right way to cook the different cuts of meat. B. La Mano, a hotel chef, will preside. Saturday afternoon the children of the Junior Housewives' league will have a lesson in candy making.

HAM HYATT, HARD HITTER, WILL DO PINCH HITTING FOR ST. LOUIS CARDINALS

Ham Hyatt is a baseball player who specializes in knocking the ball long distances. Perhaps he can do something else. He may be an outfielder But he is certainly a hitter, and that is the reason he has been bought by the St. Louis Cardinals from the Pittsburgh team. If he can hit the ball often enough there is no question of his value to a club, as he knocks it far enough to suit the slowest runner.

About Sports Generally

By FRANK G. MENKE.

New York, Jan. 6.—Gosh, you're missing a lot of laughs if you aren't reading the "All About Myself" articles that are being composed by Jess Willard, a cow-puncher, who is scheduled to act as a punching bag for a dark gent named Johnson.

Mister Willard recently took his pen in hand and when he got through rubbing it along a few sheets of paper it was discovered that Willard had accomplished a new trick in the prize fighting line—he has issued forth with alibis before alibis really are due.

'If I suffer defeat at the hands of Jack Johnson no one ever will hear a chirp out of me. Then and there I will be through with the fighting game."

You can see by this that Willard looks for the worst. He didn't name the undertaker that he wishes to take charge of his remains, probably because his manager, in whom Willard has a lot of confidence, will take care of that end of Willard.

"The main reason I'm in the limelight is because I am matched to fight Johnson" continues Willard.

Willard deserves credit for that statement. It was our belief, until Willard wrote these words, that Willard figured he was in the limelight because he was a real fighter.

Perhaps you have wondered why Willard wants to fight Johnson. Many folks have hazarded the guess that the reason for it is that he wants to give his relatives a chance to collect his life insurance before witing around too long. If you are among that crowd you are wrong in your hazard.

Willard wants to fight Jack Johnson so that he can beat Jack Johnson and bring back to the dear, dear white race the heavyweight championship of the whole wide world. If you don't believe this, here are the words of Jess to bear us out.

"I believe a white heavyweight champion would do more to boost the boxing game than a colored one. I believe I will bring the title back to the white race."

Willard also says:

"Fed people realize what it would mean to me to win the heavyweight title."

Jess is wrong there. Everybody knows what it would mean. It would mean that the day of miracles are not past.

"If I never secured a penny for performing the feat" says Willard, "I would feel amply repaid for bringing the title back to the white race."

While the pen was still in his hand, Willard composed a few lines to explain why he has ignored the defis for a fight that have been hurled at him during the past two months by "white hopes" who think they can whip Willard, and who feel they are better suited to meet Johnson.

"I have refused to fight the other "white hopes' and Langford and Jeanette because I am after one particular goal—Jack Johnson" states Willard. Going along further on the subject, Willard qualified his statement, thusly:

"I must impress upon my readers the fact that the staging of a Johnson-Willard fight will involve an initial outlay of $50,000. When it is realized that such a sum is to be expended, it is plain to be seen that I am in honor bound to be in the best shape for that battle. Therefore, I cannot tke a chance on getting hurt by meeting any dangerous heavyweights at this time."

After supper reports were made which showed that the various organizations of the church are in a flourishing condition and have concluded a successful year of work.

During the year the church has installed two new furnaces and made many substantial improvements and repairs in the basement of the church. The cost of these extras has been fully provided for, leaving a balance, when all is paid in. The treasurer has received and disbursed upwards of $2,000; the Ladies' Missionary Society above $300, the Sunday school nearly 300 and over $200 has been given in benevolent offerings.

The Sunday school has an enrollment of 355 members and has 9 organized classes some of which are strong in numbers and do much work in many ways.

Officers were elected to take the places of those whose term of service had expired.

The Society officers elected were: Trustee, F. J. Switzer, Fred I. Palmer; treasurer, F. J. Switzer; society clerk, George B. Fairman.

The church officers elected were: deacons, F. J. Switzer, William Russell; treasurer, Mrs. G. B. Fairman; church clerk, Miss Pearl Parker.

The Sunday school officers elected are; superintendent, Z. Newell; secretary, Wallace Russell; assistant secretary, Nicholas Mansfield; treasurer, E. J. Bishop; pianist, Miss Gladys Krisge; supt. of primary dept., Mrs. Chas. Olmstead; assistant supt., Mrs F. M. Preston.

The following were previously elected in the Young People's society of Chrisitan endeavor.

President, Nicholas Mansfield, jr.; vice president, Wallace Russell; secretary, Miss Mildred Norton; treasurer, Miss Pearl Parke; assistant treasurer Elvira Gifford; pianist, Fred Pollard; choirister, William Cramer.

The church starts the year with a membership of 254 of whom but few are absentees.

MEDAL AS REWARD.

Charles Nettleton the 14 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus Nettleton, N. 1st st., will not go unrewarded for his bravery in rescuing Ralph Dolbear his playmate from drowning. A petition for a Carnegie medal for young Nettleton is being circulated by friends and interested parties who want to see the boy rewarded.

Nettleton's young friends treat him as a hero much to his dislike. His modesty is characteristic of those who would risk their lives for others.

WEST SIDE ROBBERY.

The home of Mrs. Hannah Chubb, W. 3d and Leitch st., was entered by thieves Monday afternoon and some money taken.

Mrs. Chubb had placed $14 in a small savings bank; the bank and money are both missing.

The case is in the hands of the police department.

GUNMAN CONFESSES.

Frank P. Cassidy, the youthful Syracuse gunman now under arrest, confessed to Chief of Police Martin L. Cadin that he is the lone bandit who has been terrorizing the city since December 19.

Young Cassidy admitted that he held up and robbed two street car conductors and also that he shot Ferdinand N. Mass, the Stuart avenue butcher, last Saturday night.

The confession was made after the bandit had been under surveillance in his cell for many hours. Abandoned by his friends and members of his family, the youthful bandit became disheartened and informed the chief that he was ready "to come through."

Wild West tactics and extreme daring marked the operations of the young man, according to his own story of the four sensational hold-ups in which he played the leading role. Like famous Western highwaymen heroes, he worked single handed and kept his victims covered with his revolver until he had gained a chance to make good his escape.

UNIVERSITY BUYS RESIDENCE FOR DR. DAY.

The William Nottingham residence at Walnut av., Harrison st. and Comstock av., has been bought by Syracuse University as a permanent residence for Chancellor Day and future heads of the institution.

Mr. Nottingham takes as a part of the transaction property valued at $125,000 which includes the present residence of the Chancellor.

It is through the loyalty of Mr. and Mrs. Nottingham to the University, both being graduates of the institution, and to the generosity of John D. Archbold of New York, who made possible the famous stadium and well equipped gymnasium, that Syracuse University comes into possession of one of the most artistically designed and appointed residences in Syracuse.

LYNCH APPOINTS MINISTER.

The Rev. W. T. Clemens has been appointed by James M. Lynch as one of the five superintendents of the State Association of Charities and churches.

Mr. Clemens, who was graduated from Syracuse University in 1911, was the only person in a class of twenty-two who passed the civil service examination held in this city last summer and his name was certified to Commissioner Lynch by the State Civil Service Commissions. The position pays a salary of $2,000 a year.

The Syracuse office of the State Employment Bureau will be located in the new Cahill Building in South Salina street. The offices already have been completely equipped and Mr. Clemens will take charge of them during the next two weeks. A period of two weeks will be devoted to the work of training the superintendents.

WANTS NOBLE'S JOB.

(Oswego Times.)

William W. Cronin of Syracuse is out for the position of terminal engineer, State engineer's department, now held by Guy L. Noble, well known in this city. The position pays $4,000 per annum and it is intimated from Albany that Mr. Noble is to be asked to retire. According to dispatches Governor Whitman plans to combine the terminal and regular barge canal departments. In this event Guy Moulton, appointed barge canal division engineer, may direct both branches of the work.

A TOPIC OF DISCUSSION.

For some time there has been a great deal of controversy over the drainage along Academy st., between 4th and 7th sts. The drainage in this locality is very bad, and something should be done in remedying the trouble before the spring thaw begins. What is beneficial to the traveling public is also of great benefit to the property owners, and the latter paying taxes as they do, should receive consideration.

DANGEROUS CONDITIONS.

Western Approach to Lower Bridge in Bad Shape—Trolley Tracks Poorly Cleared.

This morning another tip-over occurred because of the peculiar way the trolley tracks are cleared. Just a week ago a serious coident resulted on the bridge.

The Times reporter say the single rig, a cutter, capsizing and slipping down the six inches or more of slope to the rails and catching there.

A man and woman who were in the sleigh were tossed out, the robe, cushion and their belongings scattered. The horse was frightened and ran. Fortunately no apparent damage was done aside from broken harness. The occupants of the cutter were indeed "upset".

Before the "Times" man could cross the bridge a funeral procession passed over the bridge and at the same spot the sleighs tipped badly but managed to cross safely. This dangerous condition should be remedied.

CITY COURT NEWS.

The assault case arising from a fight which occurred some time ago at the N. Y. O. & W. depot between Dan Soper, baggageman, and Peter Saber, an Italian, was up before Judge Wilson this morning.

The defendant in the case claimed that Saber along with several other Italians had a habit of congregating near that part of the room set apart for the women patrons, smoking cigarettes and being offensive. When asked to leave the foreigners replied that Soper could not put them out.

Soper attempted to do this, and was attacked by several Italians. During the melee Saber sank his teeth deep into the left arm of Soper which caused a painful injury. Soper showed his arm in Court this morning for the judge's inspection, and it still appeared in bad condition.

However, Soper did not wish to continue the case. Owing to this the judge warned the Italians to keep away from the depot in the future unless they were to wait for a train.

Peter Massaro acted as interpreter for the court.

At the time of the stault, a young Italian remarked to Soper: "My friend, we get you." He was also warned by the judge to be a little more careful of his speech in the future.

BAD HUSBAND.

Oregon, Ill., Jan. 6.—Barricaded on a house on an icebound island on the Rock river, James Boyer, a four times paroled convict and wanted for burglary, today telephoned Sheriff Mackay that he would kill a woman, a baby and a man whom he has imprisoned in a cabin as hostages the moment the posse fires the first shot at him. At dawn this morning the sheriff and a strong force crossed to the island. The sheriff said he hoped to take the convict alive, but would take "him anyhow" Boyer was armed with a rifle with which he fired on a deputy Tuesday.

BASEBALL MAY COME FROM SUIT

Outcome of Suit Awaited With Interest; If Feds Win Players Will Lose

By FRANK G. MENKE.

New York, Jan. 6.—In the two weeks before argument is begun at Chicago before Judge Landis in the suit brought by the Federal league against organized baseball there is likely to be an important movement toward peace. This is expected to come from the men behind the National baseball commission, the American league and the National league.

The latest move of the "outlaws" in attacking the old leagues as a trust has thrown consternation into the camp of the organized baseball heads, despite their statements that they welcome investigation and have no fear of the outcome.

Today the attorneys for the Old Guard began preparations to combat the latest move of the Federals. The answer in a general way is expected to be a general denial of all the Federal claims and will in turn charge the Federals with planning to introduce dishonest methods into the national game.

BOND BUYERS LOATH TO TAKE UP ISSUE

Board of Education Begins Inquiry to Learn Why There Is Reluctance; New Committeemen Appointed

At a meeting of the Board of Education, last evening, the following members went carefully over the financial reports for the year ending Dec. 31, 1914:

D. C. Case, 1st ward; J. R. Sullivan, 2d; J. Adrilli, 3d; A. T. Jennings, 4th; Dr. Gladman 5th; A. E. Krause 6th; and L. C. Foster member at large.

The meeting was held in the high school office, and was called to order by President Foster. The first to arrive was A. E. Case, who succeeds Joseph H. Conners of the 6th ward; then in order followed, Messrs Case, Foster, Achilli, Sullican, Gladman, and Jennings. Dr. E. A. Gladman succeeds Fred A. Miller of the third ward.

The insurance carried on schools, according to the report at the present time, is $20,000.

The first subject taken up by the board was the bond issue. The bonds for the new schools were bought and sold about six months ago; but the money is slow in coming. A reasonable time has been given to the holders of these bonds to pay for them; the city is paying interest on money not in evidence, and unless the holders respond with the cash pretty soon the bonds will be resold. Attorney Jennings offered a motion (adopted) that a committee be appointed to investigate the responsibility of the persons holding the bonds and if found to be unworthy, the bonds to be again advertised and resold. "It would seem," said Mr. Jennings, "that some of the buyers are holding out in order to sell later on, and thus gain a profit on something they never paid for."

The motion was seconded by Mr. Achilli, but no vote was taken at the meeting. However, Messrs. Jennings and Gladman were assigned as a committee of two to call on Judge Fanning and Mayor Fox, and investigate the matter. They are to report the result of the investigation at the next meeting of the board.

A bill for $200.00 payable to the Rochester Lighting Co., for lights furnished the Erie st. school was approved, and allowed to be paid.

A letter from Miss Gibson, offering her resignation as teacher of the third grade in the Erie st. school, was read by President Foster; and upon discussing the matter, the board agreed to accept the resignation at the end of the present term. Miss Marie Hawkins of Oswego, who is now a substitute teacher, was recommended to fill the vacancy.

According to the reports read there was $340.00 spent for new sidewalks during the year just ended.

A debt of $370.64 is due Mr. Platt. Payment was recommended.

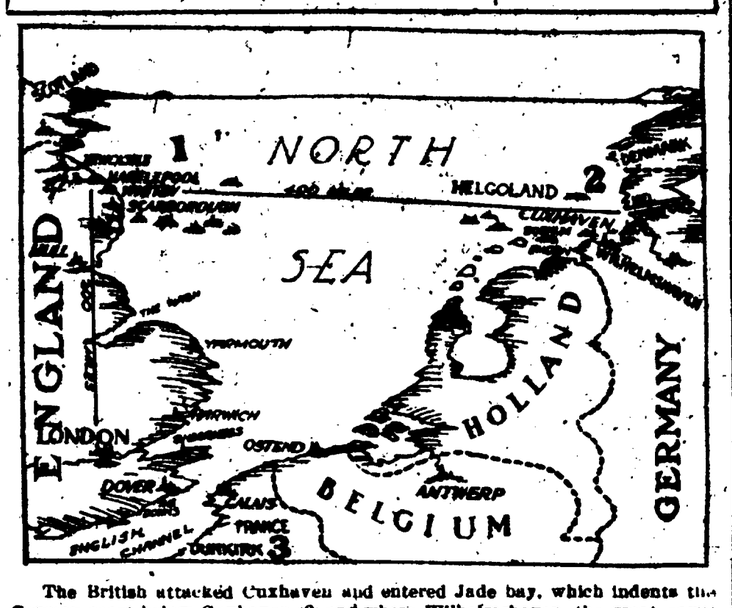
The Gunner's Ballad By Himself

The following poem was written in a trench in Flanders by Gunner Louis Smith, of the British Royal Field Artillery:

Our Happy family consists of three—
The Corporal, the Bombardier, and me.
In various climes it's been our fate to roam,
Till here together we have found a home.
It isn't furnished in the latest mode
But then we trust it ain't a permanent abode.

The roof was once, I think, a stable door;
Of straw's the carpet that adorns the floor;
The walls are of a quite superior clay
That stick to one, and won't be hired away.
Adown those walls the melting snow is trickling,
And down the Corporal's neck—his comments are most tickling.



We're somewhat limited for space, 'tis true;
If I turn round so much the other two
And getting in and out becomes a bore
When one is rather wider than the door.
But still we're not too slow in taking cover
When those confounded German souvenirs come over.

In reiniscent mood we sip our tea—
The Corporal, the Bombardier, and me.
We harken back to Mons and Le Cateau—
"I wonder what's become of So-and-so;
I hear the Nobby Johnson's sent a letter
To say that they took a blooming leg off, but he's better."

"Pass up the pozzy, if it's not all done."
But hark! "Eyes front! Turn out and man your gun."
There goes the tea, the jam is on the floor;
"I've stuck again—my blessings on this door—
Three thousand yards, correcter 1-6-2
And "Fire"—my German friends, a souvenir for you.

Down falls the night, and also falls the rain;
The sentries mount, we seek our home again;
And, clinging closed the blessed warmth to keep,
Seek brief oblivion in a dreamless sleep,
Till dawns the day upon the sodden trenches,
And calls to "Action front" our army known as French's.

Map of Three Sensational Raids Recently Made by Sea and by Air.

The British attacked Cuxhaven and entered Jade bay, which indents the German coast below Cuxhaven (2) and where Wilhelmshaven, the great naval station, is situated. This raid was in retaliation for that made by German warships on the British coast, when Hartlepool, Whitby and Scarborough (1), all shown on the map, were bombarded. Following the Cuxhaven raid the Germans in turn sent five air men to raid Dunkirk (3), with the result that many bombs were dropped, killing fifteen persons and damaging many buildings.

BLACK MARIAS MAKE THE BRITISHERS SHIVER

Special to The Evening Times.

London, Jan. 6.—British troops in the trenches in West Flanders and northern France are suffering seriously from scurvy and vermin. Water is scarce for drinking purposes and almost none at all is to be had for bathing purposes despite the great quantities of rain that have fallen. The following letter from a member of the now famous Middlesex regiment says:

"We have been kept busy lately waiting and continually moving from the beastly German shells. The Germans are using vast quantities of lyddite and many of the boys have been permanently deafened by the roar when they explode nearby.

"I have not had my clothes or my boots off for twenty days. All the others are in the same fix and the men have begun to suffer seriously from scurvy and vermin. There has been lots of rain, but there is little water for drinking or bathing purposes. The rain water goes chiefly to make quagmires of the fields and bogs of the highways.

"Mud, mud, that is the principal part of the landscape on every hand. We are living in dugouts at the foot of little hills or behind patches of woods.

"The Germans have four big guns in front of our lines which are liable to go off at any hour of the day or night. Each shell weighs 230 pounds and we call them 'black marias', they can shoot ten miles and the other day one struck near the edge of the trench burying me beneath a wagon load of mud and slime, but the boys dug me out before I suffocated.

"Yesterday was a terrible day. The German artillerymen kept blazing away from dawn to dark and it was impossible to get in or out of the first line trenches.

"This phase of fighting is far from our old conceptions of fighting. We seldom see Germans to shoot at except small parties of snipers.

"My teeth and gums are getting sore from eating the hard army biscuits and most of the others are in the same fix. We usually soak them in warm water or tea before we try to eat them. Writing paper and envelopes are very scarce at the front, for all the space on supply trains is now being taken up with provisions, ammunition, fresh arms and other accouterments. Only small packages now get through the military postal service; all big ones are barred.

Paris, Jan. 6.—A French railroad employe who furnished the Germans with information that resulted in their aerial raid upon Furnes while President Poincare was there was executed last night on a charge of treason. It became known today that the President had a narrow escape from death when a bomb dropped from one of the German aeroplanes exploded a short distance from him.

London, Jan. 6.—A news agency dispatch states that the Germans levied a war fine of 12,000,000 francs ($2,400,000) on Courtrai, Belgium on Monday. The municipal treasury being empty, bonds were issued to raise the money, a third of which must be paid at once. The Germans are said to have requisitioned $5,000,000 in money and goods near Hoogledе.

Amsterdam, Jan. 6.—Three Englishmen escaped from the Dutch interment camp at Croningen yesterday, but were recaptured early today at Meppel, 22 miles southwest of Croningen, whither they had ridden on bycicles.

Berns, Switzerland, Jan. 6.—An epidemic of smallpox has broken out in the Austrian armies, according to a dispatch from Trieste and has spread to the interior. General vaccination has been ordered.

FIRST ELECTROCUTION IN JERSEY.

DEFENDANT WINS SLANDER ACTION.

Jury Returns Verdict in Supreme Court—Recess Until Tomorrow.

A verdict for the defendant was returned today by a jury in the January term of Supreme Court in the action of Charles A. Peterson vs. Frank C. Wolever, for $10,000 damager for alleged slander. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant had called him a thief in selling a certain car to Waterman T. Parsons. The parties were members of the Ontario Motor and Garage Co., and got into a dispute last summer. Mr. Wolever alleged that the car in question had been sold to Peter Savas and that Mr. Peterson sold it to Mr. Parsons, Mr. Peterson held that he was a member of the company and had an interest in the car and that no sale had been made to Mr. Savas. The case was summed up last night and given to the jury by Justice Crouch this morning. After about an hour and a half of consideration the verdict was returned.

OSWEGO MAY GET FRUIT GROWERS STOR GE PLAT

CITY AFFORDS EXCELLENT LOCATION AND IS FAVORED BY BIG FRUIT GROWERS.

Oswego, Jan. 5.—The annual session of the Oswego County Fruit Growers' Association was held today at the Court House and it was largely attended. The building of a cold storage plant at this city was the principal subject of discussion at both the morning and afternoon meetings. The prevailing sentiment seemed to be favorable to the project but the association will consider the matter very carefully before any definite action is taken.

Endorsement of the proposition by Dr. W. H. Lattin of Albion, Orleans county, who owns large fruit farms in this county, and J. B. Beckwith, whose farm at New Haven under the superintendence of Michael Anderson is one of the best in the county, was very cheering to the advocates of the plan. Dr. Lattin said that there was no better location for a cold storage plant in the western New York fruit belt than at Oswego. He pointed out that experience had shown that cold storage apples brought on an average of $1.00 a barrel more than common storage apples. Mr. Beckwith said that he was glad to see that the matter was being seriously considered. Neither man was able to be present owing to the meeting of the State association.

There was a general discussion of the cold storage proposition this morning. Opinion was not unanimous in favor of the plan. Spencer Brownell of Oswego Town, a large fruit dealer, discussed the cold storage plant at considerable length.

Mr. Place President.

At the close of the session this morning President Quonce appointed thee following as a committee on nominations: D. D. Stone, A. C. Pease and M. Anderson, who recommended the following officers for the ensuing year:

President, Frank A. Place of Oswego Town; first vice president, R. M. Pierce of Oswego Town; second vice president, John Copeland of Scriba; secretary treasurer, N. C. White of Oswego.

The above officers were elected this afternoon. Professor Reddick of Cornell University addressed the meeting this afternoon, on the subject of cold storage and other matters. The discussion of the plan was then continued.

"The Oswego," a new apple, grown by L. J. Farmer, the strawberry king, was shown to the growers by Mr. Place. It is rather small but sound, a rich red in color, and resembles a Spitz.

For calks apply enough Hanford's Balsam once or twice daily to thoroughly wet the wound. —Adv.

Holds Off A Burglar.

How An Indiana Woman Was Able To Stand the Severe Strain.

Mrs. Johanna Foogely, of South Bend, Ind., recently passed through a most thrilling experience, which would be a severe strain upon any person and especially so a woman of 73 years of age. An Indianapolis paper contains a long and interesting account of it, saying that the burglar would have murdered the house had it not been for the coolness and presence of mind of Mrs. Foogely, who cleverly diverted his attention, even while the burglar kept a revolver at her hand, commanding her to be quiet or I will send a bullet through you," which he feared to remain longer. Fortunately for Mrs. Foogely who was permanently relieved of dangerous Kidney and Bladder disease in 1900, by the prompt use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, at the time she possessed this good health and strength she was able to withstand the shock of her recent experience. Here is the subsequent Mrs. Foogely gave, in 1900: "For over three years I suffered from the most distressing Kidney and Bladder trouble. Other remedies and my doctor failed to help me, but after taking Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy for a short time I felt better before I had taken the first bottle. I am now cured and I will always recommend it."

In 1913 Mrs. Foogely writes another letter in which she says, in part:

"My testimony is as good as ever. The doctors all gave me up and said my daughter that anyone with such Kidneys could not live. After I had taken three bottles of your Favorite Remedy I talked to one of the doctors who treated me. He saw that I was better. I told him what I was doing and he said I should keep on taking it. I took seven bottles and considered myself cured (that was 13 years ago). I am now past 73 years of age. I feel as well as ever, but a little nervous at present, owing to that burglar experience."

Brave Mrs. Foogely! She is a "little nervous," and who wouldn't be? But she had the strength to stand it and twelve years ago her doctors said she would die! She us Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy in time and another name is added to the long list of men and women who have been permanently relieved or cured of serious Kidney, Bladder and Liver troubles by this reliable medicine. Send to-day for a free sample bottle and medical booklet containing full information. Dr. David Kennedy Corporation, Rondout, N. Y. All druggists.

CHAPTER IV.

A Terrible Night.

SHE left me utterly wretched. What a boor she must have thought me, to misconstrue her simple act of kindness. I [illegible] myself with a hatred that sent [illegible] to my blanket in the [illegible] and that kept me, once there, [illegible] through all the early part of the summer night.

I wakened with a sense of oppression, of smothering heat. I had struggled slowly back to consciousness, to realize that the door of the pantry was closed, and that I was stewing in the moist heat of the August night. I got up, clad in my shirt and trousers, and felt my way to the door.

The storeroom and pantry of the after house had been built in during the rehabilitation of the boat, and consisted of a short passageway, with [illegible] for linens on either side, and [illegible] lighted by a porthole, the small [illegible] room in which I had been sleeping.

Along this passageway, then, I groped my way to the door at the end, opening into the main cabin near the chart room door and across from Mrs. Turner's room. This door I had been in the habit of leaving open for two purposes—ventilation, and in case I might be, as Mrs. Johns had feared, required in the night.

The door was locked on the outside.

I was a moment or two in grasping the fact. I shook it carefully to see if it had merely caught, and then, incredulous, I put my weight to it. It refused to yield. The silence outside was absolute.

I felt my way back to the window. It was open, but was barred with iron and, even without that, too small for my shoulders. I listened for the mate. It was still dark and so not yet time for the watch to change. Singleton would be on duty, and he rarely came aft. There was no sound of footsteps.

I lit a match and examined the lock. It was a simple one, and as my idea now was to free myself without raising an alarm, I decided to unscrew it with my pocket knife. I was still confused, but inclined to consider my imprisonment a jest, perhaps on the part of Charlie Jones, who tempered his religious fervor with a fondness for practical joking.

I accordingly knelt in front of the lock and opened my knife. I was in darkness and working by touch. I had extracted one screw and with a growing sense of satisfaction was putting it in my pocket before loosening a second when a board on which I knelt moved under my knee, lifted as if the other end, beyond the door, had been stepped on. There was no sound, no creak. Merely that ominous lifting under my knee. There was some one just beyond the door.

A moment later the pressure was released. It was then that a woman screamed—a low, sobbing cry, broken off almost before it began. I had got my knife by that time, and in desperation I threw myself against the door. It gave way, and I fell full length on the main cabin floor. I was still in darkness. The silence in the cabin was absolute. I could hear the steersman beyond the chart room scratching a match.

As I got up six bells struck. It was 3 o'clock.

Vail's room was next to the pantry and forward. I felt my way to it and rapped.

"Vail!" I called. "Vail."

His door was open an inch or so. I went in and felt my way to his bunk. I could hear him breathing, a stertorous respiration like that of sleep, and yet unlike. The moment I touched him the sound ceased and did not commence again. I struck a match and bent over him.

He had been almost cut to pieces with an ax.

The match burned out, and I dropped it. I remember mechanically extinguishing the glowing end with my heel, and then straightening to such a sense of horror as I have never felt before or since.

I had been sleeping with my revolver beside me on the pantry floor. Somehow or other I got back there and found it. I made an attempt to find the switch for the cabin lights, and, failing, revolver in hand, I ran into the chart room and up the after companionway. Charlie Jones was at the wheel, and by the light of a lantern I saw that he was bending to the right, peering in at the chart room window. He turned when he heard me.

"What's wrong?" he asked. "I heard a yell a minute ago. Turner on the rampage?" He saw my revolver then, and, letting go the wheel, threw up both his hands. "Turn that gun away, you fool!"

I could hardly speak. I lowered the revolver and gasped: "Call the captain. Vail's been murdered!"

"Good God!" he said. "Who did it?"

He had taken the wheel again, and was bringing the ship back to her course. I was turning sick and dizzy, and I clutched at the railing of the companionway.

"I don't know. Where's the captain?"

"The mate's around." He raised his voice. "Mr. Singleton!" he called.

There was no time to lose, I felt. My nausea had left me. I ran forward to where I could dimly see Singleton looking in my direction.

"Singleton! Quick!" I called. "Bring your revolver."

He came slowly toward me, and in a dozen words I told him what had happened. I saw then that he had been drinking. He reeled against me and seemed at a loss to know what to do.

"Get your revolver," I said, "and wake the captain."

He disappeared into the forward house, to come back a moment later with a revolver. I had got a lantern in the meantime and ran to the forward companionway, which led into the main cabin. Singleton followed me.

Swinging the lantern ahead of me, I led the way down the companionway. Something lay huddled at the foot. I had to step over it to get down. Singleton stood above, on the steps. I stooped and held the lantern close, and we both saw that it was the captain, killed as Vail had been. He was fully dressed except for his coat, and as he lay on his back his cap had been placed over his mutilated face.

I thought I heard something moving behind me in the cabin and wheeled sharply, holding my revolver leveled. The idea had come to me that the crew had mutinied and that every one in the after house had been killed. The idea made me frantic; I thought of the women, of Elsa Lee, and I was ready to kill.

"Where is the light switch?" I demanded of Singleton, who was still on the companion steps, swaying.

"I don't know," he said, and collapsed, sitting huddled just above the captain's body, with his face in his hands.

I saw I need not look to him for help, and I succeeded in turning on the light in the swinging lamp in the center of the cabin. There was no sign of any struggle, and the cabin was empty. I went back to the captain's body and threw a rug over it. Then I reached over and shook Singleton by the arm.

"Do something!" I raved. "Call the crew. Get somebody here, you drunken fool!"

He rose and staggered up the companionway, and I ran to Miss Lee's door. It was closed and locked, as were all the others except Vail's and the one I had broken open. I reached Mr. Turner's door last. It was locked and I got no response to my knock. I remembered that his room and Vail's connected through a bath, and, still holding my revolver leveled, I ran into Vail's room again, this time turning on the light.

A night light was burning in the bathroom and the door beyond was unlocked. I flung it open and stepped in. Turner was lying on his bed, fully dressed, and at first I thought he, too, had been murdered. But he was in a drunken stupor. He sat up, dazed, when I shook him by the arm.

"Mr. Turner!" I cried. "Try to rouse yourself, man! The captain has been murdered, and Mr. Vail!"

He made an effort to sit up, swayed and fell back again. His face was swollen and purplish, his eyes congested. He made an effort to speak, but failed to be intelligible. I had no time to waste. Somewhere on the Ella the murderer was loose. He must be found.

I flung out of Turner's cabin as the crew, gathered from the forecastle and from the decks, crowded down the forward companionway. I ran my eye over them. Every man was there, Singleton below by the captain's body, the crew, silent and horror struck, grouped on the steps; Clarke, McNamara, Burns, Oleson and Adams. Behind the crew, Charlie Jones had left the wheel and stood peering down until sharply ordered back. Williams, with a bandage on his head, and Tom, the mulatto cook, were in the group.

I stood, revolver in hand, staring at the men. Among them, I felt sure, was the murderer. But which one? All were equally pale, equally terrified.

"Boys," I said, "Mr. Vail and your captain have been murdered. The murderer must be on the ship—one of ourselves." There was a murmur at that. "Mr. Singleton, I suggest that these men stay together in a body and that no one be allowed to go below until all have been searched and all weapons taken from them."

Singleton had dropped into a chair and sat with his face buried in his hands, his back to the captain's body. He looked up without moving, and his face was gray.

"All right," he said. "Do as you like. I'm sick."

After the men had gone I knocked at Mrs. Turner's door. It was some time before she roused. When she answered her voice was startled.

"What is it?"

"It's Leslie, Mrs. Turner. Will you come to the door?"

"What is wrong?"

I told her as gently as I could. I thought she would faint, but she pulled herself together and, leaving the door, went into her sister's room next. I heard Miss Lee's low cry of horror, and almost immediately the two women came to the doorway.

"Have you seen Mr. Turner?" Miss Lee demanded.

"Just now."

"Call the maids, Leslie," she said quietly.

I went the length of the cabin and into the chart room. The maids' room was here, on the port side and thwart of Mrs. Turner's and Miss Lee's rooms. It had one door only and two small barred windows, one above each of the two bunks. I knocked at the maids' door and, finding it unlocked, opened it an inch or so.

"Karen!" I called—and, receiving no answer, "Mrs. Sloane!" (the stewardess).

I opened the door wide and glanced in. Karen Hansen, the maid, was on the floor—dead. The stewardess, collapse from terror, was in her bunk, uninjured.

I went to the after companionway and called up to the men to send the first mate down, but Burns came instead.

"Singleton's sick," he explained. "He's up there in a corner, with Oleson and McNamara holding him."

"Burns," I said cautiously, "I've found another."

"God! Not one of the women?"

"One of the maids—Karen."

Burns was a young fellow about my own age, and to this point he had stood up well. But he had been having a sort of flirtation with the girl, and I saw him go sick with horror. He wanted to see her, when he had got command of himself, but I would not let him enter the room. He stood outside, while I went in and carried out the stewardess, who was coming to and moaning. I took her forward and told the three women there what I had found.

"Don't let any one in," I said. "I'll put a guard at the two companionways, and we'll let no one down. But—keep the door locked also."

Dawn was coming as I joined the crew, huddled around the wheel. There were nine men, counting Singleton. But Singleton hardly counted. He was in a state of profound mental and physical collapse. The Ella was without an accredited officer, and, for lack of orders to the contrary, the helmsman—McNamara now—was holding her to her course. Burns had taken Schwartz's place as second mate, but the situation was clearly beyond him. Turner's condition was known and frankly discussed. It was clear that, for a time at least, we would have to get along without him.

Charlie Jones, always an influence among the men, voiced the situation as we all stood together in the chill morning air.

"What we want to do, boys," he said, "is to make for the nearest port. This here is a police matter."

"And a hanging matter," some one else put in.

"And, what's more," Charlie Jones went on, "I'm for putting Leslie here in charge—for now, anyhow. That's agreeable to you, is it, Burns?"

"But I don't know anything about a ship," I objected. "I'm willing enough, but I'm not competent."

I believe the thing had been discussed before I went up, for McNamara spoke up from the wheel.

"We'll manage that somehow or other, Leslie," he said. "We want somebody to take charge, somebody with a head, that's all. And since you ain't, in a manner of speaking, been one of us, nobody's feelings can be hurt. Ain't that it, boys?"

"That, and a matter of brains," said Burns.

"But Singleton?" I glanced aft.

"Singleton is going in irons," was the reply I got.

CHAPTER V.

We Find the Ax.

THE light was stronger now, and I could see their faces. It was clear that the crew or a majority of the crew believed him guilty and that as far as Singleton was concerned my authority did not exist.

"All right," I said. "I'll do the best I can. First of all, I want every man to give up his weapons. Burns!"

"Aye, aye."

"Go over each man. Leave them their pocket knives. Take everything else."

The men lined up. The situation was tense, horrible, so that the miscellaneous articles from their pockets—knives, keys, plugs of chewing tobacco and here and there among the foreign ones small combs for beard and mustache—unexpectedly brought to light, caused a smile of pure reaction.

I went over to Singleton and put my hand on his shoulder.

"I'm sorry, Mr. Singleton," I said, "but I'll have to ask you for your revolver."

Without looking at me he drew it from his hip pocket and held it out. I took it. It was loaded.

"It's out of order," he said briefly. "If it had been working right I wouldn't be here."

I slid his revolver into my pocket and went back to the men. Counting Williams and the cook and myself, there were nine of us. The cook I counted out, ordering him to go to the galley and prepare breakfast. The eight that were left I divided into two watches, Burns taking one and I the other. On Burns' watch were Clarke, McNamara and Williams, on mine Oleson, Adams and Charlie Jones.

It was two bells, or 5 o'clock. Burns struck the gong sharply as an indication that order, of a sort, had been restored. The rising sun was gleaming on the sails; the gray surface of the sea was rippling under the morning breeze. From the galley a thin stream of smoke was rising. Some of the horror of the night went with the darkness, but the thought of what waited in the cabin below was on us all.

I suggested another attempt to rouse Mr. Turner, and Burns and Clarke went below. They came back in ten minutes reporting no change in Turner's condition. There was open grumbling among the men at the situation, but we were helpless. Burns and I decided to go on as if Turner were not on board, until he was in condition to take hold.

We thought it best to bring up the bodies while all the crew was on duty, and then to take up the watches. I arranged to have one man constantly on guard in the after house—a difficult matter where all were under suspicion. Burns suggested Charlie Jones as probably the most reliable, and I gave him the revolver I had taken from Singleton. It was useless, but it made at least a show of authority. The rest of the crew, except Oleson, on guard over the mate, was detailed to assist in carrying up the three bodies. Williams was taken along to get sheets from the linen room.

We brought the captain up first, laying him on a sheet on the deck and folding the edges over him. It was terrible work. Even I, fresh from a medical college, grew nauseated over it. He was heavy. It was slow work getting him up. Vail we brought up in the sheets from his bunk. Of the three he was the most mutilated. The maid, Karen, showed only one injury, a smashing blow on the head, probably from the head of the ax, for ax it had been beyond a doubt.

At three bells the cook brought coffee and some of the men took it. I tried to swallow, but it choked me.

I find it hard to recall calmly the events of that morning: the three still and shrouded figures, prone on deck; the crew, bareheaded, standing around, eying each other stealthily, with pale ready to leap free and grip each of them by the throat; the grim determination, the reason for which I did not yet know, to put the first mate in irons, and over all, the clear sunrise of an August morning on the ocean, rain and decks gleaming, an odor of coffee in the air, the joyous lift and [illegible] of the bowsprit as the Ella, headed back on her course, seemed to make for home like a nag for the stable.

Surely none of these men, some weeping, all grieving, could be the fiend who had committed the crimes. One by one, I looked in their faces—at Burns, youngest member of the crew, a blue eyed, sandy haired Scot; at Clarke and Adams and Charlie Jones, old in the service of the Turner line; at McNamara, a shrewd little Irishman; at Oleson the Swede. And, in spite of myself, I could not help comparing them with the heavy shouldered, sodden faced man below in his cabin, the owner of the ship.

One explanation came to me, and I leaped at it—the possibility of a stowaway hidden in the hold, some maniacal fugitive who had found in the little cargo boat's empty hull ample room to hide. The men, too, seized at the idea. One and all volunteered for what might prove to be a dangerous service.

I chose Charlie Jones and Clarke as being most familiar with the ship, and we went down into the hold. Clarke carried a lantern. Charlie Jones held Singleton's broken revolver. I carried a belaying pin. But, although we searched every foot of space, we found nothing. The formaldehyde with which Turner had fumigated the ship clung here tenaciously, and, mixed with the odors of bilge water and the indescribable heavy smells left by tropical cargoes, made me dizzy and ill.

We were stumbling along, Clarke with the lantern, I next and Charlie Jones behind, on our way to the ladder again, when I received a stunning blow on the back of the head. I turned dizzy, expecting nothing less than sudden death, when it developed that Jones, having stumbled over a loose plank, had fallen forward, the revolver in his outstretched hand striking my head.

He picked himself up sheepishly, and we went on. But so unnerved was I by this fresh shock that it was a moment or two before I could essay the ladder.

Burns was waiting at the hatchway, peering down. Beside him on the deck lay a blood stained ax.

Elsa Lee, on hearing the story of Henrietta Sloane, had gone to the maids' cabin and had found it where it had been flung into the berth of the stewardess.

But, after all, the story of Henrietta Sloane only added to the mystery. She told it to me, sitting propped in a chair in Mrs. Johns' room, her face white, her lips dry and twitching. The crew was making such breakfast as they could on deck, and Mr. Turner was still in a stupor in his room across the main cabin. The four women, drawn together in their distress, were huddled in the center of the room, touching hands now and then, as if finding comfort in contact, and reassurance.

"I went to bed early," said the stewardess, "about 10 o'clock, I think. Karen had not come down; I wakened when the watch changed. It was hot, and the window from our room to the deck was open. There is a curtain over it to keep the helmsman from looking in—it is close to the wheel. The bell, striking every half hour, does not waken me any more, although it did at first. It is just outside the window, but I heard the watch change. I heard eight bells struck and the lookout man on the forecastle head call 'All's well!'

"I sat up and turned on the lights. Karen had not come down, and I was alarmed. She had been—had been flirting a little with one of the sailors, and I had warned her that it would not do. She'd be found out and get into trouble.

"The only way to reach our cabin was through the chart room, and when I opened the door an inch or two I saw why Karen had not come down. Mr. Turner and Mr. Singleton were sitting there. They were"— She hesitated.

"Please go on," said Mrs. Turner. "They were drinking?"

"Yes, Mrs. Turner, and Mr. Vail was there too. He was saying that the captain would come down and there would be more trouble. I shut the door and stood just inside listening. Mr. Singleton said he hoped the captain would come; that he and Mr. Turner only wanted a chance to get at him."

Miss Lee leaned forward and mean-closed door, may hold death in its most terrible form."

"You are right, of course. Will you wait outside? I can dress and be ready in five minutes."

I went into the main cabin, now bright with the morning sun, which streamed down the forward companionway. The door to Vail's room across was open, and Williams, working in nervous haste, was putting it in order. Walking up and down, his shrewd eyes keenly alert, Charlie Jones was on guard, revolver in hand. He came over to me at once.

"Turner is moving in there," he said, jerking his thumb toward the forward cabin. "What are you going to do—let a drunken sot like that give us orders and bang us with a belaying pin when we don't please him?"

"He is the owner. But one thing we can do, Jones. We can keep him from more liquor. Williams!"

He came out more dead than alive.

"Williams," I said sternly, "I give you an hour to get rid of every ounce of liquor on the Ella. Remember, not a bottle is to be saved."

"But Mistah Turner"—

"I'll answer to Mr. Turner. Get it overboard before he gets around."

WARSAW PREDICTS HEAVY FIGHTING ON FRONTIER

In Rout of Turkish Army Persians Failed to Support Enver Pasha; Egyptian Situation Relieved

By FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY.

Petrograd, Jan. 7.—Another great battle for the possession of Mlawa is developing, according to official dispatches from Warsaw. Grand Duke Nicholas is sending heavy reinforcements to strengthen the Russian army facing the Germans around Mlawa. (Mlawa is in Poland, near the East Prussian frontier,) sixty miles north of Warsaw. It was used as the base for one of the German armies used by Field Marshal Von Hindenburg in his second drive against Warsaw.

The Army Messenger in its summary of the present situation declares that the Russian troops at every point in Poland, East Prussia, Galicia and Transcaucasia are in better position now than they have been for weeks.

At some points along the front in Bukowina the Russian artillery is engaged in shelling the Austrian trenches.

This city is decorated in honor of the great Russian victory over Enver Pasha's Turkish army in Transcaucasia. Every report that comes from Tiflis emphasis the importance of the Russian victory there. The Turkish army has been routed and it is estimated that the invaders lost at least 50,000 men. Two Turkish army corps were shot to pieces. The Turks lost the greater amount of their war material. Thousands of Turkish troops, lacking food and warm clothing are freezing to death in the Mountain passes near Sarikamish.

Eenver Pasha counted upon the sympathies of the natives to help his Turkish army, but in this he counted without his host. For ten days the Turks and Russians struggled in the snow filled passes of the mountains around Sarikamishc, ten thousand feet above the sea level, before the Russian reinforcements decided the issue.

It is believed here that the overthrow of the Turks at Sarikamisch and Ardahan puts an end to the Turkish menace against Egypt and will result in the speedy subjugation of the Ottoman Empire. The defeat of the Turks precludes the possibility of weakening the Russian armies around Warsaw and in Hungary. On account of the condition of the territory the Turks had to rely upon human carriers for the transportation of supplies. One carrier was allotted to every five soldiers.

Tribute is paid to the bravery of the Turks in Tiflis dispatches. The Ottoman troops advanced against the Russian fire with supreme heroism, and piles of slain were left upon the field.

TURKKS AND PERSIANS DRIVE BACK RUSSIANS

Special to The Evening Times

Constantinople, Jan. 7.—It is officially announced that the Turkish army has occupied Crumia. The statement follows:

"Our advanced troops in the direction of Bajirgue have occupied Urmia. An indecisive battle between a Russian fleet and Turkish cruisers has taken place. The Russians sank an Italian merchantman flying the Italian flag."

Note—If the Urmia referred to in the foregoing dispatch is the Persian city of that name, it shows that the Turks have carried out their recent threat to invade that section of Persia known as the "Russian sphere of influence.")

Official dispatches also mention fighting in Persia in which Persian troops allied themselves with the Turks in attacks upon the Russians. These official dispatches say: "During the fighting near Aserbeidjan (Persia), the Turks, assisted by Persians, met 4,000 Russians, including 300 Cossacks, with artillery, in the vicinity of Mindoab. The Russians were decisively beaten, losing more than 200 in killed. The Turks and Persians lost six killed and only a few wounded. In other fights, near Urza and near Bagkirkhan, batches of Russians were entrapped and 100 were killed. As the result of these reverses, the morale of the Russian troops has been broken."

JOFFRE INVADES ALSACE WITH 100,000 TROOPS

By FRANKLIN P. MERRICK.

Paris, Jan. 7.—General Joseph Joffre, the French commander-in-chief, has thrown an army of 100,000 men into Upper Alsace, and Lorraine in a vigorous drive against the German defenders. Three French columns are marching against Muelhausen.

Bad weather is prevailing along the Aisne and in the Argonne, but despite the rain and mud, infantry fighting in the northern part of the Argonne region for trenches continues.

The French general staff, in a special order, has paid a high compliment to the valor of the foreign troops, especially the Italians, who are fighting with the French. There are some Americans in the ranks of the French forces that are opposing the Germans in that quarter.

Amsterdam, Jan. 7.—The German newspaper Deutsche Zeitung publishes a dispatch to the effect that Japan intends to send a diplomatic envoy to the Vatican.

England recently sent an ambassador to the Vatican for the first time in centuries.

INVESTIGATIONS BEGIN IN N. Y.

Eight of Them on the Way; Wounded Will All Live; Whitman Getting Busy

New York, Jan. 7.—With eight investigations under way, or to be started today, to determine responsibility for the subway accident that occurred yesterday, cost one life, and caused more than 700 persons to be injured and brought about the worst paralysis of traffic in the city's history, the Interborough this morning resumed its regular schedule.

Early today there were still 77 victims of the disaster in the hospitals, all doing well and it was said no one was expected to die. Most of them will be discharged today.

The regular local service in the tunnel was not resumed until 10.30 last night. It was the longest tie up in the subway since it opened in 1903 and the only time in its history that it was completely out of commission for almost a whole day.

The inquiries into the accident are undertaken under the supervision of the following:

Governor Whitman, District Attorney Charles A. Perkins, the Public Service Commission, Mayor Mitchel, Coroner Riordan, Police Commissioner Woods, Fire Commissioner Adamson, the Interborough Rapid Transit company.

The woman who lost her life was not identified for several hours. She was Miss Ellen Grady, 39 years old, of the Bronx.

There are various theories as to the cause of the trouble, but nothing has been definitely established. President Shonts of the Interborough said: "We all know what happened but none of us know why or how it happened, and perhaps never will."

District Attorney Perkins is trying to find out, among other things, if there was any negligible delay among subway employes in getting passengers out of the subway after the electric system had broken down.

SUITS AGAINST RAILOAD.

Loc Angeles, Cal., Jan. 7.—Fifty million dollars is involved in three civil suits filed here today by the Department of Justice against the Southern Pacificv railway and a half dozen subsidiary oil corporations.

These suits involve the title to 1,000 acres of land in Kern county.

More than 100 operating oil wells are on the property involved. The government asks that a receiver be appointed to handle the output of the wells until the title to the property has been fully decided by the courts.

It is claimed by the railroad that the issue raised by the government has been practically settled in the suit brought five years ago by Edward Burke and decided against him recently by the U. S. Supreme Court.

State Department Forwards Papers

Washington, Jan. 7—Strong representations to the British government asking for the punishment of the three Canadian troopers who killed Walter Smith and wounded Charles Dorsch, American gunners at Ft. Erie Ontario and requesting that adequate compensation be made to the families of the men, today were prepared at the State Department and will be forwarded to the British Ambassador for transmission to his government.

Must Carry Cargos On British Ships

Washington, Jan. 7.—The British government today informed the State Department that it will lift the embargo on Australian wool exports to the United States on condition that the cargoes be carried on British ships.

VILLA TROOPS DEFEATED.

Vera Cruz, Jan. 7.—The Carranza government announces that General Villa's troops have been defeated in Southern Coahuila by followers of General Carranza and that the Carranzaistas have occupied Torreon.
